Between the hours of 5 and 10:30 p.m., the animals in the clinic are monitored by five veterinary medical students, who are the first to see emergency cases. Eight students live above the clinic. After 10:30, one student remains on-call for emergency trauma

"There's a lot of people just waiting for the phone to ring," Garner said, "and it doesn't ring that often."

(Dog's owner)-"...I thought his leg might be broken."

The emergency facility at the veterinary medicine complex, unlike the services provided during the day, integrates small and large animals. After students see the emergency case, assess its severity, and begin preliminary treatment, a clinician is called.

Four kinds of veterinarians are on-call: A small animal clinician, a small animal surgeon, and large animal clinician, and a field service clinician (for animals that cannot be brought to the hospital).

Garner said one of the most common emergencies is dogs and cats being hit by cars. Other frequent cases are animals that experience sudden vomiting, incidences of colic, and births requiring Cesearean sections.

Emergency veterinary medicine is very much like emergency medicine for human beings. In trauma cases, the animal must be stabilized-the "ABCs" in human medicine, (Airway, Breathing and Circulation): i.e. blood pressure, heart rate-by administering fluids and anti-shock, or cortisone-base drugs (Fortney)-"Sorry I took so long. They're not sure they want to spend that much. She wanted to, but he wasn't sure."

Dr. Jacob Mosier, head of the Department of Surgery and Medicine, said when many people bring animals in, their first reaction is to tell the veterinarian to "spare no expense." However, he said, many don't realize what kind of expense that may en-

Animals are different from humans in that they walk on all fours. A common occurence when an animal has been hit by a car is what is called a "diaphramatic hernia"-a situation in humans which wouldn't necessarily be life-threatening. But in animals, when the diaphram is punctured, the intestines can advance into the thoracic cavity, decreasing the respiratory capacity.

With this Cockapoo, such was the case. Fortney roughly estimated the cost of treating the animal: About $30 for the antishock treatment and drugs, about $100 for surgery to correct the leg fracture and Xrays to begin with, and an additional surgical cost for repairing the diaphram, and chest X-rays.

Barr commented: "We're so used to doing everything we can, it's hard for us to put a price-tag on it."

Fortney qualified: "But the people have to put a price-tag on it.

And that's the only way I've tried to get them excited about the lungs is by saying, 'yes, he has a broken leg, but that's the least of our worries'.

"I never say he's not going to die of a broken leg, but that's in essence what you're saying. A broken leg isn't going to kill him.

"Oh, we get them like this (Cockapoo) and they want to know can we vaccinate them, check them for worms..."

Carlin signs search bill; law defines new guidelines other states Wednesday in limiting strip searches by police agencies as Gov. John Carlin signed a bill into law establishing guidelines to control their use.

The law, which takes effect July 1, more clearly defines for law enforcement officers the conditions under which strip and body cavity searches may be performed on people suspected of violating the law.

It was among 22 bills passed by the Legislature before it recessed on April 9, and which the governor signed Wednesday.

The bill relating to strip and body cavity searches sets these conditions:

-Strip searches: Probable cause must exist that the person to be searched is concealing a weapon or a controlled substance (drug). The searches must be conducted by persons of the same sex as the suspected offender and performed in private, unless the person being searched waives his or her right of privacy. A report on reason for the search and the result must be filed afterward.

-Cavity searches: They can be performed only with a search warrant, and must be performed by a licensed physician or registered nurse, who are immune from civil or criminal liability for conducting the search if it is performed in a reasonable manner using accepted medical practices.

Those searched in violation of the law may sue for actual and punitive damages, plus attorneys' fees, but also can be assessed lawyers' and court costs if a judge determines their suits to be frivilous or brought in bad faith.

Concerns that too many police departments strip search people accused of only minor crimes have prompted several states, including Missouri, Illinois, Michigan and Connecticut, to pass laws limiting the

'Peppermint Soda' displays good taste

Editor's note: "Peppermint Soda" will be shown at 3:30 today in the Union Little Theatre and at 7 in Forum Hall.

By JIM MELIZA Collegian Reviewer

In the recent past we have seen numerous attempts to recreate the adolescent experience. Such attempts include: "American Graffitti"; "Breaking Away"; "My Bodyguard"; and "Fame." All of these films deal with the male image.

Diane Kurgs, however, has explored her past to bring us "Peppermint Soda," a story about two girls during the school year of 1963-64.

Collegian review

The wonderful aspect of "Peppermint Soda" is the detail that Kurgs has included. This careful detail gives the film an air of believability. It is refreshing to see this type of nostalgia presented without the sugary coating of sentimentalism.

Anne, marvelously portrayed by Eleanore Klarwein, is 13 and must suffer the pains that accompany her awkward age. Her mother has forbidden her to wear pantyhose even though "all the other girls do." She feels insignificant because she hasn't had her first period, and pretends to experience menstrual cramps. She is also the youngest daughter in the family, and must live with that stigma.

Frederique (Odile Michel) is Anne's older sister. At the age of 15 she is allowed to date, but not to fall in love. She also develops a social and political awareness. Being Jewish in a predominantly anti-semetic atmosphere leads to complications. Once she becomes politically motivated, she is ostracized by her friends.

"Peppermint Soda" doesn't reach out and grab you by making you laugh continually. Nor does it bludgeon you with special effects. Instead, it caresses viewers by avoiding those spectacular inventions.

Perhaps the most pleasant thing to consider about this movie is that it is Kurgs first attempt. She is currently at work on a sequel called "Molotov Cocktail," in which Anne is thrust into the student unrest in France during 1968. If her second film is as enjoyable as her first, then it is sure to be a

Goedert powerhouse for Wildcat baseball

By RON BROWN Collegian Reporter

A phone call to a coach in the shower was the possible beginning to Joe Goedert's college baseball career.

After playing baseball in his hometown of Hastings, Neb., Goedert moved to Cloud County Community College in Concordia.

Joe Goedert

He was a fixture in the Thunderbird lineup both years, playing every game on the schedule and hitting .510 as a freshman and .476 as a sophomore.

But the way Goedert got to the Thunderbird team, which later led to him coming to K-State, was different—real different. The long story began when he and his parents made a trip to El Dorado to visit Butler County Community College, where the coach there had offered him a scholarship. On the trip back home the Goederts stopped to eat in Concordia.

That's when they found out about the community college there. After talking to a couple of ladies in the restaurant, the Goederts went to the college, which was deserted in the evening.

THERE THEY MET only a janitor, who called the baseball coach, who was home in the shower. The coach then made the trip to the college, where he made the same offer as Butler County. Because Concordia was "closer to home," Goedert signed.

After finishing his eligibility at Cloud

After finishing his eligibility at Cloud County, Goedert's "contacts" were responsible for getting him to come to K-State. Goedert said the Cloud County athletic director knew Wildcat coach Dave Baker from their college days at K-State. Baker went to Concordia and then offered Goedert a scholarship to play here.

And since he has been here, Goedert has made quite a showing.

So far this season, he is hitting a torrid .405. When not on offense Goedert occupies first base, a position he has played in all 42 games.

HE DOESN'T PLAY it too badly, either. Along with his impressive offensive statistics, Goedert has committed only six errors while handling 296 chances. Those figures add up to a .980 fielding percentage, tops among K-State regulars.

"Joe has played consistent baseball for us all year," Baker said. "He has done a good

King's 31 fuels Kansas City win; Boston knots series behind Bird

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Power for- remaining. ward Reggie King poured in 31 points and Phil Ford, in only his second game since Feb. 22, contributed key points to lead Kansas City to an 88-79 romp over Houston Wednesday night that squared their NBA Western Conference Championship series at one game apiece.

Trailing by one point at halftime despite 21 points from King, Kansas City bolted to a 61-54 advantage by outscoring the Rockets 14-6 the first six minutes of the third quarter. Houston, which won the first game of the series Tuesday night, 97-78, never got closer than five points in the final period.

After Tom Henderson's free throw at the 4:47 mark of the third period trimmed Houston's deficit to two points at 61-59, the Rockets didn't score in the period until Moses Malone hit two free throws with no time left, making it 68-61 in Kansas City's FORD, WHO WENT out with an eye injury in February and didn't play again until the series opener Tuesday night, scored three points, dished out an assist that John Lambert turned into a three-point play and stole the ball from Henderson during the final five minutes of the third quarter while Kansas City took control.

Malone, who scored 29 points Tuesday night, had only 18 points.

King scored 12 of Kansas City's 14 points during one stretch from late in the second quarter to midway through the third and kept the Kings in control throughout the fourth period.

Game 3 of the best-of-seven series will be played Friday night in Houston and Game 5 is scheduled for Sunday on the Rockets' own job for us defensively and, of course, he's leading the team in hitting."

But Goedert has had to overcome a few baracades after making the switch from junior college to major college baseball. The transition was gradual, he said, and the hardest thing to adjust to was the difference in pitching.

"Control is the main thing," Goedert said. He said now he is facing pitchers with a variety of pitches, including "fastballs that move."

GOEDERT ALSO thinks highly of Big 8 pitchers, primarily because of those he has

"Big 8 pitching is the best," he said. He mentioned one name in particular, Missouri's Tom Heckman.

But despite the quality pitching Goedert has faced, he has managed to maintain lofty statistics, and he is depending on those numbers to attract some major league scouts because he would like to continue playing the sport he loves

"I suppose anybody that plays baseball has that goal," Goedert said. "If I get drafted that would be great."

So far, he has been approached by scouts from the St. Louis Cardinals and the Chicago Cubs.

Scott Wedman added 18 points for the Kings and Ernie Grunfeld, 14.

The Rockets took the lead at 12-11 with a bucket by Paultz early in the first quarter and the Kings did not regain the lead until King hit two unanswered buckets to make it 45-44 with 1:35 left in the half.

Celtics 118, 76ers 99

BOSTON (AP) - Larry Bird scored 23 of his team-high 34 points in the first half as the Boston Celtics took command early and breezed to a 118-99 triumph over the Philadelphia 76ers Wednesday night, tying their National Basketball Association playoff series at one victory apiece.

The third game of the best-of-seven Eastern Conference finals will be played in Philadelphia Friday night. The 76ers won the opener 105-104 Tuesday night to take away Boston's home court advantage.

The Celtics led all the way, scoring the game's first eight points and never looking

Bird and Nate Archibald scored 10 points apiece in the first quarter, which ended with Boston in front 30-22. The Celtics had also led by eight points after the opening period Tuesday night, but this time, instead of letting Philadelphia climb back into contention, Boston buried the 76ers with a 36point second quarter to lead 66-47 at half-

THE CRUCIAL SPURT came late in the period when Philadelphia was held scoreless for 3:40 while Boston reeled off 14 straight points. Bird, M.L. Carr and Robert Parish had four points apiece as the Celtics stretched a 45-41 lead into a commanding 18point advantage.

Bird hit on 10 of 12 shots in the first half, scored 23 points and grabbed 11 rebounds as the dominant figure on the court. Philadelphia was called for three technical fouls in the second quarter, including one for playing a zone defense, and Archibald converted all three.

The Celtics led by as many as 25 points in the third quarter and were never threatened, with Philaelphia coming no closer than 14 points in the final period. Bird received a standing ovation from the capacity crowd of 15,320 at Boston Garden when he left the lineup with four minutes remaining, and he acknowledged their cheers by waving a towel from the bench.

Stronger offense key to football's success

By ALLEN LEIKER Sports Editor

Jim Dickey realizes the good college football teams across the country—the ones which go to bowl games and are ranked in the top 10 year in and year out—are usually built around solid, dependable defenses.

But the K-State coach also knows it takes points to win. And there were a lot of times during last year's 3-8 season that the Wildcats didn't score enough points to win.

Three times in 1980 Dickey saw goose eggs on K-State's side of the scoreboard at the conclusion of a game. Another time it managed only a field goal. And in two other games the Wildcats could only score seven and eight points.

Not surprisingly, K-State lost all those games. And not surprisingly, Dickey, whose team concludes spring drills Saturday with the annual Purple-White scrimmage, doesn't want it to happen—at least not that way—anymore.

"I'm tired of being good on defense and not on offense," said Dickey after the Wildcats' practice Wednesday. "I want to be good on offense for awhile. I want to score some points.

Don't misinterpret the K-State coach. He doesn't want to be on the wrong end of 42-41 and 35-31 games next year, either. It's just that several of his top defensive players from a year ago—guys like James Walker, Steve Clark and Monte Bennett—were lost to graduation, and the team's experience this year lies within the offense.

"Last year we felt we were in a lot of games because of our defense," Dickey said. "On offense we were playing a lot of young people, kids who had been here only a year or two. But this year we'll have some guys who have been here four years, guys with some experience.

I'm not so sure a year older means a year better, but we got a lot of people back (on offense) and I do think it will make a difference."

Because of the offense's experience, Dickey hasn't been surprised with what he's seen this spring.

"It's a lot different this year," he said.
"Last year the defense dominated the spring. This year the offense is. And this year I'm more worried about the defense."

Cat netters face Sooners

The K-State men's tennis team, fresh from a 6-3 win over Baker, will compete in the Oklahoma Tournament today and Friday.

Action today will pit Wildcat netters against the University of Oklahoma.

"Oklahoma isn't far behind Oklahoma State, which is the No. 1 team in the Big 8," coach Steve Snodgrass said. "It will be very tough."

Friday's play will have K-State up against Iowa State, which defeated the squad 6-3 in the K-State Invitational last fall.

"Iowa State is stronger than usual," Snodgrass said. "They beat Nebraska 6-3 and Nebraska beat us 6-3. But if we play good tennis we can play with them."

Steve Webb will replace Jeff Henderson at No. 1 singles, while Henderson moves to No. 2. Gary Hassenflu remains at No. 3 with Dave Krizman playing No. 4. Matt Westfall will see action at No. 5 with Dan Forester at Expressing concern in doubles because of the loss of the two top teams to Baker, Snodgrass paired up different combinations for competition in Norman.

Hassenflu and Krizman will play No. 1 doubles with Henderson and Goss or Forester at No. 2. Webb and Westfall will compete in the No. 3 spot.

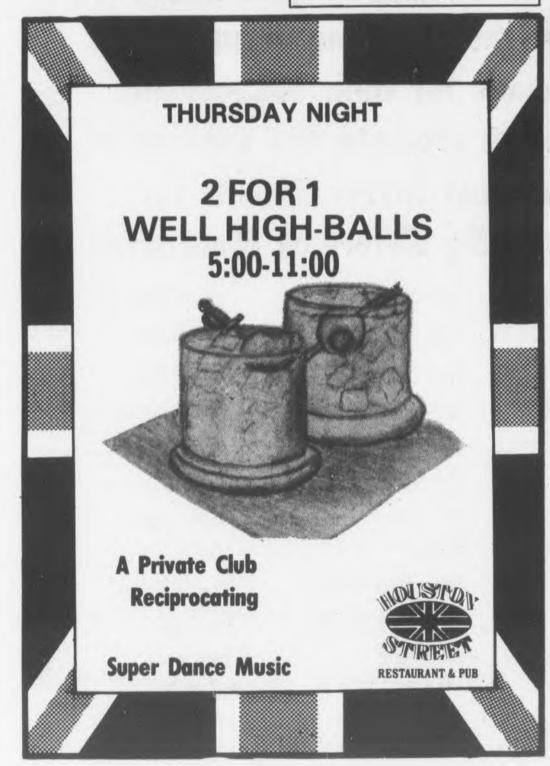

"I think everyone's going to have to keep more balls in play to force the opponent to error rather than have us make the errors," Snodgrass said, describing a key factor in winning the tournament.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Len Barker pitched a seven-hitter and Mike Hargrove blasted a two-run double as the Cleveland Indians downed the Kansas City Royals 4-0 Wednesday night for a sweep of their threegame series.

The Indians scored four runs on five hits in the seventh inning, sending Dennis Leonard, 1-2, to the showers.

Assassination commentary sparks threats

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Dominic Manno made a mistake: He wished, in public, on paper, for the death of the president of the United States. Now he worries that someone may be wishing the same for him.

"It's a sobering thought. There are 20 people out there that want me dead," the 23year-old University of Pennsylvania senior said. He was discussing the threats he has received since the appearance in print of his college newspaper column commenting on the assassination attempt on President Reagan.

"You don't worry about the people who call. It's the people that don't call. They worry you," he said, shaking a head framed by curly black hair and a beard.

IN THE WEEKLY column he wrote for The Daily Pennsylvanian's op-ed page, Manno said he set out to portray the national outpouring of grief and horror over the Reagan attack as "somewhat hypocritical" when so many others suffer violence every

"When the news first broke with the report that Reagan had not been wounded, my first reaction was, "Too bad he missed. That's the result of sending an amateur to do a professional job," Manno wrote in the April 1 edition. "Then with the news that he had been shot, my reaction had changed to, 'I hope he dies."

Later in the column, Manno suggested some people may be so frustrated with "A lot of people feel that way about the system," he concluded. "Including me."

THE WORDS seemed to pain him as he recalled the chain of events in an interview. "It was a first reaction. It was a gut reaction to the news and it wasn't well thought out or rational," he said.

"Later, I was surprised I ever felt that way. I let my hatred for Ronald Reagan the politician overwhelm my respect for the man, which everyone deserves."

Coming so soon after the March 30 attempt on Reagan's life, the words set off a blast of criticism from readers. The fallout is still raining down on him, his family and the university.

Manno knew something was amiss when he arrived at the newspaper office the afternoon of April 1.

"The phones were ringing off the hook, which is unusual at that time of day," he said. "The callers would say something and then hang up. A lot of them were obstandard scene-your impossible anatomical suggestions."

THEN, JUST hours after the column appeared, two Secret Service agents appeared at the offices of the 96-year-old, five-day-a-week paper. They told Manno they election results that they use bullets to were checking his background and wanted to know whether he was a person who would act out violent ideas. When they left, they said they'd be talking to the U.S. attorney.

"Scenes from bad prison movies flashed through my head," Manno said.

Callers then began reaching Manno's parents at their south Philadelphia home. It was their first news of their son's column.

"What the hell did you write?" asked Manno's mother, Elizabeth, when she finally got through to the paper. She was "pretty shook up" by the phone calls, which her husband, Francis, described as abusive: "They'd say 'Bang, bang, you're dead' or 'Bang, bang, you're next." Two weeks after the column, she went into the hospital for a day of blood pressure tests.

WITHIN DAYS, Manno and his editors were deluged with interview requests. The column was condemned in Philadelphia newspaper editorials and letters to the editor. Newsweek magazine reported this week that first lady Nancy Reagan was so enraged by Manno's death wish for her husband that she asked Attorney General William French Smith whether the student could be punished. The White House has denied she made any request for prosecution.

By the weekend, Manno's uncle, also named Dominic Manno, had changed to an telephone number. Manno's younger brother was taunted for being related to "a communist."

Later, Penn president Sheldon Hackney issued a statement calling Manno's ideas. "abhorrent" but affirming his right to express such opinions in a free society. No charges were filed against Manno, but the Secret Service told him his name will be on file five years.

THE SCHOOL is taking no action against Manno or the paper, but has informally expressed its regrets to the administration in Washington, said Jim Spady, an assistant to Hackney.

The Daily Pennsylvanian was not so lenient. The student board of directors stripped Manno of his column and he resigned from the paper. The board also suspended for one week the supervisor who allowed Manno's remarks into print and fired a reporter who tipped a city newspaper about the Secret Service investigation. Two other writers quit the paper in protest.

A political science major who had longed to be a reporter. Manno now worries that he may have ruined his chances for a career in journalism.

Weighed against that possibility, he finds himself a local celebrity. A cab driver begged his autograph. A campus seminar was based on his column. And a T-shirt at Penn's annual spring festival said, "Dom Manno for President.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A critic of atomic power introduced a study Wednesday challenging arguments that electricity from nuclear power plants is cheaper than from coal-fired plants.

Charles Komanoff said electricity from coal-fueled plants opened in the late 1980s will be 22 percent less expensive than from nuclear plants put into production at the same time.

An industry group, the Atomic Industrial Forum, disputed the study.

Don Winston, a spokesman for the group, said it has not yet completely analyzed Komanoff's 323-page book-"Power Plant their higher construction costs. Cost Escalation"-but it believes his information was thrown off by assuming too much generating capacity for coal plants and not enough for nuclear plants.

A MAJOR ARGUMENT for nuclear plants is that they make cheaper electricity than coal plants because their fuel costs are cheaper.

Komanoff maintains, however, that safety requirements for nuclear plants made their construction so costly that lower fuel costs once operations begin will not outweigh

He said at a news conference that his analysis showed the costs of making nuclear plants safe would continue to grow because the increasing number of plants will reveal more problems.

"The process of nuclear expansion...creates the objective evidence that the nuclear process still has unresolved safety issues," Komanoff said.

He said the study is the first full analysis of all U.S. nuclear plants built in 1971-78 and of all coal plants built in 1972-77.

EVEN WITH HIGHER cost for coal plants from tough air-pollution laws, he said, nuclear construction grew more expensive. His study showed nuclear plants built in 1971 to be 5 percent more costly than coal plants, but that those built in 1978 were 50 percent more expensive.

He said this led him to conclude nuclear plants completed after 1988 will be 75 percent more expensive to build than coal-fired

Considering the costs of construction, interest, operation and decommissioning old installations, nuclear plants will make power costing $4.78 per kilowatt hour over a 30-year lifespan, he said.

Similar considerations show coal-fired power plants will produce electricity for $3.93 per kilowatt hour, or 22 percent less, he

KOMANOFF SAID this did not account for safety costs growing out of rules resulting from the Three-Mile Island accident in Pennsylvania, the worst in the history of commercial nuclear development. A study done by a consultant to the Commonwealth Edison Co., a major Midwestern utility, gives nuclear power a decided cost advantage over coal even considering changes required after TMI in 1979. In this study, Gordon Corey says nuclear plants built in the 1990s could make power at a rate between 20 percent and 36 percent cheaper than coal plants during their lifetime, depending on inflation. Winston said he believed Komanoff had over-estimated the cost of decommissioning nuclear plants. He also said his assumptions of nuclear plants operating at 60 percent of capacity was too low and coal plants operating at 70 percent of capacity was too

Kansas' leading industry ranks high in occupational hazards

Kansas, is the third most hazardous occupation in the United States.

In occupational hazards, agriculture is ranked third behind mining and construction work, according to Robert Welty, instructor in extension agriculture engineering. He is also education specialist for the Agriculture Safety and Health Center (ASHC)—a division of the Department of Cooperative Extension, located in Seaton

Farm-related accidents run the range of being stepped on by an animal to being killed by getting caught in machinery, Welty said. He estimated that nearly 10 people in Kansas are killed every year by farmrelated accidents.

Many farm accidents happen because machines can work so much faster than a person can react, Welty said.

It takes three-tenths of a second for an individual to realize an accident is happening, he said. By the time the person reacts he can be stretched through the machinery.

"In three-quarters of a second a machine can just run you right through," he said.

Agriculture is a risk-taking occupation,

"People usually think that if you're going to farm, you're going to take risks," he said.

BUT FARMING doesn't have to be risky, Welty said. Taking necessary precautions or the failure to do so is a factor. However, carelessness is not always a result of people thinking safety precautions are unnecessary, he said.

"A lot of times agriculture has high demand periods...during harvest or when they're planting or working cat-tle...requiring an awful lot of time," Welty said.

These intense work periods leave the farmer or rancher physically and psychologically drained, he said. These periods are when the farmer makes his money and he will work long hours to get his crops in quickly to avoid bad weather.

When the farmer is fatigued from working long hours he fails to react in the same manner he would under normal circumstances, Welty said.

"Farmers don't get sick leave. When they're sick they're out there working," he said. "They don't react as fast or think as clear and they might do something they normally wouldn't do. That's when they will get caught in something."

Welty said safety precautions are often ignored because the person has performed a dangerous procedure many times and it becomes a common act to them. They then let their defense down and aren't as scared or respectful of machinery as they should be, he said.

THE ASCH is currently conducting a survey to determine the latest farm-related accident statistics for Kansas, Welty said. The last survey was conducted in 1977.

According to that survey, tractor accidents caused 40 percent of the farm fatalities in Kansas.

Welty said tractor accidents are frequent because tractors are used for a large number of farm chores.

Tractor accidents were also found to result in the highest average medical cost, $596 per accident, the survey said.

Power take-off (PTO) shafts, which provide power from the tractor and attach to equipment such as hay balers or ensilage cutters, are often factors in these accidents, he said.

"They can wrap a person's clothing up

Collegian Reporter said. "Many times it only takes a little Agriculture, the leading industry in thread and that'll wrap another piece of clothing and yank the whole person in."

> GRAIN AUGERS are also major hazards, he said. They have more reported accidents per hour of use than any other piece of farm

Two-thirds of all auger accidents involve children near age five, according to the 1977

"Kids have no business being in the area of dangerous farm equipment," Welty said.

In recent years, because of government regulations and the manufacturers product liabilities, built-in safety precautions have been developed, he said. These include safety shields for PTOs and other parts of farm machinery where injury could occur because of open access.

Non-machinery accidents, such as injuries suffered from livestock, occur more frequently than machinery related accidents. Welty said. Animal-related accidents often go unreported because the victim usually receives minor injuries.

Most livestock accidents result from being stepped on, kicked, or bitten, he said.

CHEMICAL ACCIDENTS are also common, Welty said.

Anhydrous ammonia—nitrogen fertilizer used for wheat and other grain crops-is often involved in chemical accidents, he

During the past year, two towns have been evacuated because of anhydrous ammonia accidents, Welty said. In one accident a man was killed when the hose he was using to fill a tank broke and the chemical sprayed him. Anhydrous ammonia is caustic and dehydrates skin tissue on contact, he said. "A lot of injuries are when people get blasted in the eyes," Welty said. "It can dehydrate the eye and cause blindness."

He said there is now a law requiring protective goggles and rubber gloves when handling the chemical.

Breathing the chemical can also cause problems, he said.

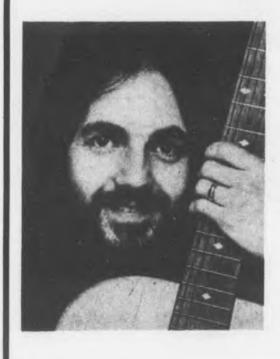

The danger from inhaling it is that it can cause body liquids to gather in the lungs and the victim can drown or suffocate, Welty

Kansas has a good safety record for the amount of anhydrous ammonia used in the state, he said.

Former student saves on gas by operating electric motorcycle

Collegian Reporter

Its speed is about 45 miles an hour-not the kind of power usually bragged about for a motorcycle. But this cycle, built by K-State graduate Dennis Matteson, runs on electric power.

At a cost of about $350, Matteson built the motorcycle from a Harley-Davidson frame and two powerful batteries similar to those used on boats, called deep-discharge batteries. Later, he further increased the power by adding two nickel-cadmium batteries.

The motorcycle will run for about 25 miles before Matteson has to stop and recharge the battery. He uses a separate unit called an automatic charging system, and recharges the batteries overnight.

MATTESON COMPLETED his motorcycle in March 1979 and displayed it at the All-University Open House.

Although he doesn't know how many miles he's put on the cycle, he said he has used it less since he graduated.

"I just don't have time to work with it right now," he said.

Matteson said he thinks this is the first electric motorcycle in this area and he is working to improve its safety and efficiency. He is experimenting with using a larger motor to increase speed and more efficiently carry the 240 pounds of batteries.

This is Matteson's second attempt to build an electric motorcycle. His first cycle, a smaller model, was built during the winter of 1978. He used it to drive from campus to his home on 16th Street, and he said the small cycle gave a bumpy ride.

"The streets were rough on me and the (first) bike," he said. "I used it a lot to go downtown, too."

He built his second motorcycle from scraps salvaged from the first one and-to help save money-spare parts from other

"I would look around for junk bikes rather than try to buy from the dealer," he said.

MATTESON GOT the idea for building the cycle from other electric motorcycles which are about the size of mopeds.

"But I wouldn't consider a small one as a good commuter bike," he said, which is why he built a larger cycle.

"I just like to build things, I guess," he

His electric motorcycle was inspected for street use and had to pass basic requirements for turn signals, headlight and

Accidents can happen when working on the motorcycle, Matteson said. A battery that was contained in a plastic enclosure exploded, but caused no damage, and helped Matteson realize the hazards of what he was working with. A second accident occured when a loose cable on a battery post melted

"You have to be aware of the potential you're working with," he said.

MATTESON'S CYCLE has appeared in Cycle Magazine and other publications. He was mostly self-taught in his motorcyclebuilding skills. He said he learned by reading electronics magazines, from his experience as an electronics technician for the University and from classes in mechanical engineering.

Matteson works for the Engineering Extension Service in Ward Hall. He received a degree in mechanical engineering in December 1979.

Matteson said he hopes to get the cycle going again this summer and use it more

"The only drawback is the weather, like with any motorcycle."

High school students stage walkout

TOPEKA (AP) — More than 150 students walked out of classes at Hayden High School Wednesday to protest allegedly strict discipline at the school and the firings of three teachers.

Sister Mary Jo Coyle, principal, met with representatives of the school's 24 homerooms, and with the school board president later Wednesday. A meeting was scheduled for Wednesday night with

A school spokesman said the students who walked out would receive the normal punishment for an unexcused absence, which is 15 days of detention. The school has an enrollment of 580.

school board, said the strife at the school was the result of "distortions and outright lies that are being spread through the district by the parents.'

"The sister is strict. There is no drinking, no smoking, no narcotics being used at Hayden," he said. "She is zeroing in on academics and she is tough.'

ASK, SAC question 22 percent raise

Tuition increase to be OK'd, Franklin says

Bernard Franklin

By JIM LAURENCIG Collegian Reporter

A 22 percent increase in tuition, approved by the Kansas Board of Regents last week, will probably be implemented, according to Bernard Franklin, chairman of the board.

Franklin's statement came at a rally in the Union Thursday conducted as part of Student Action Day. It was sponsored by the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK), Student Governing Association and the United States Student Association.

ASK and the regents' Student Advisory Committee (SAC) have questioned the legality of the increase because no financial impact study was done for a 22 percent tuition increase. The regent-approved increase is 7 percent above the 15 percent increase originally recommended by the Legislature. One reason for the tuition hike was to make up for funds which the Legislature cut from requested budget increases for higher education.

HOWEVER, FRANKLIN said, the increase was legal.

The board had made it known there would be a tuition increase between 15 and 25 percent, he said.

"They could have increased it to anywhere between that and been justified," he said.

"It may have been a gesture of the board to the Legislature to show that the board has complete control over the amount of the tuition increase," Franklin said.

Franklin was the only member of the board to vote against the in-

"I voted against the motion because I felt this was not the appropriate time to raise it so much." he said.

Franklin introduced a motion to increase tuition by 15 percent this year and 10 percent next year at the April 17 meeting. The motion was defeated.

"My main concern was not to have to absorb a 22 percent increase in one year," he said.

ALTHOUGH, in this case the board had "pre-decided" what to do, Franklin encouraged continued student participation in matters concerning students. He said ASK and SAC are valuable for getting students' positions expressed.

"But they can be utilized more effectively than what we're doing now," he said.

 Budget tightening is not unusual to Kansas, Franklin said, pointing to President Reagan's conservative fiscal policy in the area of higher education. "There are some difficult days ahead for higher education," he

ROBERT EVANS, director of Student Financial Assistance, also spoke at the rally addressing issues regarding available financial aid to students in the fall.

Reagan's budget proposals would cut the federal government's basic student grant program by $663 million, Evans said, but some recipients would not be affected.

"According to the formula the government uses, the students who are considered needlest will receive no reduction," he said.

Under the proposed budget cuts, student loans would be based purely on financial need after Oct.

1. Evans encouraged K-State students to apply before June 15 for loans.

British deny Sands' plea; Irish youths riot

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Rioting broke out in Catholic West Belfast and three other cities Thursday, and a sniper killed a former militiaman.

Rioters in Belfast were reported to have stoned police and troops and hijacked cars after the British turned down Bobby Sand's request to see former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark and the Rev. Daniel Berrigan. Police reported no casualties, however Bernadette Devlin

Police reported no casualties, however Bernadette Devlin McAliskey said "the wrath of the people will be vented" if hunger-striking IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands dies in Northern Ireland's Maze prison.

Clark said British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has "made a grievous mistake" by repeated refusals to treat jailed Irish Republican Army activists as political prisoners rather than criminals.

SANDS, RECENTLY elected to Parliament from a Roman Catholic district, was in the 54th day of a hunger strike to win political prisoner status.

Sands' eyesight and hearing are both reported to be quickly failing and he is said to be near death.

Clark and Mrs. McAliskey spoke at a news conference in West Belfast also attended by Berrigan. Clark and Berrigan traveled to Belfast hoping to see Sands, but the British denied the request because "it would serve no useful purpose."

THE RIOTING ERUPTED in West Belfast and the Falls Road district of the capital, Dungannon and Strabane in County Tyrone and in Lurgan, County Armagh, pitting Catholic youths hurling stones and firebombs and hijacking cars against police and troops.

At least five gasoline bombs were hurled at a British patrol in the Falls Road district of Belfast, but they missed the troops and set a house afire, and the soldiers and police rescued a woman and her three children from the blazing

The violence in Northern Ireland had gone on for eight nights with police and troops battling roving bands of youths. It was thetest outbreak in the long struggle between majority Protestants and minority Roman Catholics. The Irish Republic Army (IRA) is fighting to end British rule and unite Northern Ireland with the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic.

A FORMER MILITIAMAN of the Ulster Defense Regiment was shot and killed on the outskirts of Armagh. Police said he was driving a bus for the meat processing plant where he worked and was dropping off other employees at their homes.

It was the ninth straight day of violence in support of IRA demands to end British rule in this Protestant-dominated province and unite it with the mainly Catholic Irish republic. Schools have been closed for a two-week Easter holiday that began 10 days ago.

McAliskey, a former member of Parliament and a fiery Irish nationalist who is organizing support for Sands, accused Thatcher of "hysterical behavior" in refusing the guerrilla demands and called for united action by Catholics to force London to concede political status.

President's economic program receives tentative revision plan administration and Republicans on the Senate Budget Committee were reported Thursday to have reached a tentative agreement for reversing a surprise setback the panel dealt the president's economic program two weeks ago.

A Senate source said the administration and GOP leaders had agreed to revisions that appeared to satisfy three conservative Republicans who had blocked committee passage of Reagan's proposed spending and tax reductions because they thought the package left too large a deficit in 1984. Under the reported agreement, the Budget Committee's estimated deficit would be reduced by about $15 billion, to a revised $30 billion, according to the source, who did not want to be named. In addition, the administration is strengthening its guarantee that it would find more spending cuts needed to balance the budget by 1984, said the source.

Neither the administration nor members of the Republican-controlled Senate committee would confirm Thursday that an Earlier in the day, however, President Reagan's budget director, David Stockman, said a settlement was imminent.

"I believe that's going to get solved" by Friday, Stockman told a group of corporate lobbyists. He also predicted that the committee would approve Reagan's program when it returns from a two-week Easter recess next week.

Sen. William Armstrong of Colorado, one of the three Republicans who voted against the Reagan program, said Thursday he was in "almost continuous" consultations with the administration and other committee members.

"We are going to straighten this out," Armstrong said, indicating that announcement of an agreement might be forthcoming.

Senate sources said the president, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker Jr. (R-Tenn.) and Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici (R-N.M.) all were involved Thursday in resolving the matter.

March inflation rate slows pace

WASHINGTON — Inflation slowed to a 7.5 percent annual rate in March, the lowest pace since last summer, due largely to moderating energy prices, the government said Thursday.

The March inflation figures triggered a rise in benefits to the nation's 36 million Social Security recipients. The 11.2 percent adjustment, which will go into effect in July, will boost the average retired worker's monthly check from $337 to $374.

Overall, consumer prices in March rose a seasonally adjusted 0.6 percent, the lowest one-month rise since last July, according to the Labor Department.

$3.3 million heist is nation's largest

TUCSON, Ariz. — Bank officials said Thursday the $3.3 million robbery of a First National Bank of Arizona branch—largest cash bank robbery in the nation's history—may have been an "inside job." And a newspaper reported police had suspects in the case.

A bank spokesman said an audit determined that $3.3 million in cash was taken in Wednesday's stickup shortly before the bank opened for business. He said the audit was made to end speculation about how much was taken. At first the bank declined comment on the amount.

Sources close to the case, who asked not to be identified, said the methods used and the robbers' comments during the robbery suggest the likelihood of an inside job.

"Do we think it's an inside job?" bank Vice President Charles Hemann said in Phoenix. "That possibility is never ruled out in any

The FBI and police refused to comment on the copyright report in the Tucson Citizen that authorities have suspects in the case, but one FBI agent told the paper the robbers definitely had come into Arizona from out of state.

Reagan may end embargo today

WASHINGTON — There is a 90 percent chance President Reagan will lift the embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union, a White House source said Thursday.

The source, who asked not to be identified, said there were "strong indications" the announcement would be made Friday.

Meanwhile, the president's spokesman described him as eager to end the embargo and said he was talking to advisers about "what kind of signal we'd be sending" if he does lift it.

But deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan had made no final decision on the matter. Published and broadcast reports said Reagan is about to phase out the embargo now that the threat of Soviet intervention in Poland has diminished.

Roberts yields to boob tube

COCOA, Fla. — It's not every day that you turn on your TV to see evangelist Oral Roberts and are greeted, instead, with a bunch of topless women cavorting across the screen.

There was no way to determine how many of the cable channel's potential 125,000 viewers tuned in to the Christian Broadcast Network at 8 p.m. Wednesday, said Florida Cable TV regional manager Orlando Brillante.

But he said he received only one irate phone call.

"There was one call reported to me about a woman being very emphatic about it," said Brillante.

He said the station has a viewing potential of 125,000 subscribers.

The movie went on for 7½ minutes, before returning to robed gospel singers, one Merritt Island viewer, who asked not to be identified, told the TODAY newspaper of Cocoa.

Florida Cable TV officials said a glitch in a remote antenna station in Brevard County was responsible for the mixup. The National Christian Network shares transmission facilities with Escapade, a New York pay-TV channel, which was feeding the topless movie.

Hayden High students return to class

TOPEKA — Students returned to class at Hayden High School Thursday, a day after 100 of them had walked out in protest.

Those who boycotted classes Wednesday were considered truant and will have to stay a half hour after school for 15 days, according to Sparky Anderson, the director of discipline at the Catholic school.

Sister Mary Jo Coyle, principal, met with student representatives Wednesday. She and the school board met with parents Wednesday night.

Some students had protested because they considered discipline at the school too strict, and others said they were protesting the fact that some teachers' contracts had not been renwed.

Sister Coyle said a decline in enrollment made it necessary to reduce the staff.

Promote fiscal responsibility

It's time for K-State President Duane Acker to set an example for the rest of the University community.

For fiscal 1982, the Legislature approved a 7 percent increase in faculty salaries for the state's six universities. Although the official University position was support for a larger increase, a tight-fisted group of legislators insisted on the 7 percent.

Before July 1, which is the beginning of fiscal 1982, the Board of Regents will meet and decide the new salaries of the executive officers of its schools.

The regents approved a raise for Acker from $60,000 a year for fiscal 1979 to $63,500 in fiscal 1980. A year later they approved paying him $68,500 a year. He is among the highest paid employees of the state.

If the regents offer him another raise, Acker should refuse it.

He should turn it down in protest of the Legislature's actions on faculty salaries and he should turn it down to set an example of fiscal responsibility for the rest of the University.

Resolution is necessary

A resolution passed by the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee, which condemns using undergraduates as principle instructors within the Department of Computer Science, is unfortunate, but necessary.

The teaching problems within the computer science department are not new and it is apparent the department has not been able to or has not attempted to solve the problems internally.

In either case it was time for another party to step in and take action on the matter.

Part of the problem with the department is caused by academic requirements. Many students outside of computer science must take some type of computer class because of their majors. In order to meet those demands and because of a lack of funds the department has had to employ undergraduates as instructors. However, the department does not have to add to its own problems by creating additional courses such as Computer Appreciation which puts a further strain on an already overworked department.

When the resolution is presented to the full Faculty Senate members should consider that the problems experienced by the Department of Computer Science are not indigenous to that department and are occuring in many departments.

Resolution uncalled for

I was displeased with approval of the resolution condeming the practice of hiring undergraduates as instructors for computer courses. Further, I disagree with the decision to limit class sizes to solve the problem. It is unfortunate that undergraduates are put in the category of being unqualified. The qualified instructor should not only hold the knowledge, but he should be able to pass it on to students. Since most undergraduate instructors have just recently taken the class they are teaching, they are still familiar with the course and the problems students face.

I think that people should reevaluate their definition of a qualified teacher rather than limiting instructors. Since computers are the basis of our society, more students want or have to take some type of computer course for their major, which means more classes should be provided. It will be very aggravating for us to be put on waiting lists for classes we need or want to take. Even if the department believes the teachers are unqualified, I would rather learn something than nothing.

Adapting to out-of-state status

In-state students simply don't realize what it's like to be an out-ofstate student. The student part isn't much different, it's the Kansas part that gets most of us.

I must confess that as my mother and I drove out from Virginia, I was a scared and nervous high school graduate, preparing to be a confused freshman. However, the thoughts that ran through my head were not of friends left behind, they were more like, "My God, I'm in the middle of nowhere," and we were still in Missouri.

In fact, I remember great relief that there was a McDonald's in town. I thought that any civilized community was sure to have a McDonald's.

My first days at K-State were exciting, lonely and confusing. I. did manage to get lost on campus my first night here, but a kind sophomore directed me back to Putnam Hall.

ALL IN ALL, it was a fairly painless transition from east coast to midwest, that is until I learned that I didn't talk correctly and I eat the wrong meals.

My first encounter with this problem was when a girl asked me to eat dinner with her. I-being from a suburb of Washington, D.C.-assumed that she was "dinner" was the meal eaten at

Where I come from we eat breakfast, lunch and dinner; not breakfast, dinner and supper. I realize that many Kansans eat the meals I do, and the name of the meal doesn't really matter, but it helped me realize that there was a lot more to Kansas than I had originally imagined. Soon I began to realize that I also did not know how to tell time-Kansas style. At work, a friend asked me what time it was and I told her: "Ten of seven."

"Ten oh what?" she replied.

REALIZING THAT Kansans must express time in some other manner I taught myself to say, "Ten 'till seven," which nobody seemed to have difficulty understanding.

These were not the only quirks that I had to become accustomed to as a newly initiated Kansan.

For instance, the expression "gag me" is one of the crudest expressions that I have heard uttered (though working in a newsroom I hear many). I swore on my bowling ball that I would never use those two words in succession. Unfortunately, after referring to the evening meal. I three years at this great insoon learned, however, that stitution, in the wonderful Land of Oz (Ahs?), I have succumbed to the environment and on occassion can be heard to utter those words.

I have learned the regional differences in language. As one whose profession is centered around words, these differences fascinate me.

HOWEVER, ONE thing about being an out-of-state student that I have yet to accept is the special weekends that the residence halls and the University sponsors. Weekends such as Mother's Weekend, Little Sister's Weekend, Parent's Weekend and the like have little meaning for one whose parents and sisters are 1,100 miles

I have nothing against these weekends, they are wonderful for those who have someone to come visit. For those of us who don't, they often cause homesickness.

Well folks, this week is my official Grandmother's Week. After three years, I have a special visitor who I can call my own.

We don't have the football game, special movie or gala performance that the weekends have, but we have each other, and for an out-ofstate student, that means a whole helluva lot.

Coalition has needed role

Editor.

RE: Alan Moberly's letter about the Coalition for Human Rights.

I disagree with the Student Senate's decision not to fund the Coalition for Human

The issue of human rights is one which we have and must continue to deal with. International declarations and treaties have made human rights the subject of law among nations, and our own Congress has acted to make human rights central to our foreign policy. The new administration's stand on human rights notwithstanding, the issue is with us and will not go away.

The lack of regard for human rights by the late shah of Iran played a central role in his downfall, contributing to an anti-American backlash which resulted in the taking of our hostages. Similarly, human rights violations in Nicaragua contributed to Somoza's loss of power, and military terrorism in El Salvador is drawing America into an unnecessary war. Peoples of the third world will take repression only so long before rising to overthrow those responsible. Even if we are not concerned with the hundreds of thousands of people suffering under such foreign policy which does not address the play in this education process. needs of the people living in states which we call "allies." America can only lose if we ignore the violations of human rights in states friendly to us.

Moberly objects to the speakers involved in the Lou Douglas lecture series. This group was made up of individuals whose expertise in their respective fields is acknowledged worldwide. Their viewpoints were divergent, and represented many decades of experience in diplomacy, government and education. K-States can be proud that such individuals chose to come here to speak. It is puzzling that Moberly found the message so ideologically one-

The Coalition for Human Rights deserves our thanks for its efforts this semester. If our nation is to regain true strength and leadership in the world, human rights concerns must play a role in our thinking, as well as our foreign policy. No one would suggest that communist regimes have not committed atrocities against human rights and dignity. However, we must pay attention to human rights in the areas in which we have influence, or that influence will be lost. As Moberly's letter suggests, much education is needed before people will begin to see the world for what it is, instead of simply reacting with the easy answers of white vs. black (or red) thinking. The repression, we must see the end effect of a Coalition for Human Rights has a role to

RE: Joseph Montgomery's letter on the foreign affairs awareness study.

You agree that a majority of college students are ignorant of foreign affairs and suggest that the American voting public is at least as ignorant and apathetic. On this issue you may be right.

Consider, however, the degree to which the United States is enmeshed in international trade and politics, and the extent to which the average American is effected by occurences involving foreign countries (e.g. grain embargoes, import or export in the Persian Gulf), unless your ignorance extends beyond understnading the ramifications of these. We have the right to vote for the people who must deal with foreign affairs. How can we vote for people to represent the policies we want if we do not understand the issues at hand? That is how important a knowledge of foreign affairs is.

As to the spending of government funds on education instead of studying students, this seems fundamentally sound. But, who gets the money? I think it is safe to assume that there is not a department on campus that will admit to being overfunded. There is a chance the money might do the most good in areas where education is weakest. I am not advocating a lavish expenditure on a mandatory foreign affairs program for college students because you are right, this one study is inconclusive. I do think that the educational system needs to be evaluated on duties, an unseasonal freeze in Brazil, war the grounds of what students get out of it. A college education should do more than get you a job. It should make you a more responsible, thinking citizen.

Controversy over WRC ends allocation process

Collegian Reporter

Student Senate finalized the approval of the 1981-82 tentative allocations bill in last night's meeting.

However, before the session began deliberation on the bill, a number of K-State students spoke for and against senate funding of the Women's Resource Center (WRC) during open discussion.

Ellen Johnson, senior in engineering and past president of Alpha Phi Omega (APO), argued against funding WRC, calling them "irresponsible and inconsistent."

"It is my opinion that WRC has little to offer K-State students that is not offered by other groups," Johnson said.

Much of the debate centered on the protest of WRC against the APO-sponsored "Beauty and the Beast" contest last semester.

"The way they carried out this (protest) is extremely wrong," said Pat Glensor, junior in horticulture.

MARY SUE HOLM, senior in elementary education and work-study student at WRC, pointed out the educational and referral aspects of the WRC as positive criteria for

"We try to educate people and offer alternatives. We try to show all sides of an issue," she said.

Kelly Presta, arts and sciences senator, questioned Holm about WRC's representation of all University students. "We never claimed to represent all members of the student body," Holm said.

Single-parent programs, sexual harassment and sexual problems are some of the issues addressed by WRC according to Cathy Stackpole, WRC director, in an explanation of the group's services. Stackpole told senators all of the services offered are available to both men and women.

Steve Oehme, arts and sciences senator, spoke in favor of funding the group.

"We have funded all these other minority groups, and this is probably the largest minority group on campus and has one of the smallest budgets," Oehme said.

SENATE VOTED to fund the full WRC request of $591.75.

McCain Fine Arts received funding of $2,945, with the stipulation that any request for funds next year be addressed to the Fine Arts Council. This amount was slightly less than half the cost of promoting a new student season ticket plan, according to Doreen Bauman, director of McCain.

through season tickets, we will be able to subsidize (reduced-rate) student tickets," Bauman said.

The International Coordinating Council (ICC) was granted $2,730.21 by senate. This allocation was passed along with an amendment stating ICC must look into alternate funding, such as a nominal charge or donation, for its International Week Potluck Dinner.

Senate also allocated $3,000 to the Honorariums account. This account will be used to fund various groups to pay for speakers for the 1981-82 school year.

WITHOUT MUCH discussion senators tentatively allocated MEChA $542.20, a cut of $35.80 from their budget request.

The College Councils received tentative approval for their line item (LI) request of $1.50 per full-time student and 42 cents per part-time student. The projected total is

The Union received tentative allocation for a $12.00 full-time LI and $6.00 part-time LI. The projected total is $385,980.

A $1.70 LI was allocated to the Fine Arts Council from the full-time student activity fee. This is expected to amount to $51,810.90.

Rec Services received a $2.50 full-time LI and a part-time LI of 75 cents, totaling $78,724.50.

Wrapping up the last session of allocations, senate alloted $6,250 to a withholding account. Reserves for contingencies was allotted the remaining $6,913.86.

Panhellenic Council approves cross-cutting elimination policy

A policy that will eliminate cross-cutting during rush week, was approved Thursday by the Panhellenic Council.

Cross-cutting occurs on the last night of rush, when women who have been carried by houses throughout the week, are not invited to pledge a sorority. This year about fifteen women were cross-cut, Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said.

The new policy will require houses to pledge all women who have been carried up to the final night of parties if they have indicated more than one preferance of sorority.

The council also voted to accept a proposal which establishes a new system to set quotas for the number of women each house is recommended to pledge. The quota will be based on the number of women attending the preferance party at the end of rush week and will be divided equally among the houses, Robel said.

Currently, the rush quotas are determined by the number of women who attend the first invitational party. This number, higher than the actual number of women who finish rush, establishes a quota that is difficult for many of the houses to meet.

Cost-of-living increase granted to Social Security beneficiaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's 36 million Social Security beneficiaries will get a 11.2 percent cost-of-living increase in July, the government announced Thursday. That translates to a $37 a month raise for the average pensioner, who now gets $334 a month.

The across-the-board hike was triggered automatically by the Consumer Price Index for March. It matches the inflation rate from the first quarter of 1980 through the first quarter of 1981.

Some 4.1 million poor aged, blind and disabled persons also will find a 11.2 percent increase in the checks they receive in the first days of July.

The Social Security hike will cost the system's dwindling trust funds $15.4 billion in the year ahead, according to Secretary of Health and Human Services Richard S. Schweiker.

The increase in Supplemental Security Income, paid from general revenues, will cost the Treasury $600 million.

For the average retired worker drawing benefits alone, the monthly Social Security check will jump from $337 to $374, or $4,488 a year.

The maximum monthly Social Security benefit for a 65-year-old worker retiring this year will rise from $677 to $752.90, a $75.90 increase. That is $9,034.80 a year. If the retiree's spouse is eligible for the 50 percent spouse's benefit, their checks will total $13,552.20.

The minimum monthly Social Security benefit for a retiring 65-year-old will rise from $153.10 to $170.30, a $17.20 increase. That totals $2,043.60 a year.

The benefit increase is the twelfth for Social Security beneficiaries in the past 13 years. Last July they got 14.3 percent.

Here are other examples:

—The average aged couple's monthly benefits will rise from $576 to $640 a month, a $64 increase. Their annual benefits will be $7.680.

—For a mother with two children, the average monthly check will rise from $782 to $870, an $88 increase. Annual: $10,440.

—For an average aged widow or widower, monthly benefits will go from $313 to $348, a $35 increase. Annual: $4,176.

—For the average disabled worker with a wife and children, monthly benefits will rise from $731 to $812, an $81 increase. Annual: $9,744.

—The average for all disabled workers will jump from $372 to $413, a $41 increase. Annual: $4,956.

—The maximum federal SSI payment for an individual will rise from $238 to $264.70, a $26.70 increase. Annual: $3,176.40.

-The maximum for couples on SSI will go from $357 to $397, a $40 boost. Annual: $4,764.

Syrians, Christians hold fire again

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Another cease-fire took hold in Beirut and Zahle Thursday and efforts were under way to negotiate two other truces in Lebanon. But a Christian leader warned they would all collapse unless Syria was brought to the bargaining table to end the fighting that has left at least 375 dead and 1,300 wounded since April 1.

Israeli jets, meanwhile, skirted Palestinian anti-aircraft fire and flew reconnaissance missions over Beirut and southern Lebanon. Israeli frogmen blew up a Palestinian gunboat in the port of Tyre, 12 miles north of the border.

The Syrians and Christians in Lebanon held their fire after three days of bitter fighting in Beirut and in the Christian city of Zahle, 30 miles to the east. The cease-fire, the 19th ordered by President Elias Sarkis, took hold in Beirut at daybreak and in Zahle at midday.

Government officials said cease-fires also were being attempted t, halt a separate war in West Beirut between proIraqi and proIranian Moslem militias and another in southern Lebanon pitting Palestinian guerrillas against Israel and Israeli-backed Christian militiamen.

The southern Lebanon truce was being worked out by Maj. Gen. William Callaghan, commander of the U.N. peacekeeping force in Lebanon who has met with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin to try end the killing of U.N. troops by an Israeli-backed Christian militia headed by Lebanese Maj. Saad Hadad.

Begin had talks with Haddad in Jerusalem and said the militia would avoid hitting U.N. troops or civilians in southern Lebanon. Haddad's men, who serve as a security belt against guerrilla raids into Israel, shelled the southern port of Sidon Sunday, killing 20 people in a crowded cafe and a restaurant.

Black man suspected by authorities of aiding whites in Atlanta murders examined information Thursday about a man who Roy Innis claims was involved in the slayings of six black youths. A spokesman for the civil rights leader said the suspect was a black man who captured victims to be murdered by whites.

The mother of one of the victims said she had identified a photograph shown her by Innis supporters as that of a black man who frequented her neighborhood. But mothers of some of the other victims said they did not believe Innis' story and said he was trying to salvage his reputation through publicity.

Meanwhile, mourners prepared to attend funeral and burial services for Joseph Bell, a 15-year-old whose body was found in the South River in suburban DeKalb County on Sunday. A medical examiner ruled that Bell, who had been missing since March 2, probably was suffocated.

Innis, staff director of the Congress of Racial Equality, said Wednesday that his investigators had a "witness" who could direct police to a suspect in at least six of the 25 murders of young blacks being investigated by a special police task force.

Innis, whose leadership of CORE has been challenged by other members of the New York-based group, called a news conference and waved an envelope which he said contained a photograph of a suspect whom members of families of the murdered

ATLANTA (AP) - Police and FBI agents children had seen cruising through their neighborhoods.

He would not identify the witness or the suspect. But Larry Mitchell, a spokesman for Innis, told The New Haven (Conn.) Register that the CORE suspect was a black man who obtained victims to be murdered Mitchell said CORE tailed the alleged suspect for eight days before announcing its findings.

"We are 99 percent sure that this person is implicated and that there are others involved. He's a major part of the abductions and murders of the kids," Mitchell said. Innis has vowed that CORE investigators will arrest their suspect if police have not apprehended the man by 1 p.m. Saturday or made significant progress in their probe.

But police spokeswoman Beverly Harvard said Thursday that Innis had informed John Glover, head of the FBI's Atlanta office, that he used the 72-hour ultimatum "only te gain the attention of authorities."

Innis could not be reached for comment. Police would not comment in detail on Innis' purported witness or suspect. Nor would FBI spokesman John Darko, who said only that the bureau was "in the process of checking the information out."

Harvard said it probably would take police "two to three days" to check out the story told by Innis.

'Apocalypse Now' shows Vietnam War nightmares

Editor's note: "Apocalypse Now" will be shown at 6:30 and 9:30 tonight and Saturday night and at 7 Sunday night in the Union Forum Hall.

It may seem ironic to begin a movie with the song "The End," by The Doors. But when you juxtaposition the music with a screenfull of exploding forests and napalm bombing, the effect is devastating

Those opening frames are the first indication that "Apocalypse Now" is more than just a film. It is an experience—and a nightmarish one at that. It takes the idiocies as well as the horrors of the Vietnam War and blows them up almost larger than life.

The story is an adaptation of Joseph Conrad's "Heart of Darkness." However, Francis Ford Coppola goes beyond merely bringing the 1960's characters to us through a time warp. He uses the war as a picture, and like Andy Warhol, paints over the images. That technique occassionally distorts the atrocities, but it more often magnifies them. Despite what it does, it results in an intense movie.

Coppola's version of the story takes Captain Willard (Martin Sheen) and turns him into a military intelligence agent. His mission is to travel up river into Cambodia and kill a Green Beret Colonel who has gone insane. Willard's trip to confront Colonel Kurtz (Marlon Brando) is more than a harrowing experience, it's a descent into Kurtz's philosophy is that war has little room for compassion. His ideas transcend morality and move into amorality. With these dogmas exposed, he becomes the embodiment of evil.

During the film the parallels with Dante's "Inferno" are strengthened by the imagery. The river gets increasingly bizzare and Brando's scenes are shot in a half light that make him appear bodiless.

Admittedly the dragging final scenes are hard to watch because of the rapid pace of the first portion of the film. These scenes are the muted climax that force Willard to have the apocalypse. It becomes a revelation that in the fight between good and evil, good doesn't always win.

Coppola's vision is anything but pleasant. His approach, even his humor, is brutal. But it works. So well in fact, that the incredible cinematography takes on a horrible beauty.

Hispanic future is topic of speech

A former ambassador and former President Carter's Special Assistant for Hispanic Affairs, Esteban Torres, will speak at 10 a.m. today in Forum Hall.

Torres will speak on current topics, such as recent sales of oil by Mexico and the U.S. grain export market. He is the final speaker this semester in the K-State Minority Affairs Speaker Series.

His visit is being sponsored by MEChA and K-State's Office of Minority Affairs. Torres' speech is part of this week's activities on Hispanic cultural awareness called "Festival Hispano-Americano."

Torres currently operates International Enterprises and Development Corporation. This company, based in Washington, D.C., is involved in international trade of foods and grains, commodities, investments, energy, imports and exports.

Torres served as the first Chicano representative for 12 years for the United Auto Workers (UAW).

In 1977, Carter appointed Torres as the U.S. ambassador to United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

In 1968, Torres organized the East Los Angeles Community Union (TELACU) to address economic and social problems in the barrio. Today, TELACU is one of the most powerful community organizations in the country.

Concrete canoes race Saturday

Students from the civil engineering department will hold the eighth annual concrete canoe races Saturday.

The canoes, constructed by the students, are made of concrete and weigh about 150 pounds each. To qualify for the race, the canoes must be large enough to hold two people and sturdy enough to last through several races, Jerome Zovne, associate professor of civil engineering, said.

During the race, each two-person team travels a 1,000-yard course.

Ten schools will participate in the race, including the University of Kansas, Texas A&M and the University of Nebraska, he said.

The races will begin at approximately 9:30 a.m. and will last until mid-afternoon at the River Pond Area of Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

'Excalibur' remains true to legends

Editor's Note: "Excalibur" is showing at 7 and 9:30 p.m. at the Campus Theatre in Aggleville.

By ROGER AESCHLIMAN . Arts & Entertainment Editor

Merlin lives. I've already seen it written on a desk top, and the movie has only been in town a few days. What movie? Where have you been hiding? "Excalibur" of course.

It may not be the hottest movie on the circuit, but it will be. Because everyone loves a hero, and this one has got heros to

It's the first flick of the new rage of fantasy movies. Inspired by Dungeons and Dragons and Conan the Barbarian, we will soon be assaulted by these fantasy movies. With "Excalibur" I would guess they served the best first, but we'll have to wait to see.

I HAVE one word to describe the feeling I had as I left the theater: envy. More than just watching, I wanted to be a part of the epic drama I had just seen. That's why the movie is so good, it makes you a part of the action. The big screen reaches out and pulls you in. Rather than just sitting in your seat, you feel the victory. You sense joys and sorrows. You taste death.

"Excalibur" is all about the rise and fall of King Arthur Pendragon. Excalibur is the sword of kings. Made by the gods themselves, protected by the Lady of the Lake, it rises from the waters for the true king of England, and with its power peace reigns.

The true king is supposed to stumble on to the sword. But Merlin the Wizard works out a deal and gets the sword for Uther Pendragon (Arthur's father and semi-king). Uther pays for the sword with his life and as he dies, drives Excalibur into a big rock. No one can remove the sword but the one destined to be king.

SO ALONG COMES an adolescent Arthur, who by accident plucks the sword from its stone sheath. After a brief argument and war Arthur grows up and unites the whole of England under one crown. Everything is peachy then some bad things happen and the kingdom falls apart.

In desperation Arthur sends out the roundtable knights to find the holy grail. This takes years and costs thousands of lives. But upon completion, armed with the wisdom of the ages, Arthur again becomes a complete king and vanquishes his foe. He also vanquishes his friends, half of England and himself. But then that's the end of the movie so it doesn't matter who is left.

"Excalibur" follows the legends well, not perfectly, but well. Percival discovers the grail. Wrong, it was supposed to be Galahad. But incorporating Sir Galahad into the tale would have required more time than possible, so I'll allow for poetic license.

THERE WERE three fantastic items in "Excalibur." First, the sets were real. Not just real-looking, but convincingly real. The interior shots of castles were of rough-hewn stone and flickering torches. Camelot was a true palace, beyond reproach. All the battle scenes which were done on indoor set, looked live, on location. They were tops, none finer.

Second, the filming was great. Every shot was perfect. Composition, lighting, and effects were all No. 1. They could be used as a national standard for excellence in cinema. Colors captured the audience. Golds, greens, silvers and blacks dominated every shot. Shining armor really shines, almost glaves.

Third is Merlin. Every actor was right for the part. Every performance was good. But Merlin, portrayed by Nicol Williamson, was flawless. That is the portrayal was flawless. Merlin himself was rather cracked. He was a klutz, he was a little slow in understanding some things. But he was Merlin the Wizard, and he held Arthur and the movie together.

As Merlin said, "That's it."

I say, that's entertainment. I give it a nine and nine-tenths. (10s don't exsist).

Sci-fi stereotype hinders success of novel

By JIM LAURENCIG Collegian Book Reviewer

A world where the government controls almost every aspect of day-to-day life—a world where the use of drugs is commonplace and even toothpaste has an addictive ingredient—this is the world portrayed in "The Tomorrow File" by Lawrence Sanders.

Sanders, the author of the enormously successful "The First Deadly Sin," has written a fine novel that has been largely overlooked by the public critics and alike.

There is an obvious reason for this slight. "The Tomorrow File" can be categorized under the least regarded of all genres—science fiction.

However, it is not only science fiction, but a good deal of science fact. Cloning, artificial insemination and mood-altering drugs will all be a part of the last 20 years of the century, as Sanders sees it.

Like George Orwell in "1984" and Anthony Burgess in "Clockwork Orange," Sanders uses language evolutions to reinforce his story. Money is called "love," pleasure is called "profit," and elderly people are known as "obsos," for obsolete.

The story is essentially that of intrigue occuring in the upper levels of governmental organizations such as the Department of Bliss, formerly the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The "objects" (people) in the book are all trying to make it in the bureaucratic tangle that the U.S. government has become. Unfortunately, few succeed.

Individuality is lost in this society. Men are called "ems," women are called "efs." "Objects" are designated by the conditions of their birth—"NM" for natural male, "AIM" for artificially inseminated male, and "C" for clone.

"The Tomorrow File" is a fine novel that works well on several levels. First, it has an intriguing use of language. Second, it works well as plain old science fiction.

Third, it is also a good mystery, with enough plot twists to keep everyone interested

Most of all, Sanders' view of the next 20 years is a scathing social commentary, made all the more scary by the fact that it is so believable.

Schickele offers music, satire tonight

Peter Schickele, also known as P.D.Q. Bach, accompanied by the Kansas City Philharmonic will be performing at 8 Friday night in McCain Auditorium.

Schickele, a master of musical satire, is an accomplished performer and composer who has written music and lyrics for the Broadway hit "Oh! Claiming to be a decendent of P.D.Q. Bach, who is supposedly the long lost son of Johann Bach, Schickele will present an array of P.D.Q.'s music.

"Concerto for Bassoon vs. Orchestra," a piece Schickele said catapulted the composer into obscurity, will be among the selections played during the Friday concert.

The 79-member Kansas City Philharmonic will be conducted by Marc Gottlieb, who is in his ninth season with the orchestra. Tickets for the performance are available at the McCain Auditorium box office.

By PETE ECKHOFF veteran studio performer whose vocal Collegian Reviewer credits include work with REO Speedwagon eleases coming out, and Kenny Loggins.

The producer, Jay Graydon, also added some great guitar work. This band is virtually unheard of, but deserves a listen.

—John O'Bannion's new self-titled LP is a great first effort. "O'Bannion" is patterned along the lines of veteran female singer Linda Rondstadt. O'Bannion provides only the vocals and didn't write any of the material, two trademarks of Rondstadt. If John can have half the success of Rondstadt he'll be doing okay.

O'Bannion does mostly up-tempo love songs, but also rocks a bit with the hit single "Love You Like I've Never Loved Before," and "Love is Blind."

—Former Doobie Brother leader Tom Johnston's second release is "Still Feels. Good." It leaves no doubt as to where the early Doobies' sound came from. Johnston has an easy-rocking style that makes up for his less than outstanding vocals. Helping out on the album are active Doobie Brothers—Cornelius Bumpus on sax, and Patrick Simmons with vocals.

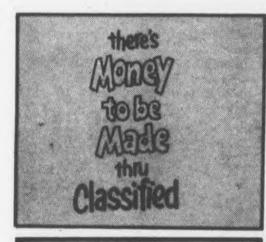

Johnston will probably never attain the heights he knew with the Doobies, but his work is still great to listen to, especially for those of you who may be disappointed with the post-Johnston Doobie Brothers.

Law could be savior for Kansas family farm

TOPEKA (AP) - Hailed as an effort to library at the Med Center, physical preserve the family farm, a bill overhauling the statutory restrictions on corporate ownership of Kansas farmland was signed into law Thursday by Gov. John Carlin.

The legislation, which takes effect July 1, marks the first change in the state's 50yearold limitations on corporate farming since the 1965 Legislature altered it.

However, the new law completely scraps the old statute and makes a sweeping revision. It prohibits corporations, trusts, limited corporate partnerships or corporate partnerships from owning or leasing agricultural land in Kansas.

But it specifically exempts family farm corporations and trusts, and certain authorized farm corporations and trusts.

THE BILL was among 13 bills signed by Carlin Thursday morning. They were passed by the Legislature before it recessed April 9.

Among those signed were four bills appropriating money for the operation of various state agencies. Two provide about $32 million for the Department of Corrections, the state prisons and other correctional institutions, and $19.3 million for the Department of Revenue in the fiscal year which begins in July.

Another provides more than $10 million in supplemental funding to numerous agencies for the remainder of the current fiscal year.

The final one provides about $11 million in funding over the next three fiscal years for capital improvement projects at Pittsburg State University, the University of Kansas Medical Center, the University of Kansas, and Wichita State University.

THE MONEY will permit replacement of Carney Hall at Pittsburg State, construction of a new utility steam tunnel at KU, a new

The farming bill does allow some corporations to acquire agricultural land for nonfarming operations such as future company expansion, and also exempts land used for feedlot operations.

Violations of the law would carry a fine up to $50,000 and could mean forced divestiture of the land within one year.

Other bills signed will:

-Provide courts with the authority to require defendants to repay some expenses for their counsel provided under the Aid to Indigent Defendants program.

Require the appointment of an investment officer to advise the Board of Trustees of the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System (KPERS) in the management of its funds.

-Change the law regarding licensing of social workers to require applicants be graduates of a social work program approved by the Behaviorial Sciences Regulatory Board. The bill deletes a requirement that an applicant be a graduate from a program approved by the Council on Social Work Education.

-Shorten the time in which a hearing on an adoption case may be conducted. The bill permits it within 60 days of the filing of proper adoption papers. Current law does not permit a hearing any sooner than 30 days after filing.

-Update the standards for construction and renovation of government and school buildings to conform with the lastest specifications on accessibility for the physically handicapped.

Computer use:

By NATALIE BULLOCK personal hygiene and work.

Collegian Reporter Computers can be used for figuring bank statements, developing new chemicals and playing games. The Department of Family Economics has a computer program to teach students, known as the Family Resource Game.

The computer receives information from a pair of students about their hypothetical family's finances. From the computer output, the students make financial management decisions in the Home Management Lab class.

The game, developed by Sherman Hanna, assistant professor in family economics, in 1979, focuses on management of money and time resources, which involve sleeping,

"The original idea of this game is to provide an elaborate case study to get an insight of decision making in family financial planning and other aspects involved," Hanna said.

The game was designed for students in the management class, Hanna said, not for persons in a real-life situation.

In order for the output, which appears on a video-display screen and on computer printout, to be more realistic, student research determines monetary values. For example, Hanna said, students must choose a home, if they decide to buy a house, that will be appropriate for the family's size and their budget.

THE GAMES LASTS for five years in terms of the computer program, Hanna

Hanna's Family Resource Game allows students to make hypothetical decisions

At the end of each computer year the computer prints out the budget deficit or profit. The students must then make financial management decisions. Students must decide whether to pay bills, invest any profit or save it.

The computer makes mathematical calculations concerning mortage rates, loan interest rates, utility payments, insurance payments and loan payments.

These payments are computed so students spend time making financial decisions rather than working on mathematical problems, Hanna said.

THE GAME REPRESENTS the economy

accurately, Hanna said. After each computer year is completed, the computer accounts for inflation in food costs, energy, clothing and other areas affected by in-flation, Hanna said. These increases must be taken into consideration by the students when planning their budget.

Student reaction to the game varies, according to Elizabeth Davis, assistant professor of family economics and intructor of the management class.

Some students find it complicated, others find it time-consuming, she said. Their enjoyment of the game depends on whether they "get into" play acting.

"The computer simulates make-believe," Davis said. "The students must put something into it to get something out of it."

Ex-defensive player gets chance to call signals

By T.J. ELLIS Collegian Reporter

Last fall Stan Weber was one of K-State's top defensive backs, a non-starter who was credited with 47 tackles and one interception in a secondary which led the nation in pass defense.

That was last year. But if your're planning on attending the annual Purple-White scrimmage Saturday, don't look for Weber to be playing safety—or anywhere on defense.

This spring coach Jim Dickey and his staff have moved Weber to quarterback, where he has been platooning with five other players, including Darrell Dickey and Doug Bogue, last year's top two signal callers.

But Weber, who might very well be K-State's most gifted athlete, is no stranger to the position. As a senior at Goddard High School, he was the state's consensus all-state quarterback, passing for 1,280 yards and nine touchdowns and rushing for 784 yards. He was no slouch as a defensive back, either, intercepting five passes.

HE EXCELLED IN other sports, too, being named second-team all-state in basketball, along with being one of the sunflower state's top baseball prospects.

But Weber wanted to play football in college, and so he came to K-State, although he wasn't recruited strictly as a quarterback.

"When K-State recurited me I really had no idea where they would put me," Weber said. "They recruited me more as an athlete. The coaches knew I could play both ways; it was just up to them to put me where they felt they needed me most.

"It's a lot easier to play defensive back in your first year than quarterback. You very rarely see freshman quarterbacks nowadays come right in from high school and play on the college level. Quarterbacking in college ball is pretty complicated. That's why I played defense right off—it's a lot easier to pick up."

THE SWITCH FROM safety to quarterback this spring really didn't surprise Weber. What did surprise him, though, was the minimal amount of time he has spent on the defensive side this spring.

As a result, Weber will only see action at quarterback Saturday in the Purple-White scrimmage, which gets underway at 1:30 p.m. in KSU Stadium. Tickets are priced at $3 for adults and $1 for students.

"Last fall in practice I was playing both positions," Weber said. "Then halfway through the season the coaches just had me playing defense all the time.

"Coming back this spring, I really didn't know where they would put me. I thought maybe they might move me over to quarterback because it's really hard to get away from quarterbacking for a long period of time. It's been over a year since I've played quarterback in a game-like situation so it was important for me to get the feel for it back this spring.

"Even if I am going to play defense next fall, which I really don't know for sure what's going to happen, I have gained a lot of experience this spring."

IF WEBER HAD his choice of positions, he'd probably pick quarterback, but he's mostly concerned about playing where he can help the team the most.

"Playing quarterback you have to learn quite a bit," Weber said. "That's why you really can't be away from it for a long time—you get rusty fast. But I like playing quarterback.

"Right now, though, we have a lot of good quarterbacks. The most important thing to me right now is to help the team and be as good as I possibly can. If they need me to play quarterback and I play a lot at quarterback, then that would be fine, but if it calls to play defense, that's fine."

That doesn't seem likely anymore. Apparently Weber has made his presence known. "Stan Weber will never play defense here again," coach Jim Dickey said. "In high school he was a wishbone quarterback so he didn't throw very much, but he's made the adjustment."

Bramlage shoots for triple crown at Drake Relays

K-State's men's track team will make their final and perhaps most difficult stop on the Midwest Relays circuit this weekend when it travels to Des Moines, Iowa to compete in the Drake Relays.

Attention will be focused on the javelin, where senior Joe Bramlage will set his sights on the triple crown, (victories at Texas, Kansas and Drake). It's been twenty-one years since anyone has been able to win a triple crown in the javelin. In 1959 and 1960 Bill Alley from Kansas accomplished the feat.

It's a bird, it's a plane—no it's a Frisbee.
Frisbees will invade the air space above
Memorial Stadium this weekend as the Ultimate Intramural Frisbee Tournament gets underway Saturday at 9 a.m. with finals Sunday at 1 p.m.

The tournament, according to Mark Stiles, who teaches the University for Man's Frisbee class, was set up to see if there was enough interest in Frisbee to form a league. If the tournament is successful, a Frisbee league will be set up and structured like other intramural sports.

Evidently, enough interest was generated for the tournament because there are 13 teams, divided into three pools of four to five teams, ready for action.

Stiles said at first people started calling other people to get teams together and eventually 13 teams, composed of 12-15 players, were formed.

THE TOURNAMENT will have the teams playing the game of Ultimate, which requires seven players.

Ultimate is played on a field approximately the size of a football field with the teams lining up on opposite ends.

The beginning of the game is marked by the toss of a coin and the throwing of the Frisbee from one team to another.

The object of the game is to score by moving the Frisbee downfield throwing it from person to person. The player with the Frisbee can move on a pivot foot, as in basketball, while looking for a teammate to pass the Frisbee to. Each player has 15 seconds to pass the Frisbee.

Action continues until a point is scored. This is achieved by catching the Frisbee in the end zone with both feet firmly planted.

"The game of Ultimate is really like a cross between soccer and basketball," Stiles said. "If the other team intercepts the Frisbee the play continues—just like in soccer. Pivoting on one foot is what makes the game similar to basketball."

THE TOURNAMENT'S winner will receive an intramural championship T-

Even tough Frisbee is new to the intramural scene, it has been prevalent in town for about four years, Stiles said. A Frisbee club has just recently become affiliated with the University and has 25 members.

The club has no sponsors so members must pay for their own expenses when they travel to tournaments.

The tournaments the club attends are more numerous in the fall than in the spring, with the biggest of these being the September invitational in Springfield, Mo.

"It's becoming a pretty big tournament," Stiles said. "They get two or three of the top teams there and they're beginning to really pick and choose who they invite."

"Surprisingly, more and more people play Frisbee. It's beginning to get real popular," he said.

'Cats sign 5th high school cager

K-State landed its third blue-chipper from the Chicago area and its fifth high school recruit of the year Thursday when it signed Lafayette Watkins, a 6-6, 185-pounder from Julian Percy High School.

Watkins, who chose K-State over DePaul, Illinois and Bradley, averaged 24 points, 11 rebounds and six assists last year, and shot 54 percent from the field and 82 percent from the free throw line.

He joins Kenny Williams and Parker Laketa, both Chicago area players, Neal Degner and Eddie Elder as K-State signees. Wildcat coach Jack Hartman now has one scholarship player over the NCAA limit, meaning a player will have to go, which by all indications will be John Marx, a 6-9 sophomore who saw limited action this past year.

two stops so far this season, winning at Texas (250-3) and last week at Kansas (249-10). Track coach Mike Ross, a winner himself at Drake 12 years ago in the javelin, is confident Bramlage can pull it off.

"We've logged quite a few seconds in this event at Drake," Ross said. "You know the people who've been at Texas and Kansas will be there, but it seems someone else manages to come in and surprise you. However, I think Joe has a good chance to win it."

K-State will also have some strong entrants in two other field events. Freshman Veryl Switzer finished second last week at Kansas in the long jump at 25-4, and Doug Lytle notched a third place finish in the pole vault at 17-0.

Weight man Ray Bradley won't be competing at Drake, instead he will return home (Trenton, N.J.) to compete at the Penn Relays. Bradley was extended an invitation to compete in both the shot put and discus.

K-state will also be entered in several relays; the sprint medley, distance medley and the mile.

'Cat golf team sits in 9th place at Drake Relays Heading into the third day of play at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa, the K-State men's golf team will try to better its ninth place standing.

The men fell into that spot after the first two rounds of action Wednesday and Thursday.

More than 30 teams are involved in the meet. After 36 holes, Nebraska is in first place with a team total of 612. Iowa is one stroke behind at 613. Missouri stands third at 620 second round Thursday and has a two-round total of 158. Scott Johnson and Brad Johnson both shot 80s in the second round for two-day totals of 162 and 163, respectively.

Jon Carlson has a two-day total of 165 and Tracy Faulkner has a 168 two-round total to round out the K-State four-man crew.

Mark Maness of Nebraska and Jeff Johnson of Missouri are tied for low score at 146 after two rounds. Minnesota-Duluth's Lee Kolquist is third with a 147.

Baltimore reached White Sox starter Francisco Barrios early in the nightcap, scratching out two runs in the opening frame as Ken Singleton drove home one run with a grounder and John Lowenstein another with a single.

Barrios, 1-0, yielded seven hits in 61-3 innings of work, walking two and striking out one. Kevin Hickey worked just one-third of an inning of relief before Ed Farmer came on to finish up, notching his second save.

Weekend sports

Baseball

After a two-week layoff because of rainouts last weekend, K-State's baseball team returns to action in doubleheaders against Nebraska at 1 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at Frank Myers Field.

The Wildcats, 4-8 in the Big 8 and 25-17 overall, will try to escape the league basement against the second place Cornhuskers, who are 7-5 in league play and 27-14 overall.

Coach Dave Baker is well aware of what the Nebraska baseball team is capable of "The last three or four years they've been a pretty solid baseball team," Baker said. "They're big, strong, physical people.

"They don't have a lot of great team speed," he added. "They like to put the ball in play, a lot of hit and run."

In addition to the Huskers' offensive capabilities, Baker said Nebraska is a "good solid defensive ball club and they do have excellent pitching."

Nebraska coach John Sanders will send four right-handers to the mound. Steve Gehrke (4-4, 4.11) and Bob Sebra (6-1, 4.12) will pitch Saturday. Anthony Kelley (2-3, 3.59) and Mike Harlander (4-1, 4.10) will start Sunday.

One of Kelley's wins came in a no-hit shutout against Oklahoma.

K-State's pitching plans may deviate from past games, Baker said. Doug Able, Mike Johnson and Louie Trujillo are expected to start, but Mickey Fleeman may not.

Between games Sunday, there will be bubble gum-blowing and tobacco-spitting contests.

Softball

Even though K-State's women's softball team is ranked seventh going into the Big 8 Tournament that begins today and finishes Saturday in Stillwater, Okla., the Wildcats are looking for some upsets.

"It's to be expected," coach Charlotte

"It's to be expected," coach Charlotte Michal said. "They've never been ranked before, but I hope we can pull off some surprises down there."

To accomplish her goal of pulling off some upsets, Michal said the women would have to play "good mental ball."

"We'll have to be on top of things and play excellent ball with no errors all the way through."

The Wildcats, whose first-round opponent is Iowa State, will have tough teams to contend with if they keep winning in the double-elimination tournament. Missouri, seeded No. 1, and Oklahoma State, seeded No. 2, have been ranked nationally throughout the season.

The Wildcats will use the offensive skills of Taryn Bachis, who has a .352 average, and third baseman Pat Howard (.257) to combat the Cyclones in the contest scheduled for 10:45 a.m. today.

Defensively, they will rely on the pitching of Janel Anderson and the relief work of Sherrie Johnston.

Women's Track

Today and Saturday, the K-State women's track team will be competing in a meet they have been known to do well in—the Drake Relays.

Coach Barry Anderson will be taking 11 team members to the meet, one in which the Wildcats have set school records and performed well in the past.

As for this year Anderson said his team's strong points will be the two-mile relay, composed of Wanda Trent, Janel LeValley, Sherry Thomas and Deb Pihl; the 1500-meter run which features Pihl; and the discus and shot put which has Janice Stucky. Anderson said long jumpers Annette Sittenauer and Kim Hagger were also doing well.

As for the competition at the meet, Anderson said the Big 8 schools would probably give the 'Cats the most com-

"Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas will be the better teams there," he said. "There will also be club teams to add to the competition."

Although there will be teams from all over the nation there, ones which Anderson labels as good, he said his Wildcats are ready.

"We're at the time in the season when everyone's in good shape and is performing well," Anderson said. "It should be a good meet for us."

The rest of the team not going to the Relays will be competing in Lawrence on Sunday against Kansas, Nebraska and Wichita State.

Women's Tennis

Playing their last match of the season, the K-State women's tennis team will compete with the University of Kansas in Lawrence Sunday at 1:00 p.m.

The Jayhawks defeated the 'Cats 9-0 last fall. More recently, in the Big 8 Championships this spring, K-State was also defeated by KU.

"I think they'll (K-State) do somewhat better this time," coach David Hacker said. "It's the last match of the season for both teams."

Tammie Peugh will lead the squad in No. 1 singles with Brenda Bennet playing at No. 2. Candie Gwin will see action at the No. 3 spot; Kathy Manning takes the No. 4 position. Kris Breisch and Sherry Nelson will follow up at No. 5 and 6.

Rugby

K-State's rugby team will compete in the Western Championships in Denver, Colo.

The men, who have a 10-3 record, advanced to the tournament by winning the Western Regional collegiate playoffs last weekend in Kansas City.

Only eight teams in the country remain in contention for the national championship. If K-State wins Saturday, it will travel to Dayton, Ohio with the three other regional winners to decide the national title.

The K-State men's soccer club closes its season Saturday and Sunday when it travels to the 16-team Scanlon Tournament in

The men are comming off a third place showing in last weekend's Big 8 Championships in Manhattan. Colorado won the tournament followed by Oklahoma State. Kansas finished fourth.

Women's Golf

The K-State women's golf team will travel to Iowa City, Iowa to tee off in the Iowa Invitational today and Saturday.

Poll shows public has positive feelings about Reagan's job

NEW YORK (AP) - More than two out of · five Americans say Ronald Reagan has accomplished more in the opening months of his administration than past presidents, an Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

As Reagan moves toward the end of his first 100 days in office, the public has a generally high opinion of his work as president.

The assassination attempt March 30-and Reagan's handling of it-apparently added to his store of goodwill with the public.

The latest AP-NBC News poll is based on telephone interviews with 1,604 adults across the country April 13-14.

More than two out of five people-42 percent-think Reagan has accomplished more than past presidents in these first months in office. Forty-six percent said his accomplishments have been little different from other presidents and 7 percent said he has done less.

Two-thirds of those questioned said Reagan's work had been about what they had expected of him, 27 percent said he had been done better than they had expected and 5 percent said he had done worse.

Rioters battle police in support of Sands

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Hundreds of rioters battled hundreds of police in Belfast and London Sunday in support of jailed IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands, reported at a skeletal 98 pounds in the 57th day of a hunger strike. Prison officials denied widespread rumors he had died.

About 500 Sands' backers demonstrated at a London subway station and then marched toward Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's 10 Downing Street residence.

Police forced the demonstrators into a street behind the posh Savoy Hotel and split them into two groups. After scuffles and shouting, the demonstrators dispersed. Thirty-eight people were reported arrested and three ambulances carried away an undetermined number of injured.

British police warned members of Parliament and other public figures to be wary of a possible letter-bomb campaign by Irish Republican Army guerrillas.

They issued the warning after Barry Porter, a 41-year-old Conservative Party legislator, received an incendiary device through the mail Saturday. The device did not go off even though he started to open it.

In Belfast, rioters pitched firebombs at a bus depot in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district of Belfast, then hundreds of youths broke away from some 6,000 people attending a rally for Sands and hurled bricks, stones and lead pipes at a fortified police base.

British troops with armored vehicles moved into the post in the heavily Roman Catholic Andersontown district but made no immediate attempt to disperse the rioters.

Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, the Rev. Daniel Berrigan and Marie Howe, a state legislator from Massachusetts were in the crowd.

The rally came at the end of three-mile march led by Sands' sister, Marcella Kelly, who held aloft a poster-sized photograph of her brother.

The IRA quoted doctors as saying the 27-year-old Sands nearly died Saturday night at Northern Ireland's Maze prison after rejecting a last-minute mediation effort. His family was at his bedside and said after a visit Sunday morning he was "extremely weak."

If Sands dies, the IRA has pledged a new terror campaign which Protestant militant, onld mean civil war in this Britishruled province torn by 11½ years of sectarian violence.

Hundreds of police were on duty in Belfast to patrol a mass demonstration by IRA sympathizers.

Parents, city officials plan programs to keep Atlanta's children from harm

ATLANTA (AP) — Parents and city officials are hoping that cityrun day camps, with color-coded T-shirts for each age group, will mean a safe summer for Atlanta's school children and keep the grim list of slain young blacks to 25.

The alternative for parents and children worried by the string of 25 unsolved slayings and the disappearance of one young black since July 1979 is a long, hot summer indoors.

In a program that will boost its summer recreation budget by almost $1 million, the city will operate 47 closely supervised day camps with space for about 33,000 children aged 6 to 15.

THE DAY CAMPS, which will be open from 7:30 a.m. until 7:30 p.m. weekdays, will be held in existing recreational facilities around the city, which is dotted with parks.

"We can't do it all ourselves," cautioned the city's "Safe Summer" coordinator, Richard Monteilh, who said federal funds were available for about $400,000 of the program's nearly $1 million added cost. "We can ensure their safety, but without more help by the private sector, we can't be as extensive in the range of our programs."

The camps will strive to provide one counselor for every 15 children and one pofessional staffer for every 45 children, Monteilh said. DAY CAMPERS—blacks as well as whites—will be issued two T-shirts each, color-coded to designate their age group and printed with their name, group number and camp, said Roma Harper, Atlanta's deputy commissioner of parks and recreation.

"It won't be a prison," said Harper, "but we are going to insulate the children so they can play without fear of any strangers."

Parents are expected to take their children to and from the day camps. In those areas where children must use city-provided transportation, adult supervisors will take attendance at the pickup sites, on the buses and at drop-off points, Harper said.

Strict supervision is planned at the day camps, and supervisors will take attendance three times a day. If a child misses a roll call, his or her parents will be called immediately, the deputy comprivate sources.

IN ADDITION to the city-run program, about 14,000 youngsters are expected to attend supervised programs in 55 recreation facilities operated by non-profit agencies.

Summer school or vacations should occupy most of the remaining 9,000 of the 56,000 children in the 6-to-15 age group in public schools, based on figures supplied by the Atlanta Board of Education.

City officials say additional supervised recreation programs probably will be needed for about 4 000 youths

To assist the city, the American Camping Association has agreed to find 2,000 private camp slots in the southeastern United States for Atlanta children. But officials said it has not been determined how many slots would be donated and how many must be funded through

Single-engine plane crashes near Highway 24

A single-engine Cessna Skyhawk crashed Sunday afternoon shortly after takeoff from a private airport near the intersection of Highway 24 and Riley County 895, about eight miles northwest of Manhattan.

Passenger Verona Tiffany of Riley, who is pregnant, was taken to Memorial Hospital for overnight observation. A hospital spokesman reported her to be in stable condition.

There were no serious injuries to the pilot, John Calvert of Tulsa, Okla., or the other passengers: Romana Zeller of Manhattan; Steven Tiffany, husband of the injured woman; and their sons Shawn, 3, and

No K-State students were involved in the incident.

The plane crashed after the pilot turned into the wind to avoid hitting power lines near the east end of the runway. The plane lost airspeed and crashed, according to Sgt. Gene Yarnall of the Riley County Police Department.

"He lost his lift," Yarnall said. "The plane began to go down, and he was unable to pull it out."

He estimated the plane had a groundspeed of 40 miles per hour at the time of the crash.

The plane came down on its nose, then caught a wheel on the ground and flipped over,

Jewish activists take beatings in 'hostile' Ukranian capital

KIEV, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Jewish activists say they are suffering a new wave of beatings and arrests in this Ukrainian capital. "The atmosphere is hostile, very hostile. Our situation is similar to a wartime underground," one of them said.

Jewish sources, asking not to be identified for fear of retribution, said 195,000 of Kiev's 2.2 million people are Jews, and that 7,000 of them are "refuseniks"—those who have applied to emigrate but have been denied permission.

A half-dozen refuseniks interviewed here said they and others were subject to periodic harassment, including beatings, arrests and dismissal from their jobs.

"Most often the beatings are at night, when no one is around," said one refusenik. He said the violence was carried out in collusion with authorities.

"The Ukraine has long been noted for anti-Semitism of the most candid kind," he said. "If we don't get permission to leave the country, our lives are finished. That goes for our children and grandchildren too,"

Kiev refuseniks said 90 percent of those who apply to emigrate are fired from responsible jobs and support themselves with lesser work.

Several said they had been told by KGB secret police officers they would never be allowed

"One KGB agent told me I would never be permitted to leave because relations with America are worse, and although we are not guilty, we must pay for this," one said.

"We do nothing illegal. Nothing they can punish us for. But they charge us with made-up hooliganism."

The refuseniks estimate that 600,000 Jews live in the Ukraine, to which Jewish settlement was largely restricted by the czars from 1791 to 1917, the year of the Bolshevik Revolution. Jews, Armenians and ethnic Germans are the only groups regularly allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union, although refusenik and diplomatic sources say the number of Jews allowed to leave has dropped since November 1979. About 51,000 Jews emigrated in 1979, a record, but the level dropped to 21,000 in 1980, and is not expected to exceed 15,000 this year, based on January-March figures.

Kansas Highway Patrol Trooper Jerry Downie said.

The plane is owned by Huston Lumber Company of Tulsa, Okla., and is licensed in Oklahoma.

Aviation Administration Federal spokesman Ray Miller, Wichita, said there will probably be an investigation of the crash on Monday.

There are a thousand clowns in everyone, but to discover them, persons must open up and let them tumble out, said the Rev. David Fly, Episcopal Campus Minister, during last weekend's "School for Clowns" sponsored by the Episcopal Campus Ministry in Manhattan.

When that happens, persons can begin to look at themselves, their experiences and spirituality "with a thousand different eyes," Fly said. The four weekend sessions on clowning were conducted by Fly and Tom Woodward, Episcopal Chaplain at the University of Wiconsin. This is the third school for clowns that Fly has conducted in Manhattan. He has conducted seven schools in Kansas City, and has conducted schools for clowns nationwide.

FLY AND WOODWARD had never conducted a school for clowns. A couple of months age Fly decided to sponsor a clown school and invited Woodward to help him. Twenty persons attended the school. For $10, the participants were supplied with clown makeup for the Saturday event, were given three white juggling balls and taught to juggle.

Saturday, the participants went to the streets of Manhattan to clown in groups or individually for more than two hours.

"One of the goals of my weekend is not to produce professional clowns...what my goal is, is for people to bring out their sense of clown, their sense of play, their sense of folly," he said.

He said he sees one of the roles of a clown as "to inject a bit of chaos into our sense of order.

"We take our order so seriously that we forget that we're the ones who created it, and that we can get up on top of it and look at it, and laugh at ourselves and change," Fly said.

'Dallas' clan leader dies in sleep

LOS ANGELES — Jim Davis, the gravelly-voiced actor who played a lifetime of starring and supporting roles before hitting the jackpot as the tough-as-nails Jock Ewing on the "Dallas" television series, died in his sleep here Sunday, a spokesman for the series said.

Davis, who was in his 70s, died at his Northridge home, where he had been recovering from abdominal surgery. His wife of 36 years, Blanche, was at his side, said Lorimar Productions spokesman Tom Bishop.

Bishop said Davis had been on the job filming "Dallas" until late last month, when he underwent surgery for a perforated ulcer.

FBI denies CBS allegations

WASHINGTON — Evidence evaluated by the FBI points to six members of the Salvadoran national guard as the killers of four U.S. churchwomen in violence-torn El Salvador last December, CBS News reported Sunday night.

The FBI denied the report, though it said it had forwarded an "evaluation" to the government of El Salvador through the U.S. State Department.

"What we forwarded does not refer to suspects; does not point a finger or name those responsible. That evidence is not conclusive in terms of identifying the individual, the individuals or the group responsible," said FBI spokesman Roger Young.

In San Salvador, a spokesmen for the national guard said his organization had received no new information about the case. He denied any suggestion that the it knew some of its soldiers were responsible for the killings.

Sale of radar planes delayed

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker said Sunday that President Reagan's plan to sell advanced radar planes to Saudi Arabia probably will not be submitted to Congress until mid-summer and that the lawmakers won't decide the issue until fall at the earliest.

Baker (R-Tenn.) said Reagan agreed to a delay to give Congress a chance to give its advice before a final package is developed.

But Baker said "it's not pure coincidence" that the debate and vote on the sale of the AWACS planes will come after June 30 elections in Israel, which has strongly criticized the sale as a threat to its security.

In Israel, at the regular Sunday cabinet meeting in Jerusalem, the government repeated its position that it would "totally oppose" the sale. But Israeli sources said no active steps were authorized because the government of Prime Minister Menachem Begin did not want to get into a confrontation with the Reagan administration now.

Prince Charles takes polo fall

SYDNEY, Australia — Prince Charles fell off his horse Sunday for the third time in six weeks, but remounted and scored a goal for his polo team. Nonetheless, Queen Elizabeth II, Prince Philip and Charles' flancee, Lady Diana Spencer, were reported worried he might not make it to the altar.

The 32-year-old heir to the British throne ignored the advice of many of his subjects to play the third invitational match of his Australian tour at Sydney's Warwick Farm racecourse.

While galloping alongside an opponent in a fight for the ball, Charles fell over his horse's head, grabbed wildly for the reins and toppled over onto his backside. The prince lay flat on his back for several moments before rising to his feet, limping back to the horse and remounting to score a goal.

Rubber workers reject expansion

TOPEKA — A spokesman for the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. plant in Topeka said Sunday that plant officials will continue to pursue a contract change needed to expand the facility, despite rejection of the change by a majority of Goodyear members in the United Rubber Workers (URW) union.

Union members at Goodyear plants in Danville, Va., and Jackson, Mich., rejected the proposed change Sunday, pushing to more than 50 percent the number of URW workers at Goodyear plants that have

Under the change, which already had been approved by URW Local 307 in Topeka and the union's national policy committee, the plant would have adopted a seven-day work schedule and some union workers would have done jobs outside their crafts within the plant.

"Dallas" writers and producers now have a ready-made plot for the new season next fall. Be ready for the rain of "Who socked Jock" bumper stickers and T-shirts. There's a chance for rain tonight, too, with highs in the mid-80s today.

Opinions

Do we need the coliseum?

On Thursday, Student Senate will vote on whether to continue plans for a proposed coliseum.

A 1979 referendum supported by students pledged $2.5 million in student fees to the new building.

Other University funding projects have taken higher priority than the coliseum and this trend will probably continue throughout the decade.

Many capital improvements are needed in various areas of education before a coliseum can be constructed using funds secured from the Legislature.

Realizing this, the University Foundation, supported by the administration, has called on students to share more of the financial burden for the coliseum, with some administrators seeking one-third of the cost of the building to be paid with student fees.

If supported by Student Senate, the coliseum issue would force students to pay even more for an education that has recently been slapped with a 22 percent tuition increase.

Taking these factors into consideration, students and student senators should seek opinions from each other and seriously consider whether a costly addition such as the coliseum is actually needed at K-State.

Lifting the embargo

President Reagan fulfilled a campaign promise Friday when he lifted the embargo on grain shipments to the Soviet Union. The embargo had been imposed in January of 1980 by former President Jimmy Carter to protest the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The lift of the embargo should directly benefit farmers in Kansas and other midwestern states. Although the Soviets have had to look elsewhere for grain imports in the last year, it is likely that they will gladly return to the American market.

In light of the benefit that is derived from lifting the embargo, the question remains whether the United States should use embargos to apply political pressure to countries whose aims we find "unacceptable." A historical review would show that this embargo, like previous embargos, had little effect on the course of action that the Soviets wanted to take. The Soviets were able to purchase all the grain they needed and were willing to do without if necessary. In the meantime, American farmers were the ones who suffered when wheat prices dropped.

Perhaps an embargo is a sign to the free world that the United States condemns Soviet expansionism. It does little, however, to actually prevent the Red Army from rolling into Afghanistan or Poland.

High-flying criticism

A flight instructor of mine once told me that he delighted in helping people get over their fears about flying.

The way he would do this, he said, was to take them up at midnight after the first Michigan snow when the air was totally still and all was deafeningly quiet.

Somewhere recently, someone decided it would be cute to get on the FAA's case about the potential for mid-air collisions. More has been said, more criticism doled out for public consumption in the past six months than in the past decade.

IT IS UNFORTUNATE that the public was not informed on a mass scale about the problems to begin with-unfortunate for the public and the industry. Getting more people concerned, at least theoretically, should help the government see its way to update computers-predominantly IBM 360s, at least 15 years out of date in design.

But the criticism-much of it by network news and newspapers-takes its toll on the flying public: An unjust, ill-informed public, which gets its information from media incapable of handling the subject matter in perspective.

All that midnight work shot to hell by panic and misinformation, in other words.

It is unfortunate that the computer equipment is out of date.

Unfortunately for the government, government support-not the government's FAA, or the FAA's engineers-is to blame.

THE OTHER SIDE of the coin is an interesting study. Despite unbelievably bad working conditions, pay, and equipment, the FAA's "record" and the training and expertise of air traffic controllers is nothing short of phenomenal.

Most mid-air collisions happen because of pilot error. In talking with one of the members of the Dallas-Fort Worth air traffic control staff recently, I was amazed to learn just how little some pilots know about their aircraft and air traffic control procedures.

Dallas-Fort Worth, it must be noted, within the radius of the approach VORs, is the busiest airspace in the world.

Some, he said, will get on the microphone and BS about their white-wall tires, or the health of their grandmother, the recent trip to New York, or the wife's pregnancy.

PART OF THIS incompetence is attributable to relaxed FAA standards for acquiring a pilot's license. It used to be that the person would have to spin to get the license. Now, you just have to land the thing somewhere in the general vacinity of one of the runways.

Air traffic controllers are trained in two ways: With and without computer interpretation. With the computer filter, the material on the scope is clear, labeled with aircraft I.D., and flight plan information. The computer even labels which aircraft belong to which controller. Without, the scope reads all the fuzz off the ground, and the aircraft have to be labeled with plastic "boats" marked with grease pencils. The controller has to memorize which aircraft are Minor computer failures occur on the average of three times a week. The whole computer goes down about once a week. When that happens, it takes approximately 60 seconds to lay the scope flat, break out the grease pencils, and switch to the broad-band. Of course, the controller still has to keep track of the 15 or 20 aircraft that are his during that time, and still has to call the shots.

The situation is frightening, but not enough to make me stop flying. The air traffic controllers are highly trained, but just as frightened. The system is good but the working conditions atrocious and getting worse. The FAA's employees, fortunately for the public, are much better than the FAA's sponsor.

Promotion disgusting

the Union Once again Programming Council has shown a complete lack of taste and responsibility in promoting its films.

Earlier this semester, the Assassin game encouraged mock violence even though there is a serious problem with violent crime and rape existing in the community. Now they used a tank-provided gratis by the National Guard-as a promotional vehicle for the movie "Apocalypse Now." A member of the guard maintains the tank was there for recruiting purposes. Either way, it is disgusting to see a University office and the military walking hand in hand-for its benefit and at our expense.

K-State to help train staff for new Wolf Creek plant

State University and Kansas Gas & Electric Co. (KG&E) to train the operating staff of the company's new Wolf Creek nuclear power plant, will be signed by officials from the three institutions today at a ceremony in Burlington.

The program, which is the first of its kind in Kansas, will include classes in advanced mathematics, science, engineering technology and nuclear engineering, Ted Wischropp, instructor in Continuing Education, said. Those involved in the program can earn a total of 64 credit hours, which can be applied to an engineering technology degree at K-State, he said.

Emporia State faculty members will teach the advanced math and sciences courses and K-State instructors will teach the remaining courses, he said.

Professors from both universities will travel to the Wolf Creek plant site to teach the courses. No additional faculty or staff

An agreement between K-State, Emporia members are expected to be hired for the program, he said.

The program is designed to meet the requirements of the Institute of Nuclear Power Operations to train "anyone who is actually dealing with the plant itself," Wischropp said.

The two-year program, which will begin June 1, is set up in eight-week sessions. Between the sessions, on-the-job training will be provided for the employees, he said.

About 20 plant personnel are expected to participate in the program, completely funded by KG&E, he said.

Plans for the program began in August when KG&E proposed the idea to the two universities, he said.

Wischropp said the program "will be a good opportunity for utilities and state institutions to work together." He added it will also provide instructors a chance to see how the power plant will actually operate.

"There are appropriate and inappropriate moments to move into someone's space," he said.

Saturday evening, the group discussed the role of the clown in relation to religion.

There are many persons in the Bible that were considered "clowns," Fly said, and Jesus was the "primary" one.

"I think the clown has integrity," Woodward said, and God can work through the clown.

FLY SAID THE role of the circus clown is a failure that is celebrated by the audience.

People see the clown fail and say "That's me! I do that all the time," he said. "People need to understand that failure is a part of the circus.

"I've seen people destroyed by all this success stuff," he said. "He (the clown) will allow us to laugh and cry," and "those are incredibly important feelings that are so often lost."

Another aspect of a clown is "the child who has never grown up—at least in the eyes of the world," Fly said. "The clown holds onto some of the most precious characteristics of being a child,"

Fly said. Three particular characteristics are the explorer, discoverer and uncoverer. A discoverer finds "beauty in the common place," he said. The uncoverer is a children's characteristic that most adults try to deny. According to Fly, the "clown and child help us to see things that we might not want to see." The explorer is the "one that always looks for meaning," Fly said.

FLY HAD NOT clowned in public since he went to seminary. During K-State's registration in August 1975, when the temperature was 104 degrees, Fly was at Ahearn watching thousands of people

As Fly describes the process-a student gives his name, is given a number, and his name is gone. He is given a number; gives away his money, and finally gets to the door when he is approached by a group of "crisp, clean-cut members of a religious organization and they hit you with a religious survey."

As Fly watched, he thought, "you go to college and on the first day you lose your name, your money, your soul—the whole works!"

HE DECIDED everyone deserved two things after walking through the exit door—the right to laugh and the right to refreshment. Fly went back to his office, put on a white face, and in silence, set up a stand to dispense Kool-Aid.

Woodward also clowned around during registration when he was the chaplain at the University of Rochester.

"People come out of there really bummed out. I'm out there on the sidewalk with my handkerchief to dust off the sidewalk in front of people," he said.

Another of his tricks was to stop a discouraged woman, roll out a roll of toilet paper in front of her, offer his arm and prominade down the makeshift "red carpet."

Fly said the most "wonderful description" he has heard about a clown is from Black Elk, a Sioux Indian.

"The truth always comes into the world with both a laughing and weeping face, but it is always the same face that both laughs and weeps. Perhaps when people are in despair, they need to see the laughing face, and when they are too sure of being safe, then they need to see the weeping face."

Heart disease and stroke will cause half of all deaths this year.

Prof. Schickele's PDQ makes successful return to K-State

By DAMIEN SEMANITZKY Managing Editor

The predominant style of PDQ Bach's music can be best described by one word: Plagiarism.

From Mozart, to Handel, to Shostakovich to Tschaikovsky, for the avid concert-goer, an average PDQ Bach concert has more music by the greats than the average concert.

PDQ, rumor has it, was a long-lost son of J.S., until the "discovery" of some of his manuscripts in an old attic in a "box of seditious material" by "Prof." Peter

Collegian review

Schickele. Much has been published in a humorous vein on PDQ and Schickele, but the real story behind the story merits at least as much scrutiny.

THE REAL STORY behind the story has never been written in a form for public consumption. To make a long story short, Schickele studied composition at Juilliard in New York where he later became a member of the faculty.

In 1965 in Town Hall, the first public performance of PDQ's music was heard. Schickele said the whole thing started out as a joke-which became a rather profitable one at that. "I think that nobody expected, least of all me, that 16 years later it would still be going strong-five years at the most," Schickele said in an interview Friday.

At that historic performance, many went on the assumption that the discovery of PDQ's manuscripts was a legitimate discovery of the music of one of J.S.'s sons. Schickele said the performance was not billed as any more legitimate than it is now, but the posters and publicity was written so much like a legitimate Bach concert, people neglected to read the fine print.

SCHICKELE SAID the misconceptions still exist, though are not quite as prevalent because of the wide-spread publicity of the legend of PDQ. Misconceptions still, however, exist.

Some eight years ago at a typical PDQ performance in Heinz Hall in Pittsburgh, Pa., some, so disgusted by the joke, walked out. At Friday's performance, Schickele said one lady came backstage during intermission "incensed" that the concert was in fact not a concert of Bach music.

One of the wonderful things about Schickele's performances is that although the musical gags change, some things have remained the same. Sixteen years later, he still makes the same entrance, in most theaters, flying off the balcony, but in McCain, since that is technically unfeasible, swinging out from one of the light cages on the side of the auditorium.

SCHICKELE'S MUSIC is popular because it follows the one great principle that makes parody and mockery work: It must have substance to the slapstick. If a writer wishes to write a good parody of another writer's work, that writer must himself have the talent to write, or else the parody is little more than mudslinging.

To make a PDQ concert work, the orchestra, the conductor and the approach must be professional. Much of the music is very beautiful-how couldn't it be? If it's not stolen from the greats, it's based on the greats-usually with a few, a very few "differences," you might say.

In many ways, a PDQ Bach concert is really a caricature of a sincere concert. In many ways, PDQ concerts tell the story of a real-world performer, orchestra, stage manager, conductor, technician-the miseries, embarassments, etc.

AFTER SEVERAL YEARS in the professional symphonic world, it's easy to lose any naivete about the arts. Music is a field like any other-complete with backstabbing and hostilities like any other field. The average person who has been attending concerts regularly for a few years gets a taste of this non artistic aspect.

The anecdotes stretch far and wide, not only in this country, but around the world. Just as one example, there's the time that a certain pianist, who no longer frequents this particular city, was very difficult to work with. This particular piece he was performing opened with the horn section. The horn section decided to transpose the opening a half-step lower for the performance. Of course, the piano was a halfstep higher.

The caricature is very subtle, and is not designed for the average person to recognize.

FOR INSTANCE, the last piece on Friday's concert was the "Concerto for Bassoon vs. Orchestra," featuring Schickele on the bassoon. He entered with the instrument still in the case, assembled it during the orchestra's introduction, tore it apart during the orchestra's closing bars, and walked off the stage with the instrument in the case at the orchestra's final cadence.

One of the biggest long-running jokes in music circles, especially with ballet orchestras, is to time how fast the musicians can get their instruments packed and get out of the pit after the last note.

Another running joke throughout the performance was Marc Gottlieb, principle assistant conductor of the Kansas City Philharmonic, refusing to direct the orchestra unless he was paid more for the performance. Unfortunately, that little gag is more fact than humor in the music world because the Philharmonic has had its share of problems with recent contract negotiations.

One of the most interesting characters besides Schickele himself is the gentleman who plays the stage manager, William Walters. Stage managers generally are the people who are solely responsible for performers getting on the stage and through the performance without killing anyone.

"Echo Sonata for Two Unfriendly Groups of Instruments" profiles the harrowing experience of being the grease for the gears particularly well, with the winds com-plaining that the brass were not cooperating.

Schickele managed to steal six curtain calls and a standing ovation from the full house in McCain Auditorium Friday. It is unfortunate that many may not have been versed in music enough to catch all of the subtelties, but another nice thing about Schickele and PDQ—a big factor in the success of PDQ Bach—is that the gags work on all levels, directed toward both the professional and the non-musician.

Gene Atkins and Dave Bohenblust, seniors in chemical engineering, celebrate after tying a team from KU for first.

By CONNIE CLOWE Collegian Reporter

Sinking as fast as they could row, canoeists from 10 schools gathered under the glaring sun Saturday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir to participate in the eighth annual cement canoe race.

With a few exceptions, the races went smoothly, said Art Umble, senior in civil engineering, who helped in the coordination of the event.

"The wind was a big factor in today's races," Umble said.

"The wind can really take you off course," said Tim Parks, senior in civil engineering at the University of Missouri at Kansas City (UMKC) and third-year participant.

"We were sinking as fast as we could row," said one of the canoeists from the University of Nebraska at Lincoln.

Although the wind was the major problem of the day, it wasn't the only obstacle some teams encountered. The construction of the canoes also presented problems for some of the teams.

"We built it shallow on purpose," said Carl Gordon, senior in civil engineering from the University of Nebraska at Omaha. "Then, since it was heavy, when the back man started splashing around from the excitement, the canoe would start filling with water and everyone knows what happened next."

THE RACE COURSE consisted of six lanes with one full turn. The course, about 1,000 yards long, took an average of three minutes to complete, Jerome Zovne, associate professor of civil engineering, said. The canoes, weighing about 150 pounds, each carried two-person teams.

PM magazine covered the races, and expects to air the show sometime near the end of May or beginning of June.

"They came up while we were building our cance and did some filming, then spent the whole day here," Zovne said.

AFTER A LONG day of racing, the final tally had the University of Kansas (KU) taking the first place trophy with 44 points. K-State followed with 34 points and third place went to UMKC, with 13 points.

In the finals of the women's division, defending champion Bev Holm, senior in chemical engineering from UMKC and her new partner, Dominque Thienot, took first place with a time of 3:01. Texas A&M finished second and KU came in third.

The final race of the men's division kept the crowd excited. First the race was delayed because a crack was found in the middle of one of K-State's canoes. The canoe was dried off and patched with duct tape.

Then the race began. As the canoeists paddled down the course and around the turn, K-State and KU were neck-and-neck. It was a photo finish as the teams were declared co-winners. Third place in the men's division was taken by another KU

K-STATE CANOEISTS Gene Atkinson and Dave Bohenblust, both seniors in chemical engineering, said they were lucky throughout the race.

"I wasn't even scheduled to race with Dave," Atkinson said. "My partner never years," he said. "We've had lots of exshowed up, so I grabbed Dave this morperience together." showed up, so I grabbed Dave this mor-

"We hadn't ever practiced together and then the boat cracked right before the finals," Bohenblust said.

"Also, our canoe was a lot heavier than theirs," Atkinson said. "Ours weighs approximately 165 pounds and theirs weighs only aout 118 pounds."

KU's winning team consisted of Joe Herron, junior in civil engineering and Brian Barland, senior in civil engineering. The race on Saturday was Herron's first quality of workmanship; and a experience at cement canoe racing and Barland's fourth.

THE FASTEST time of the day was recorded by KU faculty member Dave Darwin, associate professor of civil engineering and Stan Rolfe, professor of engineering. This was the team's fifth year to win the faculty title, Darwin said.

"Stan and I have been paddeling for

A traveling trophy is presented each year to the team with the best canoe construction job. The canoes, constructed by the students, are judged before the races by the American Concrete Institute of Kansas City. This year's construction award went to the Kansas Technical Institute.

The judging is based on a design paper submitted by the teams, telling how the canoe was designed and the procedure used to build it; the actual constructon and the photographic poster display, showing how they worked on the canoe, said Gary Weidman, junior in civil engineering, who helped with the organization and construction of the K-State canoes.

BUILDING THE canoes took a lot of time and effort, Weidman said. All the time is volunteered by students who want to participate, he said.

"We put a lot of work and a lot of effort into building our canoe," Weidman said. "We put in 550 man hours altogether."

The canoes must by made of concrete and must be built so they can float when full of water. This is so they won't sink to the bottom of the lake during the race. Each canoe is tested before the race and if it doesn't pass the test, it's not allowed to be entered in the race, Weidman said.

"Somewhere at the bottom of the lake is South Dakota State's canoe," he said. "Last year they didn't pass the test and then lost it somewhere while playing in it."

and Stan Rolfe paddle for the finish line in the finals of the faculty division. Darwin and Rolfe not only won Kansas University faculty members Dave Darwin their division but also turned in the fastest time of the day.

Women's Track

K-State's women's track team came away from the Drake Relays with only one fourth place finish—the 3200-meter relay team with a time of 8:51.67.

Even though the women came away with one placing, coach Barry Anderson said his team was just "out of the money on a few things."

The mile relay team missed qualifying by 12 hundredths of a second and had to settle with a ninth-place finish. Wildcat shot putter Janice Stucky had a similar fate and ended up with a ninth-place finish.

At a meet held Sunday in Lawrence, members of the team who didn't travel to Drake competed against Nebraska and the University of Kansas.

First-place finishers for the 'Cats were Sherri Brogden in the 100 meter with a time of 12.4, Sheila Varga in the 3,000 meter in a time of 10:22.7, Beets Kolarik in the high jump with a height of 5-8, Sandra Suggs in the shot put with a put of 41-2 and Pat Daniels in the discus with a throw of 133-111/2.

Men's Tennis

The K-State men's tennis team came away from the Oklahoma Tournament last Thursday and Friday in Norman with nine straight losses.

The men lost to Oklahoma 9-0 Thursday, barely missing winning all three doubles matches.

Gary Hassenflu and Dave Krizman, the No. 1 doubles team, lost to Dennis Wall and Peter Smythe 7-6, 6-2. The No. 2 doubles, Jeff Henderson and Mike Goss, lost 6-3, 3-6, 6-3 to Mark Gustus and Rob Braver. The 'Cats Steve Webb and Matt Westfall were defeated 6-7, 6-1, 6-1 by Joey Braver and Wit Jones.

Singles action resulted in losses for all six K-State netters.

Friday's play against Iowa State concluded with the Wildcats being beaten 8-1. No. 2 singles Jeff Henderson pulled off the lone win for the 'Cats, defeating Doug Wenzel 6-1, 7-5.

Women's Tennis

In its last outing of the season, the K-State women's tennis team was defeated 7-2 in a dual against the University of Kansas Sunday at Lawrence.

The only winners for the 'Cats were the No. 4 single, Kathy Manning, who defeated Marn Jensen 6-3, 6-3 and the doubles team of Candie Gwin and Manning over Jensen and Sharon Wilson 6-2, 6-2.

Softhal

K-State surprised nobody last weekend by being eliminated in its first two games in the Big 8 women's softball tournament at Stillwater, Okla.

The Wildcats lost both games by one run-3-2 to Iowa State in eight innings in the opening game and 4-3 to Missouri.

Oklahoma State won the tournament, with Kansas finishing second.

Rugby

The K-State rugby club defeated New Mexico State 13-11 Saturday in Denver for the Western Division championship.

The men now advance to the U.S. Collegiate Championships in Dayton, Ohio May 9-10 with four other division winners.

Soccer

The K-State men's soccer club finished third over the weekend in the 16-team Wichita Scanlon Tournament.

The men took their division by winning three games and then joined the four other division winners in the semifinal round.

K-State tied Wichita Lepalma 2-2 in its first match, then defeated Bethel 3-1 and Ottawa 1-0 to advance to the semifinals. There they lost to Kansas City Busch 1-0 before beating Kansas 2-1 in the consolation match.

Sports briefs

Men's Basketball

K-State basketball players John Marx and Eric Salter, who both played sparingly last year, have informed coach Jack Hartman that they will transfer to other schools.

Both juniors to be, Marx and Salter cited "personal reasons" and desires to be "closer to home," as reasons for leaving K-State.

The 6-9 Marx, a native of Mt. Healthy, Ohio, said he plans to transfer to Miami of Ohio, while the 6-7 Salter, a native of Xenia, Ohio, has yet to decide on a new school, but said it would probably be in Ohio.

Women's Basketball

K-State coach Lynn Hickey will serve as an assistant to Kansas' Marian Washington for the Midwest team at the United States Olympic Committee's National Sports Festival III, July 23-29 at Syracuse, N.Y. Football

All-Big 8 defensive end James Walker was voted K-State's 1980 Outstanding Player Friday night at an informal awards banquet.

Also receiving honors were John Liebe, who got the Ken Ochs Award as the team's most courageous player; Masi Toluao and Rusty Hill, co-winners of the junior varsity-redshirt player of the year award; Stan Weber and Mark Hundley, co-winners of the freshman player of the year award; and Mike Cox, winner of the school's weightlifting trophy.

"We got pretty good pitching today (Sunday)," Baker said, explaining how the doubleheaders could be so different. At the same time, K-State continued its assault on opposing pitchers.

"We've been hitting the ball all along," he said. "We picked our pitches to hit and we hit them."

Putting the ball in play was a key, especially in Sunday's first game. The Wildcats got only six hits but took advantage of shoddy fielding by the Cornhuskers, who committed eight errors, leading to 10 unearned runs.

Four unearned runs in the bottom of the sixth inning broke an 8-8 tie. Two Nebraska misplays in the inning set up a two-run double by left fielder Don Grause. With two out, pinch-hitter Brian Barlow delivered a two-run single to close out the scoring.

The victory went to Jim Ferguson, 4-3, the third of four Wildcat pitchers. Louie Trujillo pitched the seventh inning to pick up his second save.

IN THE BOTTOM of the fifth inning of the second game, pinch-hitter Mark Nordyke doubled to bring in Joe Goedert with what turned out to be the winning run.

Goedert led off the inning with a walk and was sacrified to second by Grause. Nebraska coach John Sanders ordered an intentional walk to Dan Linden to set up the potential double play, but Baker sent the left-handed batting Nordyke to hit for Larry Spresser. He responded by pulling a pitch from Nebraska right-hander Mike Harlander down the right field line to drive in the game-winning run.

The victory went to reliever Mike Johnson, 4-4, in relief of starter Louie Trujillo.

In Saturday's two wins, Nebraska shelled K-State pitchers for 27 hits, including four homers.

A pinch-hit, three-run home run by Nebraska's Tim Sinovich, his first of the season, was the difference in the first game.

The second game was Nebraska's from start to finish. K-State's Johnson was touched for four runs in the third and fourth innings as the 'Huskers took command. Bob Sebra allowed only seven hits in raising his record to 6-1.

Coal operators warn of 'war'

Non-union coal operators warn that their vow to reopen mines on Monday would spark "a war" in the eastern Kentucky coalfields as the United Mine Workers strike enters its second month.

"What we're telling you here is that we're going to have a war come Monday," Thomas Ratliff, president of Landmark Mining Co., said Saturday when operators decided to reopen their mines, which had been shut down by pickets.

Meanwhile negotiators for the UMW and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association (BCOA) said that they had no plans to return to the bargaining table this week.

Bobby Brown, chief BCOA negotiator, said Saturday that only a new contract proposal from the UMW would get the BCOA back to the bargaining table.

Willis' kick highlight of Purple-White game

By ALLEN LEIKER he was a good kicker." Sports Editor

Jim Dickey figured the offenses would dominate Saturday's Purple-White scrimmage, but that didn't turn out to be the case as the Wildcats concluded spring football drills.

The defense pretty much dominated things in the Purple's 13-7 win at KSU Stadium, but it didn't seem to shake up the K-State coach too much on the sunny afternoon.

"We could have rigged it, put the better kids on one team," Dickey said. "But we split them up and I though it was pretty even."

One offensive player who did look sharp was place kicker Steve Willis. He kicked a 56-yard field goal on the game's last play—the school record is 51—and added a 27-yard field goal in the third quarter.

"Of course, he had the wind, but he's been kicking them 60 yards all year," Dickey said. "We brought him in last year. We knew Willis broke his arm last year after he was struck by a hit-and-run driver in front of Moore Hall, causing him to be red-shirted.

"There was so much pain," said Willis, a freshman from Shawnee-St. Joseph. "My weight dropped from 208 to almost 180. My left forearm was immobilized the first five weeks of the season in a plastic cast. They thought about kicking me the last three games, but I wasn't at full potential."

More than 90 players suited up for the annual affair, with 17 of them carrying the football. Each team used three quar-

Sophomore-to-be Mark Hundley scored the Purple's only touchdown on a one-yard run in the first quarter. The White's only score came on senior-to-be Jeff Meyers' oneyard run also in the first quarter.

K-State senior Joe Bramlage became the first javelin thrower to complete a Texas-Kansas-Drake relays triple crown sweep since Bill Alley from Kansas did it twice in 1959 and 1960 Friday at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa.

Bramlage won the event with a throw of 232-3, his lowest throw of the relays circuit. Finishing second was Al Rigg of Indiana, who threw 228-3. Third place went to Chuck Greene of Western Michigan with a throw of 225-10.

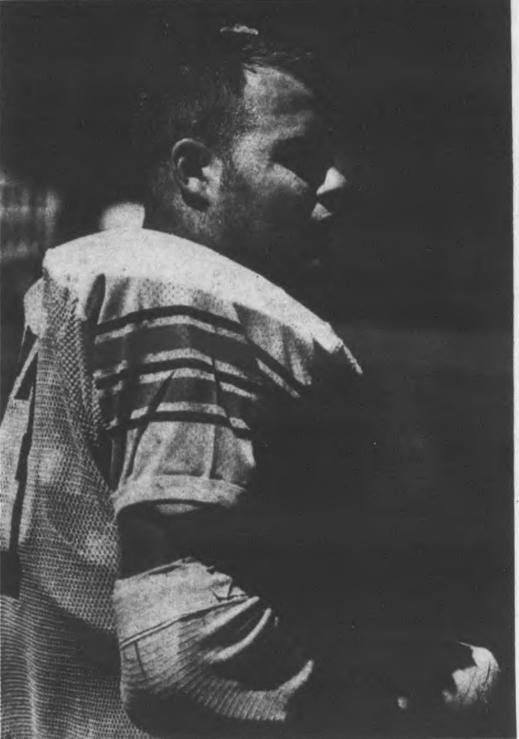

"Bramlage's throw was by far the highlight of the meet," coach Mike Ross said. "He didn't get off that far of a throw because the runway was in pretty bad shape and it was around 40-42 degrees there in the morning while he was throwing."

Compared to the Texas and Kansas Relays, K-State had a relatively small squad competing in Iowa. Long jumper Veryl Switzer and pole vaulter Doug Lytle, both freshman who have had their moments this year, competed in their respective events but neither qualified for the finals.

"The Drake Relays is far by and above the toughest of the three relays," Ross said. "People are in better shape and better quality athletes usually come here. Also a lot of schools from the Big 10 compete, too."

The sprint medley relay team would have qualified for the finals, but a dropped

Malone's hand deals Kings loss; 76ers win

HOUSTON (AP) - Houston's Moses Malone, contained by Kansas City for three games, became a dominating force once again Sunday, fighting for 42 points and 22 rebounds as the Rockets defeated the Kings 100-89 to take a 3-1 lead in their NBA Western Conference championship series.

The Rockets could wrap up the best-ofseven series and advance to the National Basketball Association finals with a victory over the Kings Wednesday in Kansas City.

After the Kings had pulled within three points at 83-80, Malone again took charge and scored 11 of the Rockets' final 17 points.

The Rockets went into the third quarter with a one-point lead, but Kansas City's Ernie Grunfeld tied the score on a technical foul shot called against Houston Coach Del

Robert Reid, the Rockets then in Friday's victory, ignored the Kings' surged back into the lead and they never

'Cats' hopes high for Big 8 berth after winning 2

By RON BROWN Collegian Reporter

With two weeks left in the season, K-State's baseball team still has a slim chance to sneak into the league tournament.

The Wildcats took a step toward that goal by splitting a four-game series against second-place Nebraska Saturday and Sunday.

Coupled with Iowa State's four losses at Kansas, K-State escaped the league basement over the weekend. The 'Cats must finish in the top half of the Big 8 to qualify for the postseason tournament.

The series raised K-State's league record to 6-10 and overall record to 27-19. Nebraska now is 9-7 and 31-16.

"Winning our next four (conference) games is our only chance," coach Dave Baker said. The Wildcats conclude the regular season at Iowa State May 9 and 10.

Baker said two teams still ahead of K-State-Kansas and the Cornhuskers-have tough series remaining on the road.

K-STATE STAYED, in the race by sweeping Sunday's doubleheader by scores of 12-8 and 6-5. The Huskers took 11-10 and 10-3 wins Saturday.

drove in four runs Sunday and Gorman scored on a sacrifice fly. Thomas and Paul Molitor knocked in two apiece, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to an 11-1 romp over the Kansas City Royals.

The Royals picked up only their third win of the season Saturday with a 4-2 victory.

Randy Lerch, 2-0, scattered six hits, struck out three and walked four in eight innings in his first American League start as the Brewers won for the fifth time in six games. The Royals have lost five of their last six.

A double by Ben Oglivie and Simmons' third homer of the year gave the Brewers a 2-0 second-inning lead against Dennis Leonard, 1-3.

A sacrifice fly by Simmons and a basesloaded walk to Don Money scored the Brewers final two runs in the seventh. Larry Hisle had a sacrifice fly and Simmons an RBI single in the eighth.

Angels 7-2, Twins 1-5

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) - Roy Smalley drilled a two-run homer in the fourth inning to help the Minnesota Twins to a 5-2 victory over California and a doubleheader split Sunday.

Rookie Mike Witt pitched a two-hitter in the opener as the Angels won 7-1.

Smalley, who tripled for one of the Twins' two hits in the first game, clubbed his fifth homer of the year off Jessie Jefferson, 0-3, after John Castino was safe on an error by third baseman Bert Campaneris.

California cut the margin to 2-1 in the fifth when Campaneris reached base on a fielder's choice and scored when Rod Carew doubled against winner Fernando Arroyo.

Red Sox 7, Orioles 5

BALTIMORE (AP) - Jerry Remy rapped a two-run single in the eighth inning Sunday and later scored from second base on a sacrifice fly, keying a three-run rally which gave the Boston Red Sox a 7-5 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Pinch-hitter Tito Landrum broke a ninth-inning tie with a runscoring single off Grant Jackson to give St. Louis a 3-2 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Sunday, running the Cardinals' winning streak to eight games.

The victory boosted the Cardinals' record to 9-2, their best start since 1946 when they won the World Series.

With two out in the St. Louis ninth, Tom Herr singled off Jackson and stole second base before Landrum bounced his winning hit up the middle.

Jim Kaat, 1-1, was the winner with relief help from Bruce Sutter, who pitched the final inning for the Cardinals and posted his fourth save.

Pirate starter Rod Scurry held a 2-1 lead going into the top of the eighth. But George Hendrick, who had homered earlier, tied the score with a sacrifice fly off reliever Kent Tekulve.

The Cardinals tied the score at 1-1 in the fourth on Hendrick's third homer of the season, a lead-off drive over the left field

Council formed at K-State joins efforts Liberal arts: to encourage broader college education

By FRANCES BRENNAN

Collegian Reporter A council of alumni and friends of the College of Arts and Sciences has been created in hopes of getting financial support for the college.

The Council for Liberal Education will also stress the importance of liberal arts to students and the community, according to Kent Cartwright, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

"The council will form a core group of active graduates and others who will concern themselves with liberal education, help organize alumni, reach out to the larger community and work toward increased financial support of the college," according to a report written by the deans of the

THE CONCEPT of the council was developed through combined efforts of the deans, Cartwright said.

Liberal arts are valuable to the public, he said, and there is a need for people who can speak intelligently about them to the public.

"That's pretty important to us," Cartwright said. "We wanted to develop a strong group of well-informed alumni."

About 40 letters were sent to graduates who were selected from recommendations by faculty members in all departments in the college, Cartwright said.

Twenty-five people responded, saying they were interested in being on the council. They were from different parts of the country, including New York, Michigan and New Jersey, he said.

Many of the graduates are doctors, lawyers, businessmen and other who "have had the opportunity to be successful in their professions and are leaders in their community," Cartwright said.

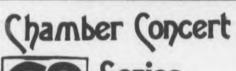

ALTHOUGH COUNCILS made up of people outside the university have long been popular in private institutions, they have universities. This is because of the increased need for more contact between public universities and alumni in order to get financial support, Cartwright said.

One of the things the council will do is raise money for the College of Arts and Sciences by trying to increase the membership of the Dean's Club. A $250 contribution is required to become a member of the Dean's Club, he said. The council will also plan activities for members of the Dean's Club to attend.

Students can benefit from the council more recently become popular in public members by learning how liberal arts have a place in their jobs and lives, Cartwright said. Members of the council will speak to student groups in order to communicate the importance of an education. For example, members may speak on the importance of graduates who can read and write effectively.

"This is an example of the kind of information they can give," he said.

"There's potential for direct interactions of students with these people," he said. "It's kind of unsystematic, but they can find out a lot of things from conversations."

THE COUNCIL for Liberal Education met for the first time April 10, in an all-day meeting, he said.

Attendance and enthusiasm at the first meeting were "absolutely phenomenal," Cartwright said.

Cartwright said he hopes the council will gain more members and he plans to keep 20 to 40 members on the council.

"The more involvement there is between the alumni and college, the more significant it is," he said. "We want people to realize college is a life-long resource and can be used for educational renewal."

Proposal would help Aggieville, merchants say

By GERI GREENE Collegian Reporter

Although downtown merchants will be more affected by the proposed mall, many Aggieville merchants are positive about downtown redevelopment and its potential affects on Aggieville.

None of the seven merchants interviewed thought downtown redevelopment would hurt their Aggieville business.

Most said downtown redevelopment would have positive affects on Aggieville business.

"I think, on the whole, most merchants feel it would help Aggieville," said Eleanor Brent, president of the Aggieville Merchants Association and owner of Woody's Ladies Shop. "Hopefully, it would promote more services in Manhattan and we would be able to draw upon this sizeable increase in customers."

BECAUSE AGGIEVILLE businesses are located in the center of Manhattan and near the K-State campus, some merchants said they don't think a downtown mall would take business away from Aggieville.

Redevelopment 'can't help but attract business'

Aggieville, because it would keep people going downtown to shop rather than sending shoppers west and away from Aggieville," Sonny Ballard, owner of Ballard Sporting Marty Smith, owner of Gaslight Boutique, echoed support.

"It'll definitely help Aggieville as well as all of Manhattan as a whole," Smith said.

"It can't help but attract business," Dean Taylor, owner of The Palace, said. "I would have no doubt that we would draw more people into Manhattan for shopping and of course we would have more people come to shop in Aggieville."

CITY PLANNER Gary Stith agreed with the merchants.

"I don't think downtown redevelopment will take business away from Aggieville," Stith said. "Aggieville businesses have been supportive all along of downtown redevelopment."

though, One merchant,

"I think it would help business in pressed concern for downtown merchants.

"I don't know if downtown redevelopment will hurt our business in Aggieville, but I oppose it, because it will hurt the businesses downtown," Robert Cook, owner of Campus Cleaners,

Although there have been questions raised about the possibility of Aggieville becoming strictly an entertainment district if a new mall were built downtown, Stith said he didn't think that would

"I don't see downtown redevelopment affecting Aggieville's entertainment business, because malls are usually occupied by retail businesses and I don't see Aggieville retailing businesses moving into the proposed mall from Aggieville," he said.

Only one merchant interviewed disagreed.

"Aggieville becoming an entertainment district is one possibility if we get a new mall,"

Taylor said.

SEVERAL MERCHANTS agreed with Stith's views.

"I couldn't foresee Aggieville becoming strictly an en-tertainment district," Brent said. "There is much traffic through Aggieville because the campus is so close.

"There are many other services besides entertainment provided in Aggieville," Brent said. "In fact, the number of non-entertainment businesses have increased greatly which gives us a wide range of services. Most people don't realize it, but one-fourth of the 100 businesses in Aggieville are not entertainment businesses."

Charlie Busch, owner of Brothers, Auntie Mae's Parlor, Hibachi Hut and Parties Unlimited, said he didn't think downtown redevelopment would put more entertainment businesses into Aggieville.

"I think Aggieville is getting stronger as a total business center and most of the new businesses in Aggieville are not entertainment businesses."

ANOTHER TAVERN owner, Don Ramey, owner of The Dark Horse Tavern, echoed Busch's comments.

"I don't think downtown redevelopment would hurt our Aggieville business and I doubt more entertainment businesses would move to Aggieville," Ramey Ballard agreed that Aggieville wouldn't lose its retail businesses.

"I don't think there's a chance that Aggieville would become strictly an entertainment district," Ballard said. "Retail businesses in Aggieville have been doing very well.

"In fact, there might even be more retail businesses, because people will be directed by Aggieville on their way downtown rather than bypassing Aggieville on their way west," Ballard said.

"We'll stay in Aggieville, but there is a possibility that we could open a branch store downtown," Ballard said.

Duo travel country in covered wagon drawn by Shetlands

By CASSANDRA MIKEL

Collegian Reporter Although wagon trains have all but disappeared except in Western reruns and movies, "Colonel" John Benish and his traveling companion, Manny McGuire, are putting more than 9,000 miles on their covered wagon.

The two men arrived in Manhattan Monday about 4 p.m. and plan to leave this morning to begin traveling the 700 to 800 miles to their home in Wisconsin.

Pulled by four Shetland mules, the wagon and the two men have been traveling since April 1, 1980. The trip began in Highland, Wis., and they plan to travel through every state west of the Mississippi River, except Arkansas and Louisiana.

On the trip Benish wanted to see if a man born in the 1900s is as tough as those born in the 1800s.

"They suffered temperatures of 140 to 145 degrees and at home we complain when it is as hot as 90," Benish said.

Merchants don't think Aggieville will become an entertainment district, because they doubt businesses would move out of Aggieville if a mall was built downtown.

"I don't foresee that I would move and I have no knowledge of any Aggieville merchant that would want to move downtown," Brent said.

Smith agreed.

"I wouldn't leave Aggieville," she said. "I am happy just where I am."

Although Benish said he doesn't think he is as tough as the men a century ago, he said he has fared well on the trip.

BENISH AND McGuire said they live by three laws they set for themselves before beginning the trip.

The first law is to eat, cook, and wash their clothes and themselves from the wagon. Except for an occasional creek bath, a five-gallon bucket is their official bathtub.

The second law is to travel only six days a week and rest on Sunday. Benish said they average about 28 miles a day.

The third law they made is not to shave or cut their hair. Benish and McGuire have both sent pictures home to their families to show them their "new looks," Benish said. He started the trip with short hair, but now sports a shoulder-length mass of gray hair and a matching six-inch beard.

BENISH KEEPS a daily log of their adventures and sends them home to his wife every week for the local newspaper to publish. Subscriptions of his hometown newspaper have increased by 5,000 since the two began their journey, he said.

While in New Mexico, they were given six quail or "laying machines" as Mexicans refer to them, he said. When the birds were six weeks old, they began laying eggs and now provide the two with breakfast every day. Benish said although it takes about three quail eggs to equal one chicken egg. the tastes are identical.

Money has been an occasional problem, but whenever they run low on funds, Benish said he calls his wife and she puts money in the mail and they pick it up a few towns down the road.

Moss gets sentence of 4-20 years

Arlie Moss, Manhattan, was sentenced Monday to four to 20 years in prison.

At a trial in March, a jury found him guilty of arson in connection with the May 3, 1980 fire that destroyed Ramey Brothers Lumber Inc., located at the corner of Second and Houston streets. Moss will be sent to the state penitentiary at Lansing.

Before sentencing Moss, District Judge Ronald Innes overruled the defendant's motions from March 24 for an acquittal and a new trial.

An earlier trial in September ended with a hung jury.

The fire, which resulted in losses estimated at more than $1 million, was the largest in the city's history.

Within 60 to 90 days, Moss will be sent to the Kansas Reception and Diagnostic Center in Topeka, where he will undergo a psychiatric evaluation. The length of his prison term will be based on the diagnosis.

Atlanta officials find another body

ATLANTA — The body of a black male found in the Chattahoochee River Monday has been identified as 21-year-old Jimmy Ray Payne.

Three boys who were fishing in the river Monday spotted the body caught in tree branches about 20 feet from the bank of the river, authorities said.

It was the fifth time in the past 28 days a black male has been found in an area river, authorities said.

Atlanta Police spokesman Roger Harris said members of the special police task force investigating the murders of 25 young Atlanta blacks were at the scene. Atlanta authorities said earlier Monday Payne's disappearance had not been assigned to the special task force. Payne was last seen at his southwest Atlanta home five days ago.

Pro-lifers score victory in court

WASHINGTON — States may outlaw abortions performed outside hospitals on women more than three months pregnant, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The decision was a significant victory for the "pro-life" or antiabortion forces in the heated legal and political battle sparked by the Supreme Court's 1973 ruling that legalized most abortions.

Without waiting to conduct oral arguments or to write an opinion, the court voted 6-3 to uphold an Indiana law that makes it a felony for a doctor to perform an abortion, other than a first-trimester one, away from a hospital.

A doctor who runs a Gary, Ind., abortion clinic and three women identified in court records only by fictitious names sought to block enforcement of the law.

Future of Jock's role uncertain

LOS ANGELES - If the producer of "Dallas" has his way, no one will replace the late Jim Davis in the role of Jock Ewing, the silvermaned and gravel-voiced patriarch of the Texas oil dynasty.

Davis, 72, who recently underwent surgery for a perforated ulcer, died in his sleep at his home over the weekend.

Leonard Katzman, producer of "Dallas," the No. 1 series on CBS, said Monday it's too early to say how the change will be handled, but added, "No one wants to re-cast the role.

"We've done some thinking but it's too early to discuss it fully," Katzman said. "Nevertheless, the business being what it is, we began to make alternative plans when Jim became ill."

Court fines Agnew for kickbacks

ANNAPOLIS, Md. - Former Vice President Spiro Agnew accepted kickbacks from engineers while he was governor of Maryland and must pay the state $248,735 for violating the public trust, a circuit judge ruled Monday.

The judge said evidence presented at a civil trial proved that in 1967 and 1968 Agnew was engaged in an unlawful relationship with two associates, I.H. "Bud" Hammerman and Jerome Wolff, to solicit kickbacks from consulting engineers who were awarded highway contracts. The evidence also showed that Agnew accepted money directly from two engineers, Lester Matz and Allen Green, the judge said.

The case grew out of the federal investigation that led to Agnew's resignation in 1973 as Richard Nixon's vice president and his plea of no contest to one count of federal income tax evasion.

Bomb explodes after arrests

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — A booby-trap bomb planted in a hijacked truck exploded in Belfast on Monday killing one policeman and injuring three others. The bombing, claimed in the name of the Irish National Liberation Army, followed the arrest of 20 prominent supporters of jailed hunger striker Bobby Sands.

Sands, 27, a convicted Irish Republican Army (IRA) guerrilla recently elected to British Parliament, was reported drifting nearer to death on the 58th day of his fast at Maze Prison.

Northern Ireland's security chiefs canceled all police leave as the British province prepared for widespread violence if Sands dies.

In London, Scotland Yard said a letter-bomb sent to a Conservative member of Parliament was safely detonated but that it might be part of a new IRA offensive against prominent Britons. It was the second such mail-bomb in three days.

A delivery truck, hijacked in central Belfast early Monday and rigged with a bomb, was driven into the predominantly Roman Catholic Anderstown district where police found it. The bomb went off as they tried to move it, police said.

Abolish 'Fight Night'

In an effort to raise money for the American Heart Association, Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity is sponsoring a three-day boxing tournament which will conclude Tuesday evening. Participants in the tournament are limited to fraternity residents while attendance is open to the general public.

Although Sigma Phi Epsilon's goal is commendable, there must be a more appropriate method to achieve that goal than featuring fraternity residents flailing at each other. With many inexperienced fighters, the chance for injury is much greater than with professional boxers.

Even if the tournament is completed with no serious injuries, the concept of sponsoring a "Fight Night" should be appalling to any university institution. Although any attempt to regulate extra-curricular activities is a delicate undertaking, there is a point where the propriety of such activities must be questioned.

Professional boxing has long been mired in scandal and it has deserved its sordid reputation. To introduce any elements of this sport to K-State is to contradict the University's humanitarian goals.

The Second Annual Sig Ep Fight Night should be the last.

Thoughtless humor

Monday morning I read the Collegian at the expense of almost losing my Life cereal and bacon. My nausea was brought on by the thoughtless, tasteless, and cruel "weather" report. Although I have never been an even slightly interested fan of the television series "Dallas," I am disgusted with the way the Collegian permitted such an outrageous mockery of a man's death to be printed. Who on the Collegian staff permits such irresponsible imbeciles, writing under the guise of "journalists," to air their warped thoughts in what should be a college-level publication? I'm sure it will be these very people who in future years will wonder why the world scoffs at newswriters. They will wonder why they are not heard

For whoever wrote the "article," I can only feel pity. For the Collegian and its staff, I feel contempt and a complete loss of respect and trust.

Fund the Coalition

Editor,

It is a pity that so many of us Americans have the same simplistic and false impression of the complicated world in which we live as Alan Moberly. It is exactly his kind of ignorance that created the Coalition for Human Rights, for anybody who has lived in a foreign country knows just how little Americans as a whole know, or even care to know, about the world. Human rights have been recognized by United Nations proclamations and treaties, and have been the subject of many regional agreements as well. The right of the individual to decent treatment is not open to debate, it is a matter of law. We have, however, no jurisdiction over the communist countries and it is a fact that communism is desired by the majority of the populations of these countries.

Kennedy had a great deal of insight to abandon the Bay of Pigs fiasco, realizing that the people there had no desire for our style of "democracy." More Americans need to be confronted with the fact that our way of life is not the only good way of life. Many nations in the world have liberal or socialistic governments that are not oriented with the Soviet Union, and the fact that the Coalition sometimes reflects this view indicates that it is doing its job very well. It is simply informing concerned citizens here of events in foreign countries and how America is seen in those countries. That the many views of other countries do not fit into our little stereotypical world is no justification for not funding the Coalition for Human Rights.

What is perhaps even sadder is the fact that the Coalition was turned down because it was controversial. Our whole university community was meant to be controversial in order to innovate and welcome change and progress. A university community which is not conducive to thought and the free exchange of ideas is not a very good university.

It is easy for us to get tied up in our little worlds and it requires a great deal of work to inform ourselves. This is why the Coalition is desperately needed at K-State.

In just a few short (thank God) weeks. Manhattan will experience the semi-annual mass exodus. Some students will be leaving this academic wonderland for good to take jobs in various parts of the country, collect unemployment or go on a permanent vacation. All of these students will leave with a diploma. Only a portion will leave with what falls under the definition of an education.

Many will also leave with the satisfaction that they helped vote for a new coliseum, or with the disappointment that Student Senate voted to scrap plans for the structure. And why shouldn't they be glad if Senate votes to go ahead with the plans? They won't have to pay for the structure, although they will be able to return and enjoy its benefits.

FEW PEOPLE could have predicted the economic changes that have occured since the coliseum referendum was overwhelmingly passed in 1979, pledging $2.5 million in student fees for the building.

In 1979 the inflation rate wasn't quite as high as it is today. In 1979 Jimmy Carter was still in office and the economic mood of the country was dramatically different.

Since that time inflation has tightened everyone's budget. (This may be more evident to students in the fall when they experience a 22 percent fee increase.) The mood of fiscal conservatism that began earlier this year in Washington and penetrated state legislatures, including Kansas', has left University officials with little real hopes of getting capital improvements funded by the Legislature.

WHILE THE fiscal shift to the right may be less extreme than politicians perceive, it has created a domino effect that cannot be ignored.

With these changes in mind, Student Senate, and the student body in general, should question the rationale behind building the coliseum. The obvious criteria behind voting "yes" for the coliseum should be on the basis of need, although this isn't usually enough to sway a vote one way or the other.

Certainly Ahearn is not the most ideal structure to conduct a basketball game or concert in. It's stuffy, hot as hell when it's filled, and is lacking in facilities, compared to other universities.

In addition, its questionable whether all students would be able to get out of Ahearn safely in the event of a fire. In the fall of 1979 fire inspectors examined the facility and determined that structural alterations would have to be made after 1985 if a new coliseum was not built.

This would not be much more than improving or adding exits to the building, but would involve some expense.

BUT THERE'S SOMETHING more important involved than need-something that cannot be controlled.

Whether or not we agree with it, sports is a driving force at universities nationwide—and K-State is no exception. What athletic departments want they usually get. Arguments for the new coliseum follow the doctrine that be outraged. Anyone for fiscal K-State will not be competitive in conservatism?

Big-8 basketball unless construction is approved. Was not K-State competitive in 1981? Did we not compete successfully in the NCAA tournament despite the overwhelming handicap Ahearn?

This argument is weak and lacks the same logic as the rule forbidding intramural basketball on the main floor in Ahearn-because the floor wouldn't look good for television if it was used for intramurals.

WITH A LITTLE foresight, perhaps we could have solved two problems with one shot. The recreation complex could have been part of a new coliseum, saving money, building space and a lot of headaches. But this would been asking have much-planning, cooperation and pooling of resources.

I don't envy Student Senate this week. Much has happened since the referendum was passed in 1979. Many of the students who voted in favor of the referendum have left or will be leaving this semester. Perhaps we need to give the issue back to the student body for another decision. Whatever route the senators decide to follow, some portion of the University is going to

Security and Traffic to allow only one warning per person

Staff Writer

Beginning next school year, Security and Traffic will allow just one traffic warning per person per year.

Currently, one warning is allowed each vehicle per year.

"We have several students, for instance, that their parents are car dealers," Lt. Gary Gillaspie said. "They'll bring, in the course of the school year, 10 cars on campus. They'll drive one for a month, then bring another one back. This one individual will get 10 warning tickets."

This year, K-State adopted a parking regulation which is "more uniform with other Kansas schools," Gillaspie said. It ended the use of identification stickers and relies solely on parking permits. The fine system was also changed to increase the amount of a fine 14 days after the ticket is issued, instead of increasing the fines with the number of tickets.

"I think possibly people pay their fines a little quicker than they previously did," Gillaspie said. "This way, where there is a $5 increase on tickets, they seem more prompt to take care of their misuse fees."

PARKING VIOLATIONS that remain unpaid cancel a student's right to his transcripts and eventually the name will be

By DIANNE DANNER given to a collection agency, he said. Approximately 150 tickets are issued each day, Cpl. Richard Herrman said.

Last school year, approximately 34,000 tickets were issued. Gillaspie predicts the number will be higher this year because of increased enrollment.

Several years ago, one of the highest fines owed by one student was around $500. This year, the highest has been about $350, he said.

The most common violation committed by students is parking without a permit, Herrman said. This is followed by nondesignated parking violations.

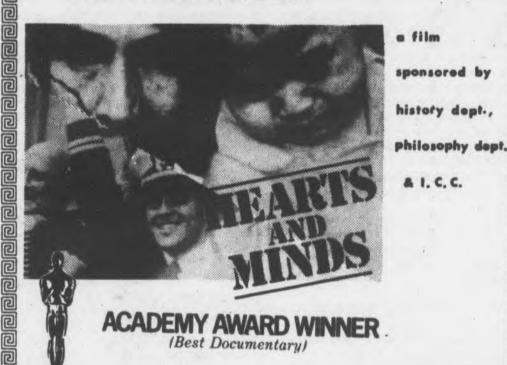

THE MISUSE FEES collected last year totaled $187,546. In the first six months of this school year, the amount of fines was $161,000, Gillaspie said.

The money from ticket fines goes into the parking fees account, he said. The money is used to pay for two officers' wages, signs, snow removal and maintenance and improvement of parking lots.

"This is kind of a misconception, people think that Security and Traffic is getting rich writing tickets over there," Gillaspie said. The real purpose behind writing tickets is to "get people to conform to regulations," he said.

Greenhouse opens doors to elderly

A passive solar greenhouse, to be used by Carlson Plaza residents and elderly residents of the Manhattan Housing Authority's high rise at 300 N. 5th, was constructed in just three days at Carlson plaza, 423 Pierre.

The project moved swiftly once it began, according to Bruce Snead, University for Man (UFM) conference coordinator. The foundation was poured April 19 and the rest of the construction was completed Saturday

"We went from the top of the foundation to essentially finishing the greenhouse," Snead

The greenhouse project was funded by Green Thumb Inc. and was hosted by UFM. The purpose of Green Thumb, a national farmers union program funded primarily by the U.S. Department of Labor, is to provide meaningful employment for the elderly.

The construction of the greenhouse was done by Green Thumb job developers, staff and employees from 10 states. Teams of Green Thumb employees from around the country came to the workshop Saturday and Sunday to learn about the three phases of greenhouses.

"The idea is they'll go back to their state and start similar projects," Snead said.

The first phase was project development, headed by Wade Wilkinson, a consultant from a Montana developing firm, who was hired by Green Thumb. Participants in this phase learned how to "generate funds, obtain grants and get money to do the workshops," Snead said.
The second phase, headed by Snead, was construction. This phase consisted of "19 people learning about the construction and design of a greenhouse and actually building it," Snead said.

The last phase was greenhouse operations. This phase involved "learning how to maintain, plant and operate a solar greenhouse," Snead said.

The construction phase, in which a 10-by-16 greenhouse was built, was funded in two ways, he said. Green Thumb contributed $1,500, and the Manhattan Housing Authority contributed $1,200 for the "foundation and special elements associated with the Carlson Plaza," Snead

The passive solar greenhouse is designed to "maximize the energy of the sun" and "maximize the dependency on back up heat," he said.

Leaders try to block tax decision

Plan to counter Carlin campaign

TOPEKA (AP) - Senate Republicans, worried that Democratic Gov. John Carlin has struck a nerve with the taxpayers, have developed a strategy for ending the 1981 session late this week without enacting a severance tax and also without letting property taxes soar.

On the eve of the Legislature's return for a scheduled three-day wrapup session, their biggest problem in making it work appeared to be a fellow Republican, House Speaker Wendell Lady.

The plan is to let stand the present school funding law which lets school districts increase their budgets just 5 percent annually, put about $15 million more state general fund money into that law and thus increase the statewide property tax lug next fall by only $20 million to $25 million.

THE REPUBLICAN leadership knows Carlin has made the state's property taxpayers acutely aware they are on the verge of a $50 million-plus tax hike to support public education if new tax revenue isn't

The governor has stumped the state for two weeks, plugging passage of a severance tax on oil, gas and coal to raise new money for schools and either reduce or at least hold the line on property taxes.

Senate GOP leaders acknowledge Carlin has put added pressure on them to limit the school property tax increase as much as possible.

That is the reason for the plan to put some of the money, which the Legislature has saved by cutting Carlin's proposed budget by almost $30 million this session, into school finance.

LADY AND SENATE Minority Leader Jack Steineger said they don't think voters will be fooled. But they do concede the Senate GOP strategy may work.

Lady, Overland Park Republican, opposes the plan because it takes money cut from the resolution to suspend rules which prohibit budget for other programs and uses it for tax relief.

"It was understood that if we went along with the cuts, they were justified in themselves, on their own merit," Lady said. "I feel very strongly that if the cuts were needed, that's one thing; but if they were made to avoid the severance tax, then that's

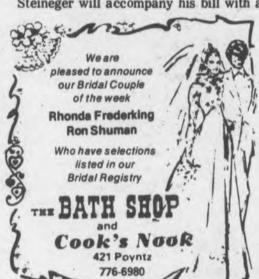

Said Steineger, a Kansas City Democrat:

"I don't think they can get away with robbing the poor, while imposing a $25 million property tax increase and still let the great windfall wealth of the oil industry go untaxed.

"I think they badly misread the Kansas voter if they think they can take money from students, faculty, teachers and the poor to hold down property taxes, just so they can let one rich segment of the economy go on being given special tax treatment."

STEINEGER WILL introduce Wednesday when the Legislature reconvenes a new severance tax bill, calling for a 5 percent tax on the production of oil and gas in Kansas and a 2 percent tax on coal. It would commit half the $110 million or so it would raise to funding schools.

Steineger will accompany his bill with a consideration of individually-introduced measures this late in the session. If he declares his intention one day, then makes his motion the next, it supposedly will take only a simple majority of the Senate, or 21 votes, to pass both the resolution and the

However Senate President Ross Doyen could quickly refer Steineger's bill to the Senate Ways and Means Committee and have that committee kill it.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Talkington (R-Iola) said he thinks the severance tax is doomed this session because Steineger can't muster even 21 votes for it.

Talkington supports taking $15 million, or perhaps even a little more, from the general fund balance and putting it into school finance. That still would leave a general fund balance at the end of Fiscal Year 1982 of $130 million, or close to the desired 10 percent of general fund expenditures.

Hard-luck Wildcats try to rebound today

Collegian Reporter

Because of a few bad breaks against Iowa State and Missouri, the K-State women's softball team lost both games in the weekend Big 8 Tournament in Stillwater, Okla.

Oklahoma State won the tournament.

Each game was lost by one run but coach Charlotte Michal said she was pleased with the Wildcats' performance.

"The girls really played well," Michal said. "I think they were at their top potential playing but we just got some bad breaks."

One of those bad breaks came in the Iowa State game where the 'Cats came back to tie the score in the sixth inning only to have the Cyclones boost one to left field to score the winning run. The final tally was 3-2.

THE WILDCATS used a similar game plan against Missouri, but two errors in the sixth inning shattered their hopes for a win and battling back through the losers' bracket. The women lost 4-3.

All K-State's troubles have left Michal thinking her team is getting the "short end of the stick."

"We played a very even game against Iowa State with no errors," Michal said. "They just got one of those hits that you can't do anything about."

"We played well against Missouri also with Cindy Farris allowing only three hits and Taryn Bachis and Julie Laughery both

Golfers in 7th after 1st round

After the first round of the women's Big 8 golf championship held Monday in Lawrence, Oklahoma State leads the pack with a team score of 306 points.

Following Oklahoma State is the University of Oklahoma with a team total of 314 points. Missouri holds the No. 3 position with 325, Iowa State is fourth with 328 and the University of Kansas follows with 329.

Nebraska is sixth with 330 and K-State's squad is in last place in the seven-team tournament with a team score of 374. Colorado doesn't have a team.

In individual scoring, Patty Koatney, Oklahoma State, and Kammy Maxfeldt, Oklahoma, are sharing the No. 1 spot. Both women shot a 75 today. In third place is Val Skinner, Oklahoma State, with a 76.

K-State's leading scorer is LuAnn Singleton, with an 89. She is followed by Rose Atkins with a 92; Julie Navrat, 93; Nancy Hagen, 100; and Becky Stromgen,

After the first round, the Wildcats don't have anyone in the top ten.

By LINDA LUGINBILL hitting home runs," she said. "Missouri is just a very tough, strong team."

But even with disappointment from this weekend the team hasn't given up, according to Michal.

"Our goal now is to continue to set a higher win record," she said. "We have some tough games coming up and I hope we can at least split all of them. Regionals are also coming and we're hoping to get some upsets there, too."

K-STATE STARTS today trying to boost its win record by taking on Cloud County Community College (CCCC) at 4 p.m. in

In today's doubleheader Michal looks for the first game to be "pretty tough" and the second game will depend on who's pitching

"Cloud County has one pitcher, Diane Punzo, and she's very good," Michal said. "She's hard to hit and how tough the second game will be will depend on whether she pitches in it or not. But we should take both games."

Michal said her team is physically and mentally ready to play, despite the weekend disappointment.

"I think the team is pretty much on top of things now and they'll do well from here on out," she said. "We have some tough games coming up and they're on the road, but I think we'll do all right."

Jayhawks boot Collegian Bell from team classifieds

Bell, who rushed for 1,114 yards last season and won numerous postseason awards, has been dismissed from the Kansas football team "for disciplinary reasons," Coach Don Fambough announced Monday.

Fambrough indicated Bell could rejoin the squad next fall.

"Kerwin has missed workouts and been dismissed from our football team," Fambrough said in a prepared news release. "The most important thing is our football program. There can be no one individual above this team or the program here at the University of Kansas.

"Kerwin Bell must prove to me that he wants an opportunity to get an education and play football for the University of Kansas.

A high school All-American at Huntington Beach, Calif., Bell was one of the most sought-after prep stars in the nation a year ago. Spurning offers from Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas, Southern Cal and Notre Dame, he signed with Kansas after the Jayhawks inked his high school teammate, quarterback Frank Seurer.

A quick, darting runner, he became a starter almost instantly and lived up to his reputation by rushing for 1,114 yards, the most ever by a Big 8 freshman.

He was also the first freshman ever named to first team all-Big 8. Bell made honorable mention on the Associated Press All-America team and was voted the AP's Big 8 newcomer of the year.

Bell could not be reached for comment. A University of Kansas spokesman said he is still enrolled at the school.

"Don told him it (his future at Kansas) is entirely up to him," said a school spokesman.

The Jayhawks began spring practice March 30 and will hold their annual spring game Saturday.

'Cat tennis squad to battle Hornets

The K-State men's tennis team will take on Emporia State today in a home dual as the 'Cats try to defeat the Hornets for the third time this season. Action will take place at the Washburn Complex at 2 p.m.

Earlier this spring, the Wildcats defeated Emporia at the Cowley County Tournament and at K-State's own tournament where 'Cat netters tied for first with two other schools.

"On a heads-up basis, we'll have to play to beat them," coach Steve Snodgrass said.

The singles line-up for the meet may move Jeff Henderson to the No. 1 spot-bumping Steve Webb down to No. 2. Gary Hassenflu, Dave Krizman, Matt Westfall and Mike Goss will probably follow-up in the Nos. 3 through 6 positions.

The only change in doubles play may be a switch in partners for Webb and Westfall, as "they need some variety," Snodgrass said.

NFL draft today

The National Football League draft begins today at 9 a.m. in New York.

Steve Clark, 6-6 253-pound defensive lineman for the K-State Wildcats, is expected to be chosen during the NFL's drafting.

Termite problems continue in Call Hall's furniture

Collegian Reporter

Because of moving water beneath Call Hall, the building will probably always be infested with termites, Vince Cool, director of facilities planning, said.

The termites have infested wooden furniture within the building.

Termites need to return to a water source every 24 hours, so the common method of controlling them is to introduce toxic pesticides into their water supply, he said.

K-State's ground crews have put pesticides in the water under Call Hall through holes drilled in the building's floor, Cool said. But because the water under the building is constantly moving, the pesticides are washed away before all the termites are killed, he said.

"It's difficult to do when that water keeps changing all the time," Cool said. "Any pesticides put in the ground are quite quickly carried away."

Some of the termites are killed by the pesticides, but the survivors move to another part of the building, Cool said. When the colony is large enough, it begins to do damage in the new location. The pesticide process is repeated, but because they never stay in place long enough to kill an entire termite colony, the control is only temporary, he said.

CALL HALL has had termites almost since its construction in 1962, Cool said. Construction sites are common places for termite problems to begin. The wood scraps and sawdust found at construction sites are natural food for termites, he said.

"As long as that material stays in the ground, they are perfectly happy to subsist on that," Cool said.

However, when these food sources are gone, the termites look for others. This search takes them into the structure of the building and if the building doesn't have a wooden structure, the termites move inside the building, Cool said.

Call Hall has a reinforced concrete and steel structure. But, as workers removed wooden laboratory furniture from the building, they found that it had been in-

THE PESTS also can't be controlled by spraying inside the building.

"Spraying inside for termites is ineffective," Cool said. "It doesn't do any good at all."

Call Hall isn't the only building on campus with termites, Cool said. Memorial Stadium and "numerous other buildings" have been infested. Termites are usually found in older buildings built with the concrete directly on the ground, he said.

The termite problem isn't as great in the other buildings as it is at Call Hall because the water supplies near these structures are sedentary, Cool said. Pesticides introduced in them stay in place long enough to kill the entire termite colony, so the control is more permanent, he said.

Greasepaint

The pairs' sad and happy roles are reflected in their clown costumes and makeup, according to Chambers.

Chambers wears an American flag cowboy shirt under K-State suspenders which hold up oversized pants under which red long johns peek out. For makeup he rubs on a white grease frown and a purple nose (for K-State). Whitney sports long, baggy pants and paints on red freckles and a wide smile.

Chambers has been serious about rodeos for years.

Raised on a farm in Wellsville, Chambers can walk calmly through a pen of bucking horses and steers without flinching.

Some of those ferocious-looking critters are "as tame as milk cows," if you know how to approach them, he said. Chambers who was always active in 4-H, has a yen for pestering and playing with the bulls. "I just love those suckers," he said.

HE BEGAN participating in rodeos as a youngster riding bareback broncs and bulls for a group called Little Britches in Kansas State High School Rodeo Association and the American Youth Rodeo Association shows.

Although he eventually plans to get a job with in a feedlot, Chambers said he wants to stay with the rodeo for a couple of years after he graduates. "I would like to go hard at it and get it out of my system."

He has already amassed his own clownclose-call stories.

Bulls have thrown him over fences before but he has always gotten up.

"Oh I've had a lot of little aches and pains but nothing I couldn't go on with. I've been lucky," Chambers said.

During the years he has been bullfighting, Chambers has not seen any serious injury while he is in the arena.

He helps to protect cowboys from serious injuries by "lining out" bulls after the rider is thrown. His efforts keep bulls from Grandma's dairy cow."

trampling or goring cowboys. He also unhitches cowboys whose gear gets caught on bucking horses.

Cowboys depend on the rodeo clown before the show, too.

Clowns who have worked repeatedly with the same stock supply information about the animals. The bullfighting clown knows the "snuffy" (mean) bull from the "pup," Chambers said.

Like any actor, the clown knows "the show must go on," Chambers said of his job. "I have seen clowns continue to bullfight with broken legs."

"You aren't supposed to show that you are hurt. Our job is to run between the bull and the cowboy. You don't hesitate and you have to be ready to take the bull," Chambers said.

AND THE BULLS can be unpredictable. A move to distract one bull by a clown may not work the next time, he said.

Although the clown may fake fear for comic effects, there is also a "psyche job" involved to make sure the audience believes the bulls are dangerous. Chambers said.

The antics of Chambers and Whitney are sometimes meant to emphasize a bull's ferocity. Chambers said they sometimes throw a foam man in overalls at the bull and watch the animal knock the dummy up like a high fly ball. This convinces the crowd that, "boy, that bull is really bad," Chambers said.

That's when Chambers might make a pass at the bull, jump in front of it or run circles around it while keeping physical contact.

It's what Chambers calls "the science of coming close, without deceiving the audience."

As for the danger involved, Chambers said, "A lot of guys grew up playing football and they don't think that is dangerous. But they think I am plum stupid to be out there in the arena with a bull that isn't as mean as

House panel prefers 15 percent tuition hike

TOPEKA (AP) - A proposed 22 percent increase in student tuition at state universities next year should be pared back to 15 percent or the extra money will be held for use in the ensuing year, the House Ways and Means Committee decided Tuesday.

The decision differs from the position taken by the Senate Ways and Means Committee, which ratified the action of the state Board of Regents in voting a 22 percent

If the House and Senate sustain the actions of their respective committees, the matter will go to a conference committee that will attempt to reach a version acceptable to both branches.

It was estimated the 22 percent tuition increase would raise $2.58 million more than the 15 percent hike that had been recommended originally by the Legislature. The Board of Regents proposed using the $2.58 million to provide more money for salaries of student employees and to boost other operating expenditures of the universities.

IN RECOMMENDING a 15 percent increase in tuition, the Legislature said it was trying to get students to bear a bigger percentage of the cost of their education while reducing the percentage borne by taxpayers.

House Ways and Means Chairman Mike Hayden (R-Atwood), said the legislative goal is to have students pay 25 percent of the cost of their education. He said students at Emporia, Pittsburg and Fort Hays State universities now bear about 13 percent of the cost of their schooling, while students at K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State pay approximately 19 percent of the cost.

Hayden said the regents proposal did not address the matter of increasing the portion of the educational cost borne by students because it proposed increasing spending at the same time.

"We would be chasing our tail," Hayden said. "We would be back next year at ground zero."

BUT SOME members of Hayden's committee argued disapproving the 22 percent increase in favor of the 15 percent hike would send confusing signals to the Board of

The regents have sole power to set the tuition rates at the state universities. The Legislature can only recommend tuition rates but has the power to control spending.

Committee staff said that under the 22 percent tuition hike approved by the Board of Regents, a student at one of the three larger universities would pay $342 per semester, or $15 more than would be paid under the 15 percent increase recommended originally by the Legislature. The difference at the three smaller universities would be $13 per semester.

Rep. Fred Weaver (D-Baxter Springs), supported increased funding for salaries of student employees

HE SAID CUTS which appear to be almost certain in federal programs will mean that more students will need jobs and will need higher salaries if they are to go to school.

Rep. Sandy Duncan (R-Wichita), said the regents can raise the tuition rates however much they want, but they can't spend it without appoval of the Legislature.

"I think if we don't allow them to spend this, you will have seen the last of it (the 22 per cent hike)," Duncan

The committee, however, voted down a motion by Rep. Mike Meacham (R Wichita), to have Hayden send a letter to the Board of Regents asking them to roll back the tuition hike to the 15 percent level, while reiterating an intention to move toward the goal of having the students bear 25 percent of the cost of their educations.

THE COMMITTEE also voted to inform the Board of Regents the Legislature stands behind its recommendation that the tuition at the University of Kansas Medical School also be increased 15 percent, from $3,000 a year to $3,450. The board had proposed no increase for the medical school.

Hayden said in fact the increase would apply only to medical school students who do not agree to practice in

The House committee agreed with the Senate committee to provide more than $1 million additional to the universities to pay increased utility costs in the current fiscal year and $372,809 to meet telephone rate increases in the next fiscal year.

Lack of funds will limit summer work-study

Collegian Reporter

K-State students eligible for the University's work-study programs will find it difficult to get a job through the program this summer.

Because there are no funds to continue K-State's work-study program after May 15, approximately 250 to 300 students will not find work-study jobs this summer, according to James student financial assistance.

"In general there will not be a work-study program this summer due to lack of funds," he said.

"If we're out of money for the

By PAM VAN HORN Upham, assistant director of May payrolls we may have to year, Upham borrow money to meet the program-extension workpayroll," he said.

K-State has been allocated $557,688 in federal work-study The current work-study funds funds for fiscal 1982, Upham said. This was a cut of $174,300 from what was allocated for the current

> Although there is not a workstudy program planned before July 1, the beginning of the new fiscal

All other work-study programs will not be operable until classes resume next fall, he said.

"We feel the limited funds should be used when students are attending classes in the fall," Upham

THE EXTENSION program, which is similar to an internship, is coordinated through the state extension service and the financial assistance office and is for students who qualify to work in a county extension office in Kansas,

To qualify for the extension work-study program, students must meet basic financial need requirements and also be selected by the county extension service they apply with.

"It (the extension work-study program) was approved before we knew how low funds would be," Upham said.

The summer extension workstudy program has operated for the past few years and students worked from May until August, according to Robert Johnson, assistant director of extension personnel. But the lack of funds has forced the program to be limited to seven weeks beginning July 1-so that the funds come from the new fiscal year allocation, he said.

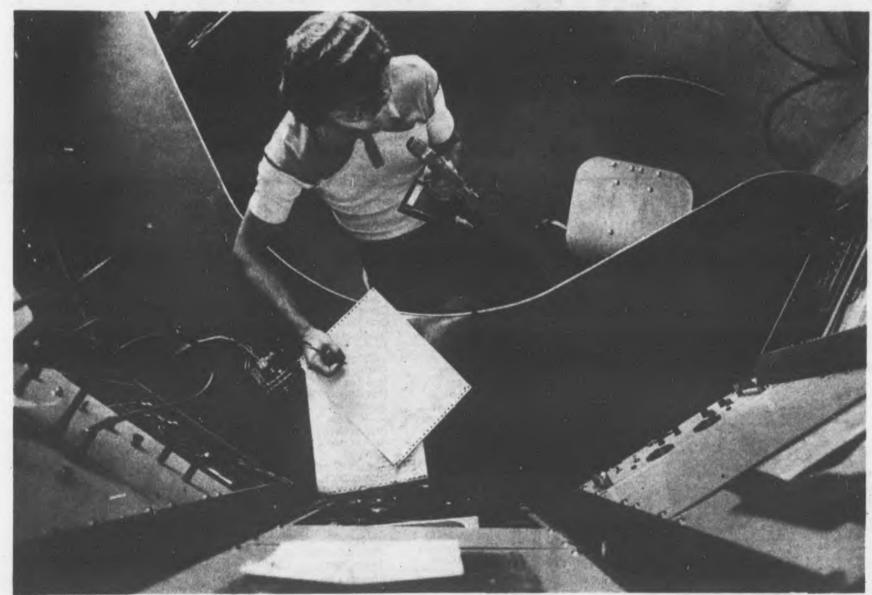

Johnson said all Kansas counties are eligible for the program but there are only 20 positions available. Currently only 19 counties have applied, he said.

County extension office boards must decide whether their budgets can facilitate payment of the county's part of the student's salary, he said.

UNDER WORK-STUDY program guidelines, the county is responsible for 20 percent of the salary in addition to social security while the federal government pays 80 percent, Johnson said.

Counties participating in the program are selected on a firstcome, first-served basis, he said.

The program also requires students participating to save up to 65 percent of their earnings from the summer job for the 1981-82 school year, Upham said.

March to solicit funds for families of Atlanta's murdered black youths

There will be 26 candles lighted today as part of a ceremony on campus. Each candle will represent the life of one of 26 black children in Atlanta. Then the candles will be extinguished—signifying the end of those 26 lives.

The ceremony, sponsored by the Delta Sigma Theta and Omega Psi Phi fraternities, will follow a march across campus. The marchers, hoping to raise money and show concern for the situation in Atlanta, will leave Cardwell Hall at 11:45 a.m. and plan to arrive in the Union Courtyard at

"We will be asking for donations to our fund," said Anita Cobbins, president of Delta Sigma Theta and senior in journalism and mass communications. "Our account now has over $650, but we're still short of our goal of $1,000."

The ceremony in the courtyard will in-

Irish expect violence if Sands dies

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands lingered on the verge of death at Maze prison Tuesday on the 59th day of his hunger strike and his supporters said he was given last rites again. Britain's government repeated its refusal to give in to Sands' demands and Northern Ireland's security forces prepared for bloody confrontation if he dies.

Pope John Paul II's personal envoy went to the Maze after a halfhour meeting in London with a British Foreign Office minister.

Protestant leaders angrily denounced the visit at a time when fears of all-out sectarian violence were rising steadily.

Hours earlier, terrorists killed one Protestant soldier of the Ulster Defense Regiment and wounded another south of Belfast. Security forces arrested at least 10 more top Irish Republican Army activists.

Sands, serving a 14-year sentence for weapons possession, was elected to British Parliament in a special election April 9. He has been subsisting on water alone to back his demands that jailed guerrillas be allowed to wear civilian clothes, associate freely and receive one visit each week, and that they not be forced to do prison work.

Judge rules on rail property records

TOPEKA — Federal Judge Richard Rogers has held that nine railroads suing Kansas over what they claim is tax inequity do not have to turn over to state attorneys the records on the property they own in the 105 counties of Kansas.

Rogers ruled Monday that requiring the railroads to assemble the mass of information would be so burdensome that it would constitute harassment.

State Department of Revenue lawyers had sought the records in order to distinguish which of the railroads' property in Kansas is real estate and which is personal property, such as rolling stock and equipment. Under the state's method of assessing the railroads for tax purposes, all their property is lumped into one unit without classing part as real estate and part as personal property. The railroads sued the state last year, claiming they are being discriminated against because they are assessed and taxed at a rate higher than that of other types of property. The railroads claim they are assessed at a full 30 percent of fair market value, while other property in Kansas is assessed at an average of only 13.3 percent of fair market value.

Broke Boston schools must stay open

BOSTON — Saying students have a constitutional right to an "adequate education," a judge Tuesday ordered Boston's public schools to remain open even though there is no money in the school budget to continue classes for the 64,000 students.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Morse Jr. issued his order after 11th-hour negotiations to come up with more money for the nation's oldest public school system ended in a stalemate. The school system's budget for the academic year ran out Tuesday and officials said they'd have to close schools. Morse's ruling followed weeks of haggling between Mayor Kevin White and the City Council on how to come up with money for the schools.

"Today is the 142nd class day, we hope it won't be the last day. The protection of the 64,000 students demands no less," said Anthony Sagar, an assistant state attorney general, in asking for the permanent injunction. State law mandates 180 days of school.

Police suspect walkaway in beatings

FULTON, Mo. - A Fulton State Hospital walkaway charged in slayings in 1967 and 1973 is the prime suspect in the beatings Monday night of two members of a rural Kingdom City family who befriended him, authorities say.

Callaway County Sheriff Ted Salmons said Tuesday that Arthur Payton, 35, of Kansas City, was thought to be armed with a carving knife, was known as a karate expert, and should be considered "extremely dangerous."

Authorities said Payton still was at large last night.

Salmons said a man believed to be Payton went to the George Seeley home, seven miles north of the hospital, on Monday night and asked for something to eat. Salmons said the family invited the man in and fed him, and he then left.

The sheriff said the assailant apparently sneaked back into the home about 10 p.m. Monday and struck Seeley on the head, then beat the couple's 10-year-old son, Jeff, on the back of the head. Mrs. Seeley slipped from the home and called the sheriff's office from a nearby service station.

Most campus and national issues cause sharp divisions in the student body throughout the school

Today students can come together and support a single issue—a drive to raise money for the Atlanta Life Development Center which provides counseling and other services to the families of the 26 black children killed in Atlanta.

Marchers will leave Cardwell Hall at 11:45, ending at the Union Courtyard. A ceremony there will include speeches, a candlelighting ceremony and the release of 26 balloons.

The ceremonies obviously will not help solve the murders in Atlanta. No one believes they will.

However, it does enable the public to display its anger and frustration about a situation it cannot control.

While Atlanta is a long way from Manhattan it is not inconceivable the same tragedy could occur in Kansas City or Topeka for that matter. Join together today and support the efforts to preserve the dignity of human life.

Beware of YAF

Editor,

Last Wednesday's Collegian certainly caught my attention, most definitely the article on the establishment of YAF, the voice of "aggressive conservatism."

The organizational meeting culminated with Rep. Jim Jeffries saying, "We need conservatism in this country, we need it badly." He applauded Reagan's economics, the supply side train of thought employed before the Great Depression. Most economists think of this as nothing new and label it impractical and inflationary. Moreover, the already taxsheltered rich will receive generous tax cuts in Reagan's plan in hope they might invest and produce.

YAF supports the laissez faire system as "the best means of ensuring economic freedom, stability and growth." The organization then must also support monopolies, chronic poverty, and political corruption and domination. It also strikes me as odd that YAF supports "quality education," considering the Moral Majority's attempts and success in perverting science and education with their dogmas.

In addition, Scott Wedekind, the mouthpiece of YAF here, said that government has "no place" in education. Why doesn't Wedekind leave state financed K-State and go to a private school? If the government abandons education, only the rich will be able to afford it. I'm sure the ruling elite would be pleased in subjecting the less fortunate to ignorance, baffling us at the same time with the magical thinking of the right wing ideology.

In the future, I urge all students of the democratic left to speak out against YAF, the new spearhead of "aggressive conservatism."

Much ado about nothing?

Sexism. Its that slimy little word that pops up occasionally like a recurring nightmare. It creeps into what we wear, how we smell, the way we walk. We try to hide it, pretend that if we ignore it, it might go away.

So just what is this elusive monster that inundates television, magazines, billboards, signs, posters and packaging?

The American Heritage Dictionary defines sexism as "discrimination by members of one sex against the other, especially by males against females, based on the assumption that one sex is superior." Like other catchwords of the 1970s (you know, like environment, racism, equal rights), sexism, as a social concern, occasionally takes a backseat to hedonism. It is easy to sweep under the rug and shrug off inconsequential. Everyone knows that men and women simply were not created equal.

Recently, though, it jumped back into the driver's seat in an outburst concerning the proper function and intent of the Women's Resource Center. That squabble urged me to look around (I didn't have to look far) and see what this issue is all about. I realize that any observations offered by a male on this subject are immediately suspect, but maybe a dialogue between two rational, openminded, college students (is that dirty jokes in the classroom or office, however, is considered a form of sexual harassment, according to a questionnaire designed by the Commission on the Status of Women.

The commission sent a questionnaire on sexual harassment to all 4,187 classified and unclassified employees of K-State, said Mary Harris, director of the Universitysponsored commission, and acting head of the Department of Curriculum and Instruction. The survey was distributed March 17 and analyzed by the Office of Educational Resources on Friday.

The results of the survey have not been reviewed by the commission and therefore cannot be released, Harris said. In fact, the results may never be made public if the commission decides not to release the information, she said.

The commission was formed eight years ago to "make recommendations to the president on any issue that concerns women," Harris said. In the past, the commission has been concerned with issues ranging from child care to women's athletics. Currently, the commission has focused its attention on the problem of sexual harassment.

"This year we decided sexual harassment was one area we wanted to study," Harris said. "We felt some people on campus didn't know sexual harassment was against the law."

THE PURPOSE of the survey was to increase awareness of how sexual harassment is defined, according to Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

The questionnaire states: "Sexual harassment is defined as any unwanted, deliberate, or repeated sexual behavior when" it is a condition of employment, a factor in employment decisions, or it interferes with work performance.

"We viewed the questionnaire as largely educative," Harris said. "It should help us all become more aware of an existing law."

REACTIONS TO the effectiveness of the survey varied.

"It was not very useful from my point of view," Joseph Hajda, associate professor of political science, said.

The questions were vague and the terms were undefined, he said, referring to a question concerning sexually offensive office decorations. Hajda said the survey was so poorly worded he threw it away.

Others who received the form said they believe it served a useful purpose.

"The survey probably made me think about the possibility that it (sexual harassment) exists," Coralie Boatman, administrative officer for the housing department, said. The questionnaire was probably necessary in order to make people more aware of the problem, she said. She said she completed and returned the survey.

Sexual harassment is "the kind of thing you don't think about much," Melvin Kepple, director of the Data Processing Center, said. He said he found nothing wrong with the questions and returned his completed survey. Overall, the survey was "a good idea," Kepple said.

THE QUESTIONNAIRE may benefit the University in more ways than increasing awareness, Harris said.

"It could be seen that what we are doing could protect the University from a totally unexpected lawsuit," Harris said.

A subcommission was set up within the 13member Commission on the Status of Women to develop the questionnaire, Harris

By SHERRY BROWN said. The questions were reviewed by the say and contact the person who is alleged to Collegian Reporter full commission, consisting of faculty, staff Sexual harassment is no joke. Telling members and students, appointed by President Duane Acker.

> BECAUSE THIS is the first year for a survey of this type, the commission had to start from scratch in designing the questions, Harris said.

> The commission tried not to emphasize any one aspect of sexual harassment, she

> "We have tried to word the questions so that males could feel that the language enabled them to report incidences of sexual harassment," Harris said.

> The survey is geared more toward faculty than staff members, because of the language used, Harris said. Overall, it addresses employee-supervisor relationships, she said.

> "Behavior among equals is not our concern," Harris said.

> Although the questionnaire may be repeated in the future, new questions will be written each year, she said.

A NUMBER of universities across the country have added comments condemning sexual harassment to their affirmative action statements, Harris said. The need for a statement of this kind at K-State is being considered by the commission, she said.

"We would support the need for such a statement in the handbook," Harris said.

A major problem when dealing with sexual harassment is that it has become part of our culture, she said.

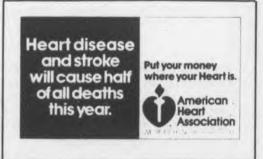

"It is part of a culture that we, as educated people, would like to see change," Harris said.

THESE SENTIMENTS were echoed by Dorothy Thompson, director of the Office of Affirmative Action. Complaints of sexual harassment are handled through the affirmative action office, Thompson said.

"One would have to describe the number of complaints we get as 'occasional'," she said. Complaints have come to her office from faculty, staff members and students.

The procedure for handling harassment complaints is the same used for any other type of sex discrimination, Thompson said. First, there is an "informal review" by an employee of the affirmative action office, she said.

"We hear what the complaintant has to

IF THE COMPLAINTANT is unsatisfied with the results of the informal hearing, a more structured, formal hearing can be arranged, Thompson said. Any corrective action is determined by the affirmative action office in cooperation with the ad-

Further action can be taken by the complaintant in the form of a civil suit, Thompson said.

"The complaintant could bring a civil suit," she said. "Then it would be for the court to decide damages."

Although few complaints are received from students, a student questionnaire dealing with sexual harassment will be included in the annual survey of students conducted by the Center for Student Development, Harris said.

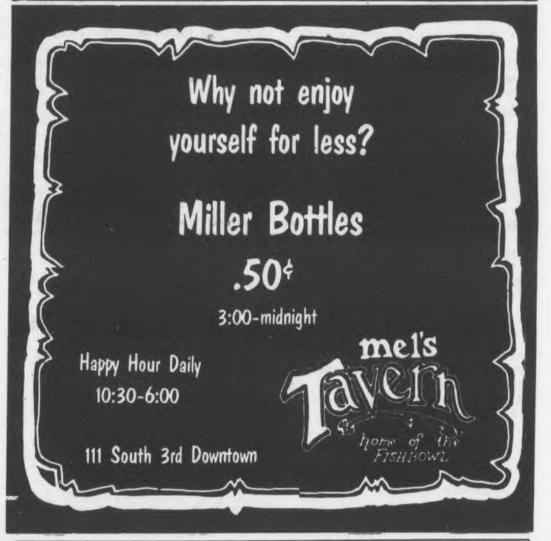

The student questionnaire was designed by the commission and is similar to the faculty-staff questionnaire except it "assumes the problem is about a grade," Harris said.

Experience proves valuable

Students advise small businesses

By TANYA BRANSON Collegian Reporter

Graduating seniors in business administration have a chance to gain practical experience during the last semester through two Business Policy classes taught by Joseph Barton-Dobenin, professor of management.

About 65 students, in teams of three, advise a small business in Kansas. The students assist the firms in accounting, finance, marketing and research.

"The purpose is mainly to help small firms in rural areas of Kansas," Barton-Dobenin said. "In the process, it provides student educational experience in a real type of context."

Barton-Dobenin's classes are part of the Small Business Institute (SBI) which is sponsored by the Small Business Administration (SBA). As part of the SBA, the SBI uses schools of business to counsel small firms which are located in a particular school's area. It is a nationwide program and K-State is in a region with Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa, according to a manual on the Small Business Institute.

"Our teams have been very successful," Barton-Dobenin said. "We have several awards since it was started 10 years ago.
Our students do a number one job; an outstanding quality job."

ALTHOUGH MANY FIRMS request advisement, about 50 firms are advised by K-State students in a year, Barton-Dobenin said. He said there are advantages to being advised by students.

"Some firms don't know anything about marketing," he said. "A student with six to nine hours of marketing behind him can really help. Also the taxpayers support the college so it is giving free help to them to return some of their money."

Small firms don't have time to research and develop market strategies, Barton-Dobenin said, so students do the research at no cost to the business in exchange for class credit and practical experience.

"It gives you a chance to get out of the classroom situation," Leon Scheffler, senior in general business administration and member of the class, said. "The firm doesn't really follow the way the textbooks are designed. It takes a little while to make

Newman serves FAA suspension

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Larry Newman, one of three men who made the first trans-Atlantic crossing in a balloon in 1978, has been grounded by the Federal Aviation Administration.

The FAA ordered Newman to surrender his pilot's license—meaning he can't fly either an aircraft or a balloon—because of violations the agency said he committed while operating a private jet nearly a year ago.

The federal agency held a hearing last month and imposed a 120-day suspension. Newman agreed to surrender his pilot's license and began serving the suspension March 25, officials said.

The FAA complaint alleged Newman piloted a Lear jet on a flight from the New Orleans Lakefront Airport without receiving clearance from the control tower.

Happy Birthday, Doug

P.S. Been Bobbing for Socks? Mike, Pat, and Rosy the transition from text to actual firm."

"The practical experience gained in his class is a good step into the actual business world," Scheffler said.

PROBLEMS WITH THE firms aren't common, but do occur, Barton-Dobenin said. Sometimes students work with firms that are already on the road to bankruptcy and usually it is too late for students to offer constructive suggestions.

Other problems may involve the owner's or manager's feelings toward student guidance, Barton-Dobenin said.

"The firms feel the students are too young, too inexperienced," he said. "The student has to develop the proper attitude in the relationship. Part of the course is to sell yourself."

"Our owner was quiet at first," Scheffler said. "He didn't like college students advising him when he had graduated and been in business for 15 years, but I just talked to him and now he's really happy with it."

STUDENTS RESEARCH the firm, then visit the owner four or five times during the semester and try to suggest new ideas and strategies to improve the firm, Barton-Dobenin said.

At the end of the semester, a report is made about the research, strategies and implementation the students have developed throughout the semester, Barton-Dobenin said. A student's grade depends on how well he offers practical advice to the client, Barton-Dobenin said.

"I look at how the students really helped the firm," he said.

The business receiving help decides whether to take the advice, Scheffler said. Often the business will review the suggestions before they are used, he said.

"We spent about 10 or 12 hours with our owner," Keith Geist, senior in general business administration, said. "He hasn't implemented any of our ideas yet. He can read our report and then either accepts it or rejects it at his own discretion."

SBA honors business professor

Joseph Barton-Dobenin, professor of management, has been designated a "Research Associate" by the Wichita District of the Small Business Administration.

Barton-Dobenin will receive a certificate citing him "for support

He teaches a class in Business Policy which coordinates research on small businesses "so we provide clients not only with results of actual surveys, but also with library research which they seldom have time for themselves," Barton-Dobenin said.

K-State's ASME chapter outstanding

The K-State student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME) has been named the Outstanding Student Section in the midwest.

Composed of mechanical engineering students, the group won the honor by capturing first place in competition with 14 other universities. The section was awarded $100 and a special commemorative plaque.

First place is awarded to the student section which has shown the highest quality of performance in areas including membership development, meetings, trips, publications and involvement in regional and national society activities. The award is funded by the Bendix Corporation.

Fedde receives teaching award

Dr. M. Roger Fedde, professor of anatomy and physiology, has received the 1981 "Norden Distinguished Teacher in Veterinary Medicine Award." This is the second time students in the College of Veterinary Medicine have honored Fedde for distinguished teaching; he was previously honored in 1975.

His awards included a bronze plague and cash honorarium.

A member of the K-State veterinary medicine faculty since 1964, Fedde teaches and conducts an active research program in respiratory physiology.

Salt water spill kills fish, poses threat to water wells an oil drilling site into the Medicine River has killed at least 10,000 fish and some wildlife, while threatening most of this Oklahoma border town's water supply, officials said Tuesday.

Ken Brunson, a stream biologist with the Kansas Fish and Game Commission, said the influx of salt water apparently had killed most of the fish in a 20-mile stretch of the river north of the Oklahoma state line.

Bullheads, channel catfish, green sunfish, bass, carp and bluegill were dead, and only some schools of tiger minnows, which can tolerate salty water, had survived, he said.

Brunson added that he found three dead beavers and some dead turtles, frogs and snakes along the river, but no larger dead game.

The city manager said pumping was stopped at four of the 28-foot-deep wells along the river after the spill, and the water in the wells was being monitored. No salt had been detected, he said, and the town's water towers were full so there was no hope," he said.

KIOWA (AP) - Salt water gushing from The spill started on Sunday, when a drilling rig owned by Supreme Oil Co. of Calgary, Canada and under contract to a Wichita drilling firm struck a pocket of highly pressurized salt water at a depth of about 250 feet.

The water was believed to have been pumped into the ground through injection wells as a way of boosting production from marginal wells to the north and west of the spill site. There are more than 100 wells in the 640-acre drilling area.

THE INITIAL FLOW, estimated by state officials at 6,000 barrels per hour, quickly eroded a hole 30 feet wide, toppling the drilling rig. There were no injuries.

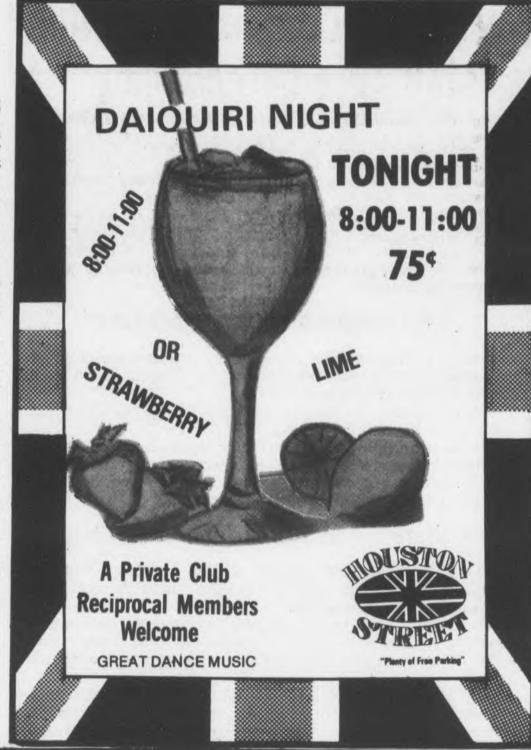

Don Ubel, district geologist for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, allowed workers to dig a trench from the spill site to the river to alleviate flooding in an earthen pit next to the rig.

"The river is going to be saltier than hell from here to the Oklahoma line," said Don Ubel, district geologist for the state Department of Health and Environment. "But there was no choice because of the volume of water."

Ubel said the water probably would have seeped into the river through the sandy soil even if officials had tried to impound it on the ground.

The flow from the hole at one point equalled about 20 percent of the flow of the entire river, said Terwort. Joseph Harkins, secretary of the Department of Health and Environment in Topeka, called the spill "one of the largest we've ever seen."

The spill site is about 20 miles upstream from where the Medicine Lodge River flows into the Salt Fork of the Arkansas River, which runs into the Great Salt Plains Lake about five miles further downstream.

Village Plaza 3015 Anderson Ave. cheered to the echo as he returned to the public stage, told Congress Tuesday night that his tax and spending cuts are "the only answer we have left" for a sick economy.

In his first address since he was shot in an assassination attempt on March 30, the president pronounced his own health much improved, but said the economy is as sick as

Reagan was welcomed by a raftershaking ovation which left him with "no words to express that greeting."

He said his recovery was buoyed by the "friendship and yes, love" of his fellow citizens since he was shot.

At the same time, the president, who showed no evidence whatever of his wound, told the House and Senate they risk public wrath unless his economic package is quickly approved.

IT WAS HIS first public appearance since the assassination attempt, and an occasion of high drama. The president was received with a three-minute ovation of applause, cheers and whistles before he interrupted with: "You wouldn't want to talk me into an encore?"

In a speech for a joint session of the House and Senate the president called anew for swift passage of his economic package, saying inaction "will delay even longer-and more painfully-the cure which must come."

"The American people now want us to act, and not in half measures," he said in the nationally broadcast address. "They demand—and they have earned—a full and comprehensive effort to clean up our economic mess."

REAGAN, IN HIS first public venture since he was wounded by gunfire March 30, thanked his listeners "for your messages, your flowers, and most of all, your prayers—not only for me but for those others who fell beside me."

Reagan declared that "thanks to some very fine people, my health is much im- time."

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan, proved. I'd like to be able to say that with regard to the health of our economy. But the fundamental nature of our economic mess has not changed."

Reagan pointed to inflation continuing "at a double-digit rate" in the nearly six months since he was elected, mortgage interest rates are averaging almost 15 percent, and an unemployment count of almost 8 million people.

"Six months is long enough. Because of the extent of our economy's sickness, we know that the cure will not come quickly, and that even with our package, progress will come in inches and feet, not miles," he said, "But to fail to act will delay even longer—and more painfully—the cure which must come."Although the president's program of budget cuts has been linked to his tax reduction proposals, the speech included only a passing reference to the tax plan, considered the more difficult element to pass in the legislative package.

CONGRESS SEEMED in a far more cooperative mood even before the president headed for the well of the House. Three Republicans rejoined the administration's fold on the Senate Budget Committee, clearing the way to get his spending blueprint back on track. And House leaders indicated the president probably now has the votes to win there, too.

Although the speech was intended to prod Congress into approving at a quick pace the president's budget-cutting proposals, there was no sign that the House was delaying. It is likely to vote by the end of the week on the fiscal 1982 budget resolution.

Although the Republicans are saying that the vote will be tight, House Speaker Thomas O'Neill (D-Mass.) said Monday that numerous Democrats were defecting to the president's side and the momentum would be difficult to stop.

But deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, expressing confidence that Reagan would win in the end, said, "Our count does not show we have the votes at this

The awards, sponsored by the Black Student Union (BSU), are meant to enwhile at K-State and throughout their careers, said Michael Payne, president of BSU and sophomore in political science.

Award winners were: outstanding freshman, Shirley Turner, secondary education; outstanding sophomore, Beryl Preston, general business administration; outstanding juniors, Paula Williams, psychology and Karen Franklin, home economics and journalism and mass communications; and outstanding senior, Moira Jack, social science.

The BSU leadership award went to Billy Williams, graduate student in community counseling; K-State leadership award, Payne; senior female with the highest grade point average, Wanda Trent, horticulture; and senior male with the highest grade point average, Greg Gibson, pre-medicine.

Final award recipients are decided by a student selection committee, Payne said.

Levels of campus and community involvement, academic and scholastic courage black students to strive for standings, and involvement in BSU are all academic, personal and social excellence considered in selecting the winners, Payne

> The awards are made possible through gifts made by the Arthur Peine family. Peine, a former K-State professor, also established a scholarship fund for needy individuals, Payne said.

Legislature begins three-day wrap-up session

TOPEKA (AP) - The Legislature returns today for a scheduled three-day wrapup session, with Gov. John Carlin's severance tax proposal expected to receive short shrift in the Senate.

Senate President Ross Doyen confirmed Tuesday the Senate GOP goal is to put enough new money into school funding to hold the property tax increase next fall to about $20 million, enact no new school finance law and go home by Friday night with the severance tax shelved at least until the 1982 session.

Doyen declined to say publicly what he plans to do with a new severance tax bill to be introduced by Senate Democratic Leader Jack Steineger, or an accompanying resolution aimed at suspending a rule to permit consideration of the new bill.

HOWEVER, indications were strong Doyen would refer the bill to the Ways and Means Committee and the resolution to the Organization, Calendar and Rules Com-

If so, both probably would be killed by those committee, and it would require twothirds votes by the full Senate to bring either one back to the floor for debate and roll call

It remained questionable Tuesday whether Steineger had 21 votes—a simple majority of the 40-member Senate-for the severance tax bill or any parliamentary votes he might need to bring it to the floor

It appeared impossible Steineger could muster the 27 votes required for two-thirds

"I probably won't decide what to do with them until I see them introduced," Doyen said of the bill and resolution, which Steineger will have ready to submit when the Legislature reconvenes at 10 a.m. today following a 19-day recess.

THE 165 LAWMAKERS are scheduled to meet today, Thursday and Friday. Only if Steineger succeeds with his plan and gains consideration of the severance tax is the session expected to last any longer.

Kansas, Henan negotiate pact

PEKING (AP) - A Kansas Farm Bureau trade delegation arrived today in the capital of China's Henan Province, a wheatproducing area with which Kansas is establishing an exchange friendship agreement.

The agreement was to be signed Friday, Jpohn Armstrong, farm bureau president, said by telephone from Zhengzhou, the provincial capital, about 400 miles southwest of Peking.

His delegation met today with Henan acting Governor Dai Suli and was welcomed at a banquet after arriving from five days of touring in the province.

Under the agreement, Armstrong said, Kansas and Henan were to establish working relations in technology, research and mutual trade wherever feasible. The agreement would cover light industry as well as agriculture, he added.

Armstrong said both Kansas and Henan lead their nations in wheat production, and share an interest in irrigation and corn

The nine-member delegation arrived in China April 21, spent three days in Peking and then toured communes and state farms in Henan's Linxian and Xinxiang prefectures and Boai County, and a tractor factory

"Their wheat looks good," Armstrong said. "Their irrigated wheat is in excellent condition, although their dryland wheat is hurting. They are expecting an average

A striking difference between Henan and Kansas, he said, was that Kansas farmers were accustomed to mechanized farming while most of Henan's wheat is harvested by

The Kansas delegation has visited research projects in Henan and found the 'Chinese friendly and inquisitive.

He said they would like to have some of Kansas' germ plasm and parent seed to use in breeding their own wheat. He said he thought this could be possible under the exchange agreement and China probably would need to send some of its people to Kansas universities and research stations.

The Kansas delegation is to spend four days in Zhengzhou before visiting Hanlwhou and Shanghai and leaving China via Hong Kong May 7, Armstrong said.

As of Tuesday, it appeared any success for ample money in the state's general fund Steineger's effort would be a major sur-

Carlin was keeping a low profile on the eve of the Legislature's return, and his press secretary, Bill Hoch, would only say the governor was hopeful.

"The governor remains hopeful that the Senate will take advantage of the real opportunity it will have this week to enact the severance tax," Hoch said.

"He is realistic in knowing that, while public support for the severance tax continues to grow, the Senate may not be responsive to that desire. But the opportunity still exists to avoid unnecessary property tax increases for the people of "The governor will be disappointed if the opportunity is not taken advantage of."

ON THE OTHER side of the issue, as the final showdown approached, Donald Schnacke said he isn't sure Steineger has any more than the 13 votes the Kansas City Democrat mustered in 1980 when he introduced a bill late in the session to enact a 15 percent severance tax on oil and gas.

Asked if he is convinced the matter will die in the wrapup session, Schnacke, executive vice president of Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association, replied, "That's my feeling. As we read the Senate, the severance tax had a fair and square hearing for over a week in committee, it just fell under its own weight and the majority is willing to let it go at that."

Doyen, who has not changed his opposition to the severance tax, said he would be justified in referring Steineger's bill to the Ways and Means Committee-because it would commit half the revenue to school finance, making it an appropriations bill.

UNLESS DOYEN decided to refer the bill to the full Senate and not send it to committee, it appeared to have no chance of passing.

balance to take $15 million or $16 million and put it into school finance—holding the 1981 school property tax increase statewide to $20 million.

No attempt is expected to over-ride Carlin's veto of a school finance bill which would have changed the formula under which state aid it distributed to the 300-plus public school districts in Kansas.

THAT BILL would have allowed school boards to raise their 1981-82 budgets by 6 percent, but also would have triggered a $53 million property tax increase statewide to support schools.

There also is not expected to be any major effort to pass a new school funding bill, with the dominate sentiment now to let the present law continue.

That law permits a 5 percent annual budget increase. With new state money already available in Carlin's budget, it would mean a $43 million property tax hike next fall.

Haig pursues support for Saudi plane sale

Alexander Haig Jr., running into a wall of bipartisan skepticism in Congress, urged opponents of selling advanced military equipment to Saudi Arabia to wait for details before labeling the plan a danger to Haig hinted to a House panel Tuesday that the Saudis will make concessions to U.S. interests in the Mideast in exchange for the sale and said he does not believe the Saudi kingdom will fall and allow secret equipment on sophisticated radar planes to fall into Soviet hands.

Haig's appearance before the House foreign operations subcommittee launched a summerlong campaign seeking Congress' support for the controversial sale.

HE SAID the Reagan administration is still "fleshing out" details of the sale and urged the congressmen several times to wait for those details.

But Rep. Clarence Long (D-Md.) told Haig it is already clear that the sale is "one of the most dangerous threats" facing Israel.

"I think that it would be prudent for all to wait until they see the precise character, nature and modality of this proposed sale before they describe it as the most dangerous threat facing the state of Israel," Haig replied.

He assured the committee that Reagan's "firm commitment to maintain Israel's qualitative advantage (over Arab military forces) will be met.'

The White House announced last week that the president has decided to sell the

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State Saudis five AWACS radar command posts plus missiles and long-range fuel tanks to enhance 62 F-15 Saudi fighters already on > CONGRESS CAN VETO the sale if both the House and Senate vote against it within 30 days of formal submission to Congress. Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker has said the Senate will not vote until next fall, giving the administration more time to win support.

> Several members of the subcommittee told Haig they will not vote for the sale unless Saudi concessions on oil and support for a Middle East peace are won in return.

> Haig said he could not spell out in public "what we can expect from" the Saudis because that "would put in jeopardy the very progress we have been seeking—and have been achieving" in private

> In other testimony, Haig told the subcommittee that Reagan's policy in El Salvador has succeeded in reducing the violence there.

> "The level of fighting and the slaughter-it continues but the level of it has dropped substantially," Haig said.

> He also confirmed that "some progress" has been made in El Salvador's effort to identify the killers of four American church workers, but refused to elaborate.

CBS reported over the weekend that El Salvador's government, in cooperation with the FBI, has concluded the women were killed by security forces and is close to identifying participants.

Atlanta police start search for 2 more missing blacks

ATLANTA (AP) - Police searched for black youths since July 1979. another missing black youth Tuesday, as medical authorities said the 26th victim in Atlanta's string of slayings probably died of asphyxiation, like 14 of the earlier cases.

The body of 21-year-old Jimmy Payne, who was last seen April 22, was found Monday floating in the Chattahoochee River. He was the fourth adult victim of slight build in the series of murders.

Assistant Fulton County medical examiner Saleh Zaki said he had made a "working diagnosis" of death by asphyxiation in Payne's case by excluding other causes. To determine a definite cause, he said officials would need lab data that would not be available for several days.

The case is "very similar to some of the other cases," 14 of which were ruled asphyxial deaths, Zaki said. He said there was no evidence of external injuries, sexual molestation or a struggle. Payne was about 5 feet 7 and 130 pounds. The last three young adults found dead in the Atlanta area also were in their early 20s and of slight build. Police were investigating another report of a missing young black who may fit the profile of the latest victims. The case was being handled by the missing persons unit rather than the special task force in charge of the 26 murders and one disappearance of Richard Character, 33, who was described as mentally retarded, was reported missing Monday, said a police spokeswoman. Character, who was 5 feet 4 and 180 pounds, was last seen by his mother, Annine, on the morning of April 14.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said Monday night after Payne's body was found that police were worried about the change in pattern to adults because "we now have four adult victims of homicides. Previous to that, all the victims were under 16, the youngest being 7."

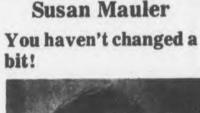

Payne was last seen April 22, going to the Omni sporting and entertainment complex, where he was hoping to sell some old coins, according to his sister, Evelyn.

Michael Cameron McIntosh, at 23 the oldest of the victims, was buried Monday. He had not even been reported missing when his body was found April 20.

Operators prove 'valuable' during disasters

Radio group strives to provide communication

Collegian Reporter was sought.

Not all the world's ham operators work on

In fact, there are more than 300,000 ham operators in the world and in excess of 100,000 in the United States alone, according to Greg Jurrens, a member of the K-State amateur radio club.

These ham radio operators use the airwaves to converse with friends or relay important messages around the world.

Since the CB boom of the mid-1970s, ham radio has experienced its own boom because operators were looking for something "more and better," Jurrens said. He is a senior in engineering technology and a member of the Riley County Red Cross.

"A lot of people in amateur radio came from CB," Jurrens said. "They wanted something better."

Ham radio is an FM transmission, which provides several advantages over CB's AM transmission. FM has less interference, greater distance and higher legal power JURRENS EMPHASIZED ham radio's value during disaster situations.

"Disasters can cover everything from major disasters—fires, floods and tor-nados—down to parades," he said.

Often, ham radio groups work with the Red Cross during such calamities.

"Amateur radio clubs across the country work with the Red Cross to provide communication for disasters or whatever happens to be going on," said Ken Klamm, senior in electrical engineering and a member of K-State's amateur radio club.

Founded in 1927, K-State's amateur radio club currently has 20 members, said Gary Johnson, a club trustee and associate professor of electrical engineering.

DEPENDING ON demand, the club annually teaches a class focusing on amateur radio and the novice, or beginning, classification.

Free of tuition costs, the class is usually taught at the beginning of the semester, extending for two or three months, depending upon how long it takes the students to learn the material, Klamm said.

By using more than one instructor, the club can "spread out responsibilities," he said. The class is open to anyone with an interest in amateur radio, he said.

The club participates in two major projects through the year.

The Simulated Emergency Test (SET) is a mock disaster situation in which operators send messages and request relief from across the nation.

During the last set, the club broadcast messages reporting that Manhattan had been hit by a tornado, emergency relief was

By GORDON DOWELL needed immediately and Red Cross help

"You get used to the idea of the networks of communication where you don't do any gabbing," Jurrens said. "You say what you need and you get off the air and you do it proficiently."

FIELD DAY is the second major club

"We pack up all our equipment and we take emergency generators out into the middle of nowhere just to prove that we can set up on a minute's notice using whatever happens to be existing and set up a fully operational working station," Jurrens said.

Ham radio began in the early 1900s, Klamm said.

The system was technically referred to as amateur radio, which sounded like "hamateur" radio to some people, Jurrens said. Because of this similarity and the operators' frequent displays of humor, the system and its users were given the nickname "ham."

The three basic components required in a ham system are a transmitter, receiver and antenna, Jurrens said. Although a minimum ham outfit would cost approximately $100, the quality and sophistication of each of the these units can greatly enhance the system's usefulness, he said.

"It's like photography—you can spend as much or as little as you want," Jurrens said.

HAM OPERATORS can communicate in a variety of ways. Morse code and voice are most common. Teletype and television are possible with more sophisticated instruments and are increasing in popularity, Unlike citizens band (CB) radio, ham is not legally limited on the distance of transmission. Only the frequency used and the atmospheric conditions limit the distance an operator can send and receive a signal, Jurrens said.

Before an operator can legally operate an amateur radio, he must meet certain requirements.

Ham radio licensing is conducted through the Federal Communication Commission (FCC). The licensing categories are divided into five groups.

The novice class is the most basic followed by technician, general, advanced and extra. As an operator advances through the classes, the speed requirement for Morse code transmission and reception and knowledge of radio theory increase, Klamm

"As you learn more, you're allowed to do more," he said. "As you learn more theory, you are allowed to operate different modes of transmission."

The novice classification, Klamm said, is basically an introduction to amateur radio. The basic mode of transmission is Morse code. As the radio operator moves through the classes, he can transmit with different modes, including voice and teletype.

Jurrens and Klamm are both members of the general class, which contains 45 percent of all ham operators, making it the largest single class.

Israelis aid Lebanese militants, shoot down 2 Syrian helicopers

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets shot down two Syrian helicopters Tuesday, for the first time joining directly in the fighting in eastern and central Lebanon between Syrian forces and Lebanese Christian militias.

"Israel again is making it clear that in Lebanese skies there will be no Syrian air activity," Israeli Deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori said in Tel Aviv.

The direct intervention raised a threat of a spreading conflict in the volatile Middle East.

The Israeli military command acknowledged shooting down the helicopters, but denied reports from Beirut that its American-made warplanes rocketed Syrian ground positions besieging Zahle. It also denied a radio report of a dogfight between Israeli and Syrian

THE FIRST Syrian helicopter was struck by an air-to-air missile from a Phantom F-4 fighter bomber at midday and the second by a F-15 rocket about five hours later, Lebanese government sources said. Both were shot down near Zahle, where the Syrians and Christians have been battling since April 1 for control of the snow-blanketed Sannine Mountain peaks.

Christian spokesmen in Beirut said Syrian artillery positions bombarded Christian militia strongholds in and around Zahle after the Israeli air assaults. The spokesmen reported 12 people were killed and 46 wounded in the new shelling. No independent verification of the

The Syrians insist that the Christian militias should withdraw from Zahle and the surrounding heights, saying they pose a threat to the Syrian border 20 miles to the east.

PRIME MINISTER Menachem Begin said the Israelis planned further steps against Syrian forces, saying, "We will not suffice ourselves with this action." He did not elaborate. Begin said the Israelis intervened to stop the Syrians from taking over the mountains around Zahle. From those heights the Syrians could shell Jounieh, the Mediterranean port through which, according to foreign reports, the Israelis keep the Christians supplied.

THE ISRAELI AIR missions in eastern Lebanon began as Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam arrived for daylong talks with Lebanese government leaders and Christian and Moslem representatives in an bid for reconciliation in this half-Christian, half-Moslem Mediterranean nation of 3 million.

Israel said its border gunners blasted guerrillas strongholds in southern Lebanon with heavy artillery Tuesday, in response to a barrage of Soviet-made Katyusha rockets that guerrillas fired into Israel's northern Galilee panhandle overnight.

Engineers request help for highways

TOPEKA (AP) — The president of the Kansas Engineering Society made a new plea Tuesday for the governor and the Legislature to address the highway needs of the state.

"Kansas has developed a quality road system," said Gail Bierly, Great Bend engineer. "To sit back and allow it to deteriorate is unthinkable."

Bierly released copies of a memorandum addressed to legislators, expressing the society's concern of legislative inaction in meeting maintenance and repair needs on the 10,400-mile state highway system.

He said an interim legislative committee had placed highway needs at $60 million annually.

"As professional engineers, our job is to advise when the transportation system is in need of upgrading.

"It is. We are concerned inaction by the Legislature may result in hindering agreed upon highway needs," he said.

He said failure to act at this time could hinder the state's ability to respond later.

"As an example, we have seen a deterioration of county road systems since the steady reduction of funding which has reduced the availability of a number of technically competent personnel," Bierly said.

The interim committee recommended increasing the state's gasoline and diesel fuels taxes by three cents a gallon each to raise the $60 million.

Stephan calls for reduction in juvenile age

'TOPEKA (AP) — Reacting to what for Justice, saying the bill's enactment would only add to prison populations, lawmakers dubbed "citizen outrage" over would have "no measurable impact on leading "to brutalization of many youth." crime, Attorney General Robert Stephan and a host of others called on a legislative committee Tuesday to approve a bill lowering the juvenile age to 16 for some crimes.

"I believe the majority of Kansans agree with the statement that 16 and 17 year olds committing violent A and B felonies, often using deadly weapons, know exactly what they are doing," Stephan told a sixmember conference committee made up of House and Senate Judiciary committee members.

"They are not impressionable youth amenable to the juvenile code, but they are violent criminals who should be dealt with accordingly."

THE BILL, which was passed by both houses of the Legislature, was amended in each chamber and is now in the conference committee to work out the differences. Panel members will try to reach a compromise and send it to the House and Senate for final approval after the session reconvenes Wednesday.

Stephan was one of several people, including lawyers, a judge, police, and a banker, who testified in support of the bill to lower the age when juveniles can be prosecuted as adults in the court system. Some called for the age reduction in all

One of the leading opponents was Forrest Swall, an assistant professor of social welfare at the University of Kansas.

Telephone company looks for '81 profits

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - United Telecommunications, Inc., the nation's third-largest telephone company, had a difficult year in 1980 but is poised for "significant profit growth" this year, its president said Tuesday.

United Telecom president Charles Battey said company earnings declined in 1980 for the first time in 10 years. But he said increases in both local and long-distance telephone rates, new markets for the company's telecommunications products distribution arm and improving profitability in computer services business would make 1981 a better year.

Board Chairman Paul Henson told stockholders that the changing nature of the corporation's business dictates continuing a trend of reducing the dividend payout ratio.

crime either for better or for worse." He noted, however, there was "political value in a hardline emphasis" on juvenile crime.

"If this change is made it will be heralded as a victory no matter what the future trends of youthful crime are. Elected policymakers will be able to say they did something about crime," Swall said. "The illusion of accomplishment will be established and will be easily maintained."

AS IT NOW stands, the measure would lower the age from 18 years to 16 only in cases involving Class A and B felonies. The top category includes firstdegree murder, aggravated kidnapping, aircraft piracy and treason. Class B felonies are rape, seconddegree murder, kidnapping, aggravated robbery, indecent liberties with a ward, aggravated sodomy, aggravated arson, and aggravated battery against a police officer.

If Kansas enacts the measure, it would join at least 11 other states which now have a juvenile age below 18 years for some Citing crime figures as a defense for his position. Stephan noted that 45 percent of all arrests in 1979 for major crimes in Kansas, including murder, rape, robbery, and burglary, involve junveiles. Those in the 16 and 17 years of age category accounted for 19 percent of the 1979 arrests.

"This is a higher rate of arrest than for any other twoyear age group," Stephan said. "If we remove violent A and B felony offenders from our juvenile system we will have greater resources to deal with less violent juveniles and better accomplish a major goal of our juvenile system-namely to rehabilitate youthful offenders."

SWALL ARGUED that there was no evidence that lowering the juvenile age would help to reduce crime. He said that

Ric's Cafe'

"The proponents of these proposals would have us believe that greater severity in the form of adult prosecution, adult jailing and adult imprisonment will work protection or cure," Swall said.

"If the punishments, proposed so easily by many who have never exposed themselves to our dismal history of punishment, were effective we would have eliminated crime for juveniles and adults long ago."

Shawnee County Associate District Judge Bill Honeyman urged the committee to reduce the juvenile age to 16 in all crimes, saying too many young people have "no respect for authority or respect for people's rights."

Fighting fund-raiser

It may not have been Madison Square Garden, but it was awfully close.

The only missing elements were the thick cloud of smoke which looms above the ring and the bookies-with their top hats shadowing their faces—taking bets.

Instead of Muhammad Ali or Joe Frazier ucking the ropes and steeping into the middle of the ring, it was guys like Jeff Hormel or Rod Winkler-not real familiar names to boxing fanatics.

Instead, they are names of guys from fraternities on campus who were boxing in the final round of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fight night, sponsored annually to raise money for the American Heart Association.

But the Sig Ep fund raiser isn't a normal charity event.

Intensity looms about the room as the traditional "welcome ladies and gentlemen" booms over the speaker. The lights go off, the "Theme from Rocky" accompanies the spotlight which singles out the first boxer of the evening.

Illuminated by the spotlight, he walks in with a girl escorting him, and both are followed by the trainers-brothers in the fraternity.

The second boxer gets the same treatment as he enters. Both meet in the middle of the rink for the final instructions from the official as the trainers, hanging over the ropes, look on.

The mouth pieces go in as the bell sounds. Both boxers, clad in Nike jogging shorts and tennis shoes, come out of their corners, ready to match muscle against muscle.

They spend most of the first round getting the feel of the other's style, then comes the hitting. Glove against gut, leather against

As fans focus their cheers and chants on the two in the ring, other boxers are in the corners, twisting and stretching in silent meditation, shadow boxing with the brick wall and sparring with their trainers.

Ask them why they do it and you'll get a variety of answers, but mostly it's pride and "competition," Craig Russell, junior in agricultural enginering and finalist in the heavyweight division, said.

"I suppose if you want to get philosophical about it, it goes back to man against man-competition. Man wants to fight to prove he's the best," Russell said. Competition. While the others psych up for their upcoming bouts, the two in the center rink continue their exhibition of brawn against brawn. The neck muscles flex, the head goes down with determination blaring on the face.

The three-round bout goes quickly, with the fighters starting to tire after the second round. But they hold on until the final bell. Then the spectators wait for the decision by the three judges from the Junction City boxing club.

As the announcer declares the winner, the arm is shot up in victory and disappointment comes across the loser's face.

For those who fought and lost, they'll have to wait till next year to try again. For those who won, they'll go home satisfied and a little bruised. But they've done it for this year-won at the Sigma Phi Epsilon fight

Kings making name in playoffs

Unlike a lot of folks, I've always been an avid fan of NBA basketball. Sure, the enthusiasm and emotion in the professional ranks may not match up to that at Ahearn Field House on a Saturday night or the finals of the NCAA championships, but if you want to see the best, you watch the big boys.

Jabbar sky hook as three guys guarding him look on helplessly.

This year, though, an area team—the Kansas City Kings, the Cinderella team of the playoffs—has helped to generate my enthusiasm from fan to cheerleader.

Bleacher bum

That's why I've practically been glued to my Zenith black and white since the NBA playoffs began a few weeks ago. The only thing that might be as exciting as watching grown men fight over millions of dollars is maybe spending a night at mud wrestling or the cockfights.

But my interest in the playoffs in year's past has strictly been as a fan. There's just something that excites me about watching Docta J. jam on the fast break or Abdul-

THE OBVIOUS REASON I've jumped on the Kings' bandwagon is they're from the immediate area. Because of their midwest location and because traditionally they just aren't very good when the money is on the line, they have always lacked national publicity. So it's somewhat rewarding to see a team close to home making headlines in Sports Illustrated and in big-city newspapers.

There's more reasons for my rooting for the Kings, though. I've always sided with underdogs—probably because I was always one when I played sports—and the Kings are definitely underdogs. Remember, they played the last month and a half of the regular season and their first 10 playoff games without playmaker Phil Ford. And their leading scorer, guard Otis Birdsong, has just returned to the lineup after missing most of the Phoenix series with an ankle injury. Under those conditions, anyone who would have bet on the Kings would also bet on K-State winning the Big 8 baseball championship.

the remains of legitimate NBA players—Scott Wedman, Reggie King and, although he's past his prime, Sam Lacey (who is probably playing the best basketball of his life during the playoffs)—misfits and castoffs—Leon Douglas, John Lambert and Joe Meriweather—and turned them into a team which hasn't looked pretty but always finds a way to win. Oh yeah, there's also 6-7 slow white guy Ernie Grunfeld, who doesn't seem to fall into either category but who filled in admirably at point guard in Ford's Fitzsimmons, perhaps the only guy in the NBA who could coach in a 5-5 and under league, is another reason why I like the Kings. The irrepressible Cotton—that's right, the same Cotton who coached at K-State—is one of a kind. He's proven there's a place for coaching in the NBA, coming up with several gimmicks and ploys that have led the Kings to series victories over Portland and Phoenix. Plus, Cotton is never at a loss for words, meaning he's good copy, meaning he's at the top of most reporters' "favorite people to interview" lists.

No matter what the Kings do the rest of the way, it's been a season to remember in Kansas City. They finished the regular season with a losing record and had to beat the worst team in the league—the expansion Dallas Mavericks—on the last day to qualify for the playoffs. And if they rally from their 3-1 deficit to Houston and win the series, they'll become only the fourth NBA team in history to come back from being so far the New England Patriots in the fifth round."

After receiving the good news from Hoffman, a member of the Patriots' public relations staff, Clark spoke to New England coach Ron Erhart, a couple of Erhart's assistants and two secretaries, all of whom congratulated and welcomed Clark to the New England organization.

"This is just great!" Clark said. "I used to live in Boston for five years (second to sixth grade). My brother also lives in Boston right now, too. I've always been a Patriot fan. Along with the Pittsburg Steelers they've always been my two favorite teams."

CLARK WILL LEAVE Manhattan May 11 to attend New England's rookie mini-camp, scheduled for May 12-14.

"I just hope I can perform up to my ability," Clark said. "This is my big opportunity and I'm going to give it my best shot. I've been playing against some of the best offensive lineman in the nation—Missouri's Howard Richards (first round pick of the Dallas Cowboys) and Oklahoma's Louis Oubre (fifth round pick of the New Orleans Saints)—and I thought if I did a half way descent job against them, I knew I would have a good shot at being picked in the early rounds."

CLARK, A PARTICIPANT in the Senior Bowl and the Blue-Gray game after last season, heard from all 28 NFL teams at one time or another since the post-season contests, but really had no idea which team would pick him.

"Baltimore, New Orleans and Tampa Bay had all talked to my agent the most," Clark said. "I also received calls from Dallas and Kansas City Monday night, but I had no preference. I figured that I might be going sometime in the middle rounds. I talked to some scouts around the league and they said I might go as high as the second round and as low as the ninth, but they said that I'd more than likly be gone by the middle rounds."

Clark was the lone K-Stater to go in the first six rounds. All-Big 8 defensive end James Walker is expected to be drafted sometime in the final six rounds today.

expecting more of a one-sided win, K-State men's tennis team defeated Emporia State University 5-4 in a home dual Tuesday at the Washburn Complex.

"We thought we'd beat them 6-3 or better," Steve Webb, the 'Cats' No. 1 singles,

"We're not that much better than Emporia," coach Steve Snodgrass said. "But we're better than 5-4. On most days we'd beat them 7-2."

According to Webb, losses were expected against Emporia's top two singles players.

Although the players and coach were The prediction was realized as Webb was defeated by Les Stafford 6-4, 6-7, 6-3, and in No. 2 singles, Jeff Henderson lost to Ken Hush 6-4, 6-4.

"Their top two players are really good," Webb said. "They always go to nationals."

Snodgrass said he also expected a loss in the No. 1 doubles where Stafford and Hush teamed up to defeat Dave Krizman and Gary Hassenflu 6-3, 6-2.

"I'm sure Stafford and Hush could compete well in Big 8 competition," Snodgrass said.

Singles wins were netted by the No. 3 through 6 players.

Gary Hassenflu defeated Tracy Skates 6-2, 6-2; and Krizman beat Mark Small 6-2, 3-6, 6-2. Emporia's Scott Enge was beaten by Matt Westfall 6-1, 6-3 and K-State's Dan Forester handed a 7-5, 6-4 defeat to Rob

One of the unexpected losses was to Mike Goss and Henderson as they were beaten 6-1, 6-2 by Skates and Small. But Webb and Westfall gained a win over Pat Shirley and Enge 6-0, 6-3.

Wildcats defeat Thunderbirds, then fall victim in 2nd match

It took the K-State women's softball team 10 innings to do it, but it finally beat the Cloud County Community College Thunderbirds 3-2 Tuesday in the second game of a college softball doubleheader at CiCo Park.

The 'Cats weren't as lucky in the second game, losing to Cloud County 5-2.

The Thunderbirds took the lead in the third inning of the first game 2-0 and held it until K-State scored one run in the fourth. The score remained the same until the seventh when Taryn Bachis hit the ball to

OU leads Big 8 golf

With only one round remaining in the women's Big 8 golf Championship in Lawrence, Oklahoma has snatched the lead from Monday's leader-Oklahoma State.

The Sooner squad tallied a team total of 618 points, compared to OSU's 621.

Dorea Mitchell from Oklahoma, not appearing on the list of the top three golfers after Monday's round, captured the lead today after shooting a 72. Her total card reads 151.

With the final round beginning today, the K-State team is still in seventh place and 97 strokes off sixth place KU.

the second baseman with Pat Howard on second. Howard's run tied the score and sent the game into extra innings.

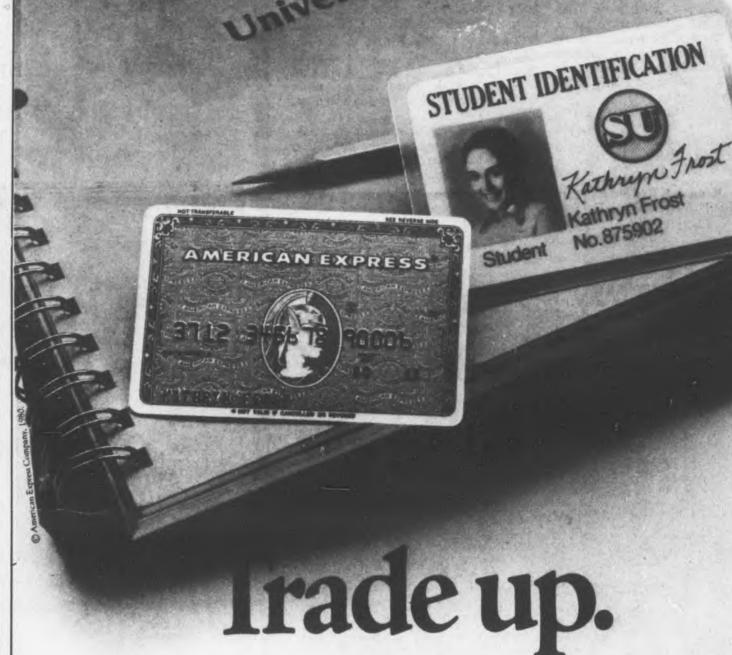

Finally in the tenth inning, Pam Rufener hit a line drive down the third baseline that allowed Bachis to score from second for the winning run.

In the second game, K-State got into trouble in the first inning by commiting two errors that allowed CCCC to score two runs but the 'Cats came back at their turn at bat to score a run.

Trouble didn't stop there as the Thunderbirds scored another run the next inning and then K-State's turn at bat was cut short when Deb Burdiek batted out of order to close the inning with the 'Cats behind 3-1.

K-State travels to Wichita today to play a doubleheader against Wichita State beginning at 4 p.m. The two teams split a twinbill earlier this year in Manhattan.

Twins 4, Mariners 1

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) - Pete Redfern, who had retired only three of 11 batters in his previous two appearances, pitched a five-hitter Tuesday as the Minnesota Twins beat the Seattle Mariners 4-1.

Roy Smalley and Rick Sofield had runscoring singles in the first inning as the Twins, helped by an error and an interference call, took a 2-0 lead.

Redfern, 2-1, retired the first 12 batters he faced before designated hitter Richie Zisk led off the Seattle fifth with a long home run to right-center. Zisk set a club record with the blast, which gave him a homer in five consecutive games. It was his seventh of the season, tops in the majors.

Chiefs fill team needs, Collegian pick couple tight ends classifieds

City Chiefs, admitting to a "crying need" at tight end, drafted two of them Tuesday, making South Carolina's Willie Scott their first-round selection in the National Football League draft.

After taking the 6-41/2, 245-pound Scott in round one, the Chiefs selected speedy running back Joe Delaney of Northwest Louisiana in the second round and traded running back Tony Reed to Denver for an extra pick in round three.

With three choices in the third round, Kansas City went for tight end Marvin Harvey of Southern Mississippi, offensive tackle Roger Taylor of Oklahoma State and Maryland defensive back Lloyd Burruss.

THE TRAINING CAMP battle between Scott and the 6-2, 222-pound Harvey will probably decide the starting tight end, where the Chiefs have been without a quality player since all-pro Fred Arbanas retired in 1970. Al Dixon, who led Chiefs' tight ends last season with seven receptions, has already been waived.

Scott was the first tight end and the 14th player selected.

"Tight end was a priority for the Chiefs and he was the best," personnel director Les Miller said. "We felt there was no other choice. There were some other fine players on the board when it came our turn to draft, but as a tight end, he fits all we are looking for. He has great size and good speed and comes to us after a productive career at South Carolina."

DESCRIBED AS A "dominating blocker" who helped clear the way for George Rogers to win the Heisman Trophy, Scott is also a capable receiver who caught 27 passes last season for 360 yards and two touchdowns in a run-oriented offense.

"He will have to earn his way into the lineup, but I would say he has a great shot at starting," coach Marv Levy said. "While he's not a burner, say, like Ozzie Newsome KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - The Kansas (of Cleveland) he must be respected as a receiver."

Delaney, the 41st overall selection, is a small, quick-starting type at 5-10, 186 and became the first Northwest Louisiana rusher to gain more than 3,000 career yards. He finished fifth in NCAA Division I-AA rushing last season with 1,110 yards.

"He's considered a speed back, but he's not just that," Miller said. "We feel he has great potential."

"We saw him in a couple of all-star games and we were impressed with him," Levy said. "Delaney is very quick, catches the ball well, and is tough for his size. We wanted to get help at running back."

THE TRADE OF REED returns the fouryear veteran to the state where he starred as a collegian and ends a checkered career with the Chiefs. A second-round pick in 1977 out of Colorado, he rushed for 1,053 yards his second season. But after a training camp contact squabble and off-season knee surgery, he carried only 68 times for 180 vards last year.

The third-round choice obtained for Reed was used to select Taylor, a 6-6, 265-pounder who shuttled between the offensive and defensive lines at Oklahoma State.

He was moved to offensive tackle after the start of the 1979 season.

"We feel Roger has excellent potential as an offensive tackle for us," Miller said. "He needs work and experience, that is for sure. Roger had only one complete season and a little of a second as an offensive lineman. But we feel he can develop here and play for

The Chiefs took Burruss with their third selection in round three, then used their fourth-round selection on Ron Washington, a wide receiver from Arizona State.

Harvey caught 28 passes last season at Southern Mississippi for 359 yards and three touchdowns and has been timed in 4.5 seconds in the 40-yard dash. A four-year letterman, his 14 touchdown receptions are second-highest in his school's history.

Economy changes women's fashion trends

If the current economic situation has an effect on fashions this spring, it will be in the styles women select, according to Eleanor Brent, manager of Woody's Ladies.

Women are now looking for investment clothes that are well-tailored and versatile. They are more willing to spend investment at the ankles. dollars on a better garment instead of buying trendy clothes, she said.

"Women are wanting more basic ensembles so they can be worn for more seasons," she said.

Because of the warm weather, many people bought their spring clothes early, so the economic situation will have more of an effect in the fall, Marlene Johnson, instructor of clothing, textiles and interior design, said.

Although the styles selected may be affected by the economy, Johnson expects student sales will be high. The biggest spenders are those in the 25 to 35 age group,

"They have the money to spend," she

THE TRENDS in fashion for spring are toward a softer and more feminine look. The most popular colors for men and women this spring are pastels.

Pink and lavender-not traditional colors for men, are being used as the basis of patterns and color themes, Johnson said. Darker colors and traditional bright spring colors are being used as accents.

The most popular colors for women this spring range from pales to brights-such as greens, blues, reds, spicy colors and neutrals, such as almond, khaki and gray.

The fabrics used this spring are sheer to sturdy, including cotton, polyester and cotton blends, raw linens, gauzes and crepes.

The designs have more volume, allowing for more versatility and comfort, Johnson

The prints this spring in women's clothing include exotic palms, Balinese flowers, jungle camouflage, feminine silk prints, polka dots and stripes.

"Skirts are becoming more and more

> BERMUDA SHORTS, Bermuda kilts, culottes and full, cuffed shorts are popular. The longer pant styles most often seen have cropped ankles and straight legs. Some longer, more narrow pants also have zippers

Some of the "exciting things" about this spring are the "good looking dresses available," Brent said. The lengths range from above-the-knee to knee-length. Dresses are available in a variety of styles this spring-casual to dressy-in one and two-piece styles and the simple shirtwaist

The dresses are fuller and are made of fabrics such as silk, crepe, gauze linens, chiffon and knits, she said. Pleats, gathers, ruffles, lace and embroidery are being seen in women's dresses.

Women's blouses included dressy and tailored styles. The most popular are the fuller-cut blouses, Johnson said. Tailored blouses to wear with suits are more feminine with small collars, tie collars or ascots with lace and ruffles.

THE MOST innovative styling for men this spring are in sweaters, she said. There are short sleeves, polo shirt variations, argyles

Senate will face coliseum debate for second time

By JIM LAURENCIG Collegian Reporter

Student Senate will vote tonight on a 1979 referendum committing students to financial support of a new coliseum.

On Feb. 20, senate voted to postpone any action on the issue until tonight's meeting. The postponement was designed to allow for more input into the funding arrangements of the proposed coliseum from all sources involved.

Doug Dodds, senate chairman, predicted the referendum will be killed. The referendum will be killed, he said, because of the limitations in it.

The referendum, voted on and approved by a 3-to-1 margin on Feb. 14, 1979, in the largest turn-out for a K-State student election, would commit student funding of $2.5 million for a 17,000 seat or more facility.

IT CALLS for a $5.75 increase in full-time student fees and a $4.50 increase in parttime fees per semester. After the stadium bonds are paid off, the $4.25 per semester full-time fee and 50 cents per semester parttime fee would also be committed to the coliseum.

Senate must vote this spring to determine if "substantial progress" has been made toward raising coliseum funds from other contributors. If senate decides substantial progress has not been made, the 1979 referendum will be voided.

If the referendum is dropped, there will be an attempt to pass a resolution addressing alternate coliseum plans and postponing any decision until next fall, Dodds said.

"If the referendum is killed and the resolution passed, senate will examine alternative funding levels and seek student input on these alternatives," he said.

"The information we've collected in the past months reflects the need to re-evaluate the level of student commitment," he said, adding senate will discuss student funding of up to $7 million.

A NEW REFERENDUM is not necessary, but one has not been ruled out, said Angela Scanlan, student body president

"There's the possibility of having a referendum," she said. "We just want to do what the students want us to do."

According to a report prepared by Scanlan, Dodds, and Mark Skinner, junior in political science, Ahearn Field House is inadequate. The approximate seating capacity of 11,300 is too small to host a major basketball tournament or NCAA playoff. Ahearn also does not meet state fire codes, lacking the proper number of exits for its capacity, the report said.

The report states renovation of Ahearn is not feasible. The most desirable option for renovation would cost approximately $5-6 million, providing only partial improvement for inadequacies now present and stopping all activity in the facility for six to nine

The projected cost of a 15,000 seat coliseum is $17-21 million, in projected 1985 dollars, the report said. The report stated that 15,000 seats is ample for tournament play, while a 17,000 seat arena would cost approximately $2 million more to build.

ALTHOUGH NO recommendations are made for an optimum amount of student funding, four alternatives were discussed in the report.

One alternative would commit no student funding, effectively ending the project.

Another alternative would keep the $2.5 million student commitment from the 1979 referendum. The report stated this financial commitment will "greatly reduce the chances of building a coliseum," because it would not be adequate.

A third alternative would form a funding triad composed of the students, the Foun-

Ceremony shows concern for Atlanta dead

By SHERRY BROWN Collegian Reporter For an hour Wednesday, the Union was the site of song, prayer, hope and even a tear or two. They were all part of a ceremony sponsored by Delta Sigma Theta and Omega Psi Phi fraternities to protest the slayings of 26 black youths in Atlanta. Although the fraternities are trying to raise money for the Atlanta cause, the emphasis of the program was to "create an awareness in the Manhattan community as well as on the K-State campus," said Dale Blanchard, president of Omega Psi Phi and senior in journalism and mass communications.

"Our overall purpose was to show concern," said Anita Cobbins, president of Delta Sigma Theta and senior in journalism and mass communications. "If you can hit a person's heart, everything else falls into place-be it financially or otherwise."

IT WAS evident by the hugs and handshakes received by Cobbins and Blanchard that the program hit many hearts.

"I felt that regardless of the number of people or regardless of whether we reach our (monetary) goal or not, the people that were here were touched," Cobbins said.

The program began at 11:45 a.m. with about 40 people marching across campus from Cardwell Hall to the Union. The group wore green armbands to "promote the green color, and as a revolutionary symbol," Blanchard said.

The marchers carried green signs, each bearing the name of a slain child, as they walked silently toward the Union. Once inside the building, a crowd of about 125 gathered to support the marchers.

The mood of the program was set with a spiritual by the United Black Voices and a prayer of hope by Cobbins' father, Deacon Cleotis Cobbins, of the Macedonia Missionary Baptist Church in Kansas City, Kan.

"The spiritual aspect comes out more in us, especially when something bad happens," Anita Cobbins said. "That's us as a black people."

IN HIS REMARKS, Blanchard makes us stop and think about the stressed that the victims were innocent children-not just black

"We're talking about children in general," he said. "We're talking about the future of America.'

Cobbins began a roll call of the slain youths, during which the representative carrying the child's name lighted a candle to symbolize the victim's life.

"These are the lives we have taken our time to show our concern for," she said.

Angela Scanlan, student body president, spoke about the significance of the gathering.

"This is important because it problem. But as I said, if we are lives of the innocent children and their families," she said.

Scanlan called the killings a "reflection on today's society," where violence is so prevalent.

AFTER ANOTHER song by United Black Voices, Provost Owen Koeppe spoke.

"I find this a very moving experience," Koeppe said. "I deeply regret the circumstances that brought us together."

Koeppe urged the crowd to help the cause in any way they could.

"Many of us sit on the sidelines and say we're not part of the of the problem," he said. "We need to dedicate ourselves to do everything we can to see that what has occurred will not occur again."

Cobbins then delivered an emotional speech, encouraging people to pray for an end to the crisis.

"I am reminded of a person who knows the answers. He's sitting high and sees low, and he sees it when it happens and he sees it when it ends," she said. "Sending $1,000 to Atlanta is good, but it is not enough."

THOSE HOLDING the symbolic candles were called forward again by Cobbins. As each name was or Cobbins.

not part of the solution, we are part called the flame was extinguished.

"These candles don't burn long," Cobbins said. "I am reminded of those that were slain-who only lived a short time."

The group has raised more than $800 so far, Blanchard said, and today is the last day they will accept donations. The goal of the group is to collect $1,000 by the end of the day to be sent to the Atlanta Life Development Center, he said. The center will use the money to provide counseling services for the families of the victims.

Donations are still being accepted and those wishing to contribute should contact Blanchard

dation, and non-traditional funding from the state Legislature, and ask for $5-7 million from each source. Non-traditional state funding that has been discussed is a tax on syrup for soft drinks or a "sin tax" on cigarettes or liquor.

ADDING ATHLETIC revenues of $2-2.5 million to the triad is the fourth alternative. The amount requested from the Legislature would be decreased by that amount. Athletic revenues used for the coliseum would come from surcharges assessed on general admission and faculty-staff tickets, parking revenues and lifetime season tickets from revenue-producing sports, the report said.

The alternatives prepared were presented to student senators this week in college caucuses by Scanlan, Dodds and Skinner.

The Foundation has expressed its willingness to help fund a new facility, according to Art Loub, executive vice president of the Foundation.

"The executive committee (of the Foundation) is committed to raise one-third of the economic resources required for the facility, assuming it's a 'go' program," Loub said. "This is a statement of support by the Foundation."

UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT Duane Acker will attend the senate meeting and will answer senators' questions about the coliseum issue.

"I'm appearing at the request of student leadership to explain what has happened to date," he said.

Acker expressed the "desire to make any state investment minimal and nontraditional."

"It appears to me that is the desire of all parties who are taking part in this decision," Acker said, referring to students, the administration and the Foundation.

Proposals to the Legislature depend on action taken by students within the next two to three years, Acker said, adding that any contact with legislators concerning funding for the coliseum would be premature.

Acker said a number of University officials have been consulted, including DeLoss Dodds, athletic director; Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities; and Daniel Beatty, vice president for business affairs.

Including Acker, other officials expected to attend the meeting to answer questions are: Dodds; Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs; Bob Bruce, director of information; and Jim Shepard, University architect.

Basketball coaches Jack Hartman and Lynn Hickey and basketball player Rolando Blackman are also expected to attend.

Israeli jets strike Palestinian bases

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets pounded Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon Wednesday, and guerrilla rockets from Lebanon hit northern Israel. Meanwhile, the Syrians moved sophisticated antiaircraft missiles into eastern Lebanon. witnesses reported.

The deployment of the Soviet-built, surface-to-air missiles was seen as a counter to Israeli jets that shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships Tuesday and a serious development that might widen the Syrian-Israeli confrontation. "It is the kind of escalation we fear," a Western diplomat

'Yorkshire Ripper' admits to killings

LONDON — Truck driver Peter Sutcliffé admitted Wednesday he is the Yorkshire Ripper, killer of 13 women and namesake of one of history's most notorious murderers. But he pleaded innocent at London's historic Old Bailey Criminal Court to murder charges, saying he was not responsible for his actions.

Sutcliffe said he was guilty of manslaughter, pleading grounds of "diminished responsibility," or lack of mental competence. The judge expressed "grave anxieties" about Sutcliffe's plea and ordered a jury trial to decide whether Sutcliffe committed manslaughter or murder.

Sutcliffe is to stand trial before a jury in the Old Bailey next Tuesday.

The bearded Sutcliffe, 34, showed no emotion during Wednesday's reading of the charges against him, glancing only briefly at his wife, Sonia, as he left the dock flanked by four prison officers.

The dark, frizzy-haird Yorkshireman is accused of carrying out a five-year string of savage slayings in the north of England.

Pilot flies low on Oklahoma turnpike

ANTLERS, Okla. — A pilot flying his single-engine plane the 80 miles from McAlester, Okla., to Paris, Texas, became just another southbound motorist when he landed on the Indian Nation Turnpike and pulled into a service station.

Kenneth Dale Bolyard, 33, of Powderly, Texas, taxied down the turnpike median west of here Monday after his plane's oil pump apparently failed.

He brought the plane down between two southbound vehicles and headed for the filling station, a mechanic at the station told the Oklahoma Highway Patrol. The pilot then left the plane to await repairs, taking ground transportation for the rest of the trip.

Marchers protest Boston layoffs

BOSTON — Hundreds of demonstrators protesting police and firefighter layoffs formed an angry human blockade against rush-hour traffic Wednesday while penniless schools stayed open under a court order and Boston reeled one day closer to bankruptcy.

Meanwhile, a city lawyer asked the Superior Court ruling keeping schools in session be overturned so politicians can resolve the crisis he claimed will force the city to spend money it doesn't have.

State Supreme Court Judge Ruth Abrams promised to issue a ruling quickly on the request by attorney Stephen Oleskey.

Earlier in the day, demonstrators blocked several of the major roads and bridges leading into the city during rush hour. Several hundred demonstrators—many of them off-duty and laid-off firefighters—took part, with several dozen marching arm-in-arm down the middle of the Southeast Expressway, the major highway for commuters from the southern suburbs.

Car ownership costs increase in 1981

WASHINGTON — The annual cost of owning and operating a new intermediate-size automobile has risen about 13 percent in the past year, the America Automobile Association (AAA) said Tuesday.

The average cost of owning and driving the 1981 car is $3,601 annually, or 24 cents a mile, the association said in a written statement. This compared with a cost of $3,176, or 21.2 cents per mile, in a similar survey taken on a new model last year.

The AAA said the survey was based on a six-cylinder 1981 Chevrolet Malibu driven up to 15,000 annually and kept four years.

The expense broke down to $1,226 in variable costs such as those for gasoline, oil, maintenance and tires, and $2,375 in fixed costs such as those for insurance, license and registration fees, depreciation and finance charges.

Gardners buy out rubber snake stores

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Rubber snakes have been disappearing from Kansas City stores in recent weeks, and the buyers aren't children or practical jokers.

Rather, the popularity of the fake snakes has been spawned by gardners who use them to ward off birds after planting their gardens.

"There is a run on them this time of year," said Vernon Russert, vice president of Toy Hobby Distributors Inc., a wholesale toy company. "Even people in the city put them on window ledges to keep the pigeons off." He said the company was three to four weeks behind in filling orders.

Unaffordable alternative

Tonight, Student Senate will hear reports from various campus administrators concerning methods for funding a new coliseum.

The fate of a 1979 referendum committing $2.5 million in student funds will be voted on.

A report conducted by Student Body President Angela Scanlan, Senate Chairman Doug Dodds and former senator Mark Skinner was prepared for members of Student Senate concerning alternatives for funding the coliseum.

According to the report, the present student committment is insufficient and more student funding will be necessary to build the structure which is estimated to cost approximately $20 million.

Students voted on the referendum with the idea $2.5 million was all they would have to raise. Killing this referendum in an attempt to garner more student funding would be unfair with large tuition increases scheduled and a bleak economic outlook expected.

Senate should either decide to pass the referendum as it stands and not force students to pledge any more money to a facility which is unnecessary in light of other sorely needed campus improvements or kill the proposal entirely until more conducive financial conditions prevail.

Back to work

Speaking before a joint session of Congress Tuesday night, President Reagan urged bipartisan support for his budget and tax-cut recommendations. The address was unique in that Reagan was not rallying support for an entire program, rather one specific piece of legislation.

The members of Congress, recognizing Reagan's return to power after the assassination attempt, accorded him a hero's welcome. The gallery exploded with applause several times, including three standing ovations. In recent American political history, such support has been rare.

Reagan should take advantage of this widespread support and enthusiasm. Momentum is something that many presidents are never able to obtain, and it can be a positive and constructive force. As this country has shown many times in the past, great things can be accomplished when a nation stands behind its president. Despite his many distractors, President Reagan currently enjoys that position.

Although it is sad that the president must be wounded before we offer our support, he now has the opportunity and obligation to do something with it.

Boxing for charity

Editor,

I would like to take exception to Kent Singer's editorial "Abolish Fight Night." Although I am not an avid fan of boxing, I see no reason for Singer's plea to discontinue Sigma Phi Epsilon's charity fund raising project.

The concept of sponsoring a wellorganized boxing match takes violence no farther than the violence occurring on the football field every weekend in the fall. As a sports fan and writer, I have seen more injuries on the gridiron than have occurred in both nights of fighting thus far in the boxing tournament.

The Sig Ep tourney is officiated by Golden Gloves referees and judges, with orders to stop a fight at the first sign of injury. No knockouts have occurred, since the referees have been awarding technical knockouts before an injury is possible.

The fighters use 16-ounce gloves, twice the size of professional boxing gloves. This means added protection to the victim of a punch. Head gear is also allowed.

The fights last only three rounds with most of the boxers exhausted by the middle of the second, too tired to do any damage.

If the University is allowed to sponsor varsity football, the Sig. Eps should be allowed their boxing match for charity.

Not another fundraiser!

There are certain expenses every red-blooded student attending college expects to pay.

There are tuition, room and board costs which take a substantial bite out of a semester's budget. There are books to buy and even more books to buy. Then, of course, there is entertainment—in Manhattan, many students spell that A-G-G-I-E-V-I-L-L-E. There is also a significant number of students wandering about who believe an expensive stereo is also a necessary expense.

And—at least at K-State—a handsome sum needs to be set aside for charity. Hardly a weekend passes that students aren't asked to pledge money to some sort of "thon." We have bump-a-thons, rock-a-thons, dance-a-thons, card-a-thons, fighta-thons, walk-a-thons, jog-a-thons and, well, the numbing list could go on.

One wonders if, in fact, there aren't enough charities to satisfy this student body. We have the United Fund (which I erroneously thought was supposed to encompass all charities), Easter Seals, the Heart Fund, Cancer Fund, Muscular Dystrophy Fund, Red Cross Fund, and, well that list too, could go on.

It is with little wonder our tuition is to be jacked up an incredible 22 percent next fall. The Board of Regents probably took one look at all the money students dole out in a philanthropic spirit and decided those dollars could be diverted instead to the board's favorite charity—higher education.

This should not be mistaken as an attack on charities and fund-raising. Far be it. I'm all for finding a cure for cancer and it would make me happy if birth defects were eliminated tomorrow. I'm more than aware that each organization needs money to operate on. Each needs money for research. And each needs money to advertise to get more money. But I kind of wonder if a saturation point is not around the corner.

Wouldn't it be grand if Student Senate would collect a list of all the charities that circulate about campus, place them in a hopper and in the fall drew just one name? Then all the fund-raising groups could gather in all their creativity and with all their energy for one weekend in a University-wide super-thon.

Or maybe the money collected from the super-thon could be distributed to all the charities. Anyway, if we knew we would be hit up just once a year perhaps our spirit of giving would be bolstered. Frankly, I just don't like being pestered for money all the time. But even with this humbug attitude, I suppose I could be bothered once every 365 days and fork over five or ten dollars.

All of this, of course, leads to the invitation of all readers to a benefit softball game Saturday afternoon between the K-State Collegian staff and the people at KSDB-FM. The game will benefit child abuse prevention. It will be played south of the Tuttle Creek tubes at 1:00.

Violations ignored

Editor.

I am angry that people such as Mark Reasoner and Marty Kennedy, who responded to Alan Moberly's letter against funding the Coalition on Human Rights, can so lightly pass off the violations of human rights in communist countries.

I am angry that people like Reasoner can totally ignore the fact that 65 million people have been murdered by the communists in China since 1949, and 100 million have been murdered in the Soviet Union since 1917. I am angry that they seem totally insensitive to the cries of the Christians in the Soviet Union today who are savagely beaten to death for worshipping as they please, and I am angry that Reasoner and Kennedy can forget that the people in Afghanistan are defending their human rights against mortars, nerve gas and 85,000 communist soldiers.

I am angry at the naive comment by Reasoner that communism is desired by the people who live under it, because the facts speak otherwise. Tens of thousands left Cuba when they had the chance. The boatpeople fled communism despite impossible odds of survival, and people only leave the Soviet Union by stealing a fighter plane, by jumping off of fishing trawlers or by holding on to the wheels of an airliner for a death ride at 35,000 feet.

I am angry that Reasoner and Kennedy claim we can do nothing to stop these human rights violations under communism. We can do something by refusing to support communist countries militarily, diplomatically or economically. They have proclaimed that their goal is to overthrow us, yet we sell them IBM computers to aim their missiles and Texas Intruments' on-board computers to guide their missiles. We loan them money through the Chase Manhattan Bank to build a truck factory to construct the trucks and tanks that rolled into Afghanistan. Without our support the Soviet Union would cease to be the superpower western technology has Finally, I am angry that the Coalition for Human Rights absolutely ignored these human rights violations under communism in their Lou Douglas Series on Human Rights. Instead they brought in liberals like former Senator Dick Clark, who is on-the-record as praising Maoist revolutionaries in Latin America, and Mrs. Orlando Letelier, whose husband was a Marxist and associated with the KGB. How can the Coalition for Human Rights expect to receive Student Senate funding when they tell us only half the truth—and even that from a biased point of view. I am glad their requests were voted down.

RE: Damien Semanitzky's column on aviation.

For the second time this semester I agree with Semanitzky—something of a milestone in my four years at K-State. Her column on the conditions of equipment and support given the nation's air traffic controllers was right on the money.

Considering the lack of modern equipment and the rotten conditions controllers work under, it's a wonder that we don't suffer from the same types of controller strikes that have plagued Canada and European countries. Continued work under these conditions is a show of the dedication and professionalism air traffic controllers in the nation possess.

My only disagreement with Damien comes in her description of pilot qualifications. While it's true most accidents are caused by pilot error, pilots in this country are required to do much more than just land the thing somewhere in the

Severance tax issue needs rule suspension

TOPEKA (AP) - The Kansas Senate will tax bill. "I haven't, anyway." vote today whether to suspend a rule to permit debate and a roll call vote on a new severance tax bill, Senate President Ross Doyen (R-Concordia) said Wednesday.

Doyen said the Republican leadership will do nothing to block a straight-forward decision on a parliamentary move by Democratic Leader Jack Steineger to gain consideration of the severance tax bill if there are 21 senators who want to debate it and vote on it.

Steineger introduced his bill Wednesday as the Legislature reconvened following a 19-day recess for a three-day wrap up session, which is scheduled to adjourn late Friday.

The new severance tax bill, submitted by Steineger and eight of his fellow Democrats, was introuduced in the senate, along with a resolution to suspend a rule which prohibits consideraton of an individually-sponsored bill this late in the session.

STEINEGER ALSO served notice on the Senate that he will move today to debate and act on the resolution and the bill. By declaring his intention Wednesday, Steineger avoided needing a two-thirds vote, or 27 votes, to consider the bill and Doyen assigned the bill to the Senate Ways and Means Committee and the resolution to the Senate Governmental Organizational Committee, but said the committees would take no action on them.

That means a simple majority of the 40member Senate, or 21 senators, can vote today to consider the resolution and the bill.

If the committees were to kill either the resolution or the bill, the two-thirds votes would be needed to resurrect them, regardless of Steineger's parliamentary moves.

HOWEVER, DOYEN said that would not happen.

"I just don't want to be accused any longer of putting roadblocks in the way of that rascal," he said of the the severance

> KSU Cheerleaders on Display Saturday at Sieferts

Some saw Doyen's decision not to have the committees act on the bill and resolution a strong indication he doesn't think Steineger can get 21 votes. But he claimed he doesn't know how the vote will go.

Doyen told the Senate Wednesday Steineger had properly declared his intention under Senate rule.

The question remained whether Steineger could muster the 21 votes needed to adopt the resolutinon and win consideration of the bill. He conceded, "It'll be tough."

GOV. JOHN CARLIN, who has campaigned hard for reconsideration of the severance proposal, which the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee killed April 1 after the House passed it, said he will stress that a vote for Steineger's motion on the resolution is a vote for the severance

"No senator is going to get away with the claim that it's just a vote ona procedural motion," the governor said.

"When Sen. Steineger makes his motion, it will be the same as if they are voting on the severance tax itself. We have an honest oportunity to vote on a fair way of funding education in this state.

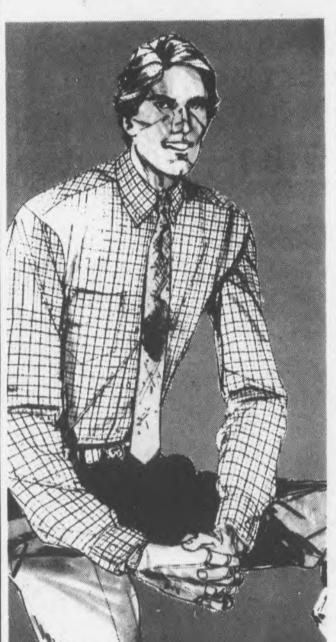

"Kansans understand that, and all Kansas is going to be watching them.'

The bill would impose a production tax of 5 percent on oil and natural gas and 2 percent on coal, with small oil and gas wells and royalty owners exempted. It would commit $80 million of the projected first-year revenue of $113 million to funding schools and reducing property taxes.

The Republcan caucus met behind closed doors Wednesday, but didn't reach consensus on a party position on the severance tax or school finance. Sources said there were several Republican senators who let Doyen know they don't want games played with the severance bill and want to vote on national gauge of future economic strength rebounded in March, the government reported Wednesday, one day after President Reagan complained anew in an address to Congress that the economy was severely ailing.

Experts have doubts about economic gains

The 1.4 percent gain in the index of leading indicators—the biggest increase in six months—came despite Reagan's contention that the economy urgently needs the proposals he is asking Congress to approve.

However, economists inside and outside the government quickly cautioned that the March performance of the index should not be taken at face value.

The index, which is designed to forecast future economic trends, was heavily influenced by crude oil prices, which shot up after Reagan's decontrol order early this

THE COMMERCE Department, which computes the index, considers price increases in raw materials-including oil-as positive economic indicators because they can indicate growing demand.

However, William Cox, acting chief economist at the Commerce Department, said the March oil-price increase was basically "a regulatory phenomenon" which should be discounted by anyone trying to interpret the new report. Private economists agreed.

Commerce analysts said that without the oil distortion, the index would have risen

WASHINGTON (AP) - An important about 0.2 percent in March, a performance Cox called "a very moderate upturn."

But even a small gain-following index declines for three straight months-would reflect economic improvement, making the report the fifth major positive signal in less than two weeks.

TWO RECENT government reports said national output and worker productivity rose at their fastest paces in several years in the first three months of this year. And two others showed inflation moderating and the nation's trade balance improving dramatically in March.

Critics of Reagan's "economic recovery" plans are now saying that his ideas-especially his proposal to cut tax rates-would risk a new surge in inflation if approved at a time when the national economy is already moving along briskly.

Through it all, the administration has insisted the economy is still weak and will grow weaker in the next few months.

At the White House, Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes was asked whether there would be any comment on the favorable figures in light of the president's contention that the economy faces continued difficulties.

"I don't have anything on that," Speakes

Private economists, commenting after the new Commerce report was released, said there will be little or no growth in the immediate future, with year-end improvement possible if Congress approves a tax cut.

Conservative Democrats hold budget key in House

WASHINGTON (AP) Democratic leaders scrambled Wednesday to hold the party's ranks for a looming budget showdown, but rebellious con-servatives stressed their determination to join the Republican minority to pass President Reagan's package.

One congressman said as many as 35 of the 47 members of the Conservative Democratic Forum probably will support the president's proposal over an alternative budget plan still being pieced together by the Democratic leadership.

In addition, Rep. Charles Stenholm (D-Texas) predicted that six to 10 Democrats who are not members of the forum also will go along with Reagan, who addressed Congress Tuesday night in a nationally televised appeal for enactment of his program.

If correct, Stenholm's count coupled with Republican claims that they will suffer only two or three defections would give Reagan a stunning victory in the Democraticcontrolled House next week.

The Senate Budget Committee approved a plan drawn to White House specifications Tuesday and a final vote in the GOPdominated Senate is expected within two

At issue is a budget outline that would set guidelines for Congress to follow later in the year on spending and taxes. The precise

House shape of spending cuts and tax reductions themselves will not be worked out for weeks

Opponents of the president's plan in the House, including Rep. Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.) conceded that Reagan had helped his cause with the speech, his first since surviving an assassination attempt March Gephardt and other Democrats on the Budget Committee met privately to decide precisely which alternative plan to take to the floor for a vote.

They said head counts were in progress to determine whether the conservatives could be enticed back into the Democratic fold by a proposal to balance the budget next year.

Joint panel OKs bill lowering juvenile age

TOPEKA (AP) - Touted as a move to appeal rights of juveniles. crack down on youthful crime, a joint House-Senate conference committee agreed Wednesday to lower the juvenile age to 16 for all crimes beginning next year.

If approved by the full membership of the House and Senate, which must consider the change, the bill would roll back the age for prosecution of juveniles as adults from 18 to 16 years of age—the same as it was before 1965 when it was increased.

A six-member conference committee, made up of lawyer members of the judiciary committees in both houses, worked out the agreement after nearly 90 minutes of negotiation. Four members backed the lower age, while two opposed it as being too

Panel members will review a final draft of their report Thursday, and decide whether to give it final endorsement. If the report is adopted, the bill would first go to the House.

THOSE SUPPORTING the lower age were Sens. Elwaine Pomeroy, R-Topeka; Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City; and Reps. Joe Hoagland, R-Overland Park; and Karen Griffiths, R-Newton.

Sen. Norman Garr, R-Westwood, and Rep. Michael Crow, D-Leavenworth, opposed it.

The change came as the conference committee considered a bill which was requested by Attorney General Robert Stephan. As passed by both houses, the proposal would have lowered the juvenile age to 16 years only for the most violent crimes-Class A and B felonies, which include different types of murder, rape, and

Committee OKs prison-term bill

TOPEKA (AP) - A new approach toward making sure some criminals serve longer terms was approved Wednesday by the Judiciary Committee of the Kansas House.

The bill, a revision of a Senate measure, would allow a judge to specify that some criminals are not to be paroled until after they have served at least 30 years, but it would not mandate such terms.

Chairman Joseph Hoagland (R-Overland Park) said the new proposal is the product of work by House Speaker Wendell Lady (R-Overland Park).

"The only thing wrong with this bill is that I didn't think of it," Hoagland said. "The speaker pretty much did it all himself."

It provides that in case-of class A felonies-1st degree murder, aggravated kidnapping, aircraft piracy and treason—the judge could set parole eligibility at any point between 15 and 30 years.

Previous bills generally sought to mandate in class A felony cases that 30 years must be served before becoming eligible for

In a rare move for a conference committee, however, the panel held two days of public hearings, taking testimony from more than two dozen witnesses—judges, lawyers, social workers, police and even Stephan-on the idea of lowering the juvenile age.

CONFERENCE committee broadened the bill to require that anyone 16 years and older who is charged with a crime would be treated as an adult during the the change to be studied and determine what

At the time of sentencing, however, a judge would have the authority to decide whether a 16 or 17-year-old defendant would best be handled under the juvenile or the harsher adult criminal codes.

That provision was pushed by Steineger as a "safety valve" to protect some young

In addition, the age lowering would not take effect until July 1, 1982 to allow time for its full effect might be.

A committee of the Kansas Judicial Council is currently under way with a project to overhaul the state's laws governing juvenile crime.

The bill, as changed, also eliminates a socalled "interlocutory appeal" by juveniles of court rulings certifying them as adults. That will be in effect only until the age is lowered. It means an appeal of the certification ruling could be taken to a higher court only after conclusion of the proceeding and a guilty finding in court.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) -Catholic rioters hurled gasoline bombs at police and British troops Wednesday in support of Bobby Sands, the jailed Irish Republican Army (IRA) guerrilla reported so emaciated by 60 days of fasting he was put in a water bed and taped to keep his bones from breaking through his skin.

The rioters set fire to a tobacco factory and furniture warehouse but firemen extinguished the flames and security forces dispersed the mobs with plastic bullets. There was no immediate report of injuries in the clash in north Belfast.

Sands, recently elected to British Parliament, is in prison on a weapons possession conviction. He is on hunger strike in a bid to force the British government to grant jailed IRA guerrillas rights that would give them political status.

Senate panel kills Kansas parity bill

TOPEKA (AP) - The Senate Judiciary Committee killed a proposal Wedneday which would have made Kansas the first state to mandate a minimum price on

The bill would have set a fluctuating price floor for Kansas wheat at 70 percent of parity, and made it a criminal act punishable by a jail sentence and fine to sell the grain below the minimum price.

After brief discussion, the Senate panel agreed on unrecorded voice vote to report the bill adversely to the full Senate, killing it for all practical purposes. It would take a two-thirds majority vote of the Senate to resurrect it.

The action outraged some of the nearly 75 farmers who jammed into the committee hearing room.

"They're going to pay for it—pay for it dearly," one farmer ex claimed as he left.

The coalition of farm organizations which promoted the bill late this session issued a statement a couple of hours later which was conciliatory, although it said the farmers were greatly disappointed.

The bill was pushed by the coalition, including the American Agricultural Movement and the National Farmers Organization. However, the state's biggest farm organization, the Kansas Farm Bureau, was cool to the idea.

The bill would have used the parity index set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. At 70 percent of that index, the price of Kansas wheat presently would be $4.87 a bushel. It sold at $4.15 at Topeka elevators Wednesday.

As senators left the room, groups of farmers cornered them, pressing for explanations of their votes.

Most committee members said the bill, developed and introduced in late March, needed more study.

Magee visited Sands at the Maze for one hour Tuesday night and returned to the prison Wednesday after meeting with Britain's top minister in Northern Ireland, Secretary of State Humphrey Atkins, who told him Britain would not grant Sands' demands.

Sands, 27, was reported drifting into unconsciousness frequently. He has dropped from 155 pounds to 90 pounds and was lying on a waterbed with his elbows, knees, heels and ankles bandaged to prevent bone from breaking through skin, British official sources said.

Sinn Fein, the IRA's political wing, said Sands, who has twice received the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church, was "extremely weak" and could die "at any moment,"

MEANWHILE, civil defense committees PRESS ASSOCIATION, Britain's sprang up in both Catholic and Protestant areas of this British provincial capital and mapped emergency plans for first-aid stations and evacuation centers should Sands die and widespread violence break

Shopkeepers in Catholic areas reported a rush on milk and canned foods, and stores in West Belfast said they were sold out of Police said four men burst into Belfast's Hospital for Sick Children in the Catholic Falls Road area and fled with bundles of bandages.

Belfast's Transport Authority moved buses from its three main depots, fearing they would be used as rioting barricades.

Police also continued to round up Sands' supporters under emergency powers. A spokesman for Sinn Fein said 60 activists were being held.

British security officials claimed the arrests have curbed the guerrillas' offensive capability but conceded they were still capable of inflicting great damage.

Ban on blind bidding gives buyers preview

People who go to a movie and find themselves suffering through a boring picture may get some relief after a Kansas law is enacted in July which outlaws "blind

The new law requires a film distributor to show the film to the buyer before a contract is signed between them. This stops the practice of blind bidding-selling film rights to a buyer who hasn't seen the movie.

"Blind bidding is at the (movie) distributor's discretion," said Bob Howard, city manager of Manhattan's Commonwealth Theaters. Bids for Commonwealth Theaters are made by bookers in Kansas City, he said.

With blind bidding, the buyer for the theater may overbid because the movie features a star-filled cast or a well-known director, Howard said. After he is committed, the theater must show that picture, no matter how bad it may be.

The type of commitments between distributer and buyer vary. It may contain any or all of these: a percentage of sales, a guarantee of a large sum, a guarantee to run the film a certain length of time, and occasionally the distributor must be paid immediately.

HOWARD USED AN example of blind bidding and its consequences. Several years ago, the film "A Bridge Too Far" was made. The buyer for Commonwealth, through the process of blind bidding, made the commitment to bring the movie to Manhattan.

"Although it had a very strong cast, it was a very poor movie," Howard said. "We had to run it for four weeks at the Campus

A poor film that has been committed to

By STEVE CULVER run for a certain length of time cuts into the theater's chance to show other films which people would enjoy more, Howard said.

The cost of the film must be absorbed by the theater, and this could have led to another ticket price increase if the bill had not been passed, Howard said. He says he does not believe the present $3 ticket prices will decrease because of the law.

THE CHANCE OF film quality improving depends on the film producers, Howard

"The quality of film should improve provided that the quality of films being made improves," he said.

In the event of a choice between two poor pictures the better of the two could be selected, because of the new law.

The new law won't have much effect on the Union Program Council (UPC) feature films, according to Peter Manfredo, senior in fisheries and wildlife biology and chairman of the UPC feature films com-

"It may have an affect on film choices," Manfredo said. "If Commonwealth and other theaters choose not to run a film, that film may get released sooner."

Manfredo explained that films are released in two stages.

"First films are released theatrically (blind bidding)," he said.

A non-theatrical release is given to a competing theater in the area only after the theater which signed the theatrical release fulfills its commitment, Howard said.

UPC receives feature films through the non-theatrical release, Manfredo said.

"We sit down and select a (movie) list from people in the committee," Manfredo said. "We compile this and vote."

Weather vane of Kansa tribe chief may put finishing touch on Capitol

TOPEKA (AP) - A bill expressing the Legislature's support for a proposal to place a 23-foot bronze statue of a chief of the Kansa Indian Tribe on top of the statehouse as a wind vane will be introduced into the said, it wouldn't cost taxpayers a cent. Kansas Senate.

The measure represents the latest idea for putting the finishing touches on the Capitol, the cornerstone of which was laid in 1866.

Since the dome was completed in 1903, legislators and others have been trying to agree on what should adorn the 231/2-foot cupola that is the peak of the structure.

Over the years, including as recently as 1979, there have been several proposals to use a statue of Ceres, the Roman goddess of agriculture. They have failed, largely because of Ceres' reputation and some legislators' concern over her morality.

THE LATEST PROPOSAL is to place a statue of White Plume, one of four great Kansa chiefs on the Capitol. The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee agreed Wednesday to introduce the bill, ensuring that it at least will receive some attention this session.

The idea came from Gerald Chase, a Topeka house painter, handyman and parttime sculptor.

Chase has said the statue he is designing would always face the wind, turning freely on bearings on a round base that would rest 305 feet above the ground. Best of all, he

Under his plan, the estimated cost of $500,000 to $1 million would be paid for by private donations and proceeds from selling replicas of the statute.

Chase is designing a 15-inch bronze statute of White Plume, which will be duplicated and the replicas sold as collector's items. Donations also would be accepted to fund the project.

Agriculture Committee rejects Reagan's wheat-price program

Agriculture Committee on Wednesday formally rejected President Reagan's price support program for wheat.

But the committee, apparently bent on supports more expensive than the administration proposed, was unable to reach agreement on an alternative.

In the House, an agriculture sub-committee continued ignoring Reagan's program, adopting price support loan rates for wheat and corn at levels higher than he originally planned and retaining the target, or deficiency, payments Reagan wants eliminated.

After rejecting a number of more expensive alternatives to the president's program, the Senate committee delayed action on grain supports in hope of negotiating a compromise.

"The American people are not going to be tolerant of this committee," Sen. Richard Lugar (R-Ind.) warned, if it doesn't "stay within the guidelines of the president."

Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), committee chairman, has warned the panel it faces a veto of any bill too divergent from that submitted by Agriculture Secretary John Block. Helms also said "adjustments" may be needed in some programs tentatively WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate agreed to because they far exceed Block's spending limits.

Following the 11-5 vote against Reagan's wheat support program, William Lesher, the Agriculture Department's economics chief, told the committee the administration could accept somewhat higher grain support levels than it originally recommended.

The administration's proposal, which would have cost nearly $700 million next year and $2.2 billion over four years, called for discretion for the agriculture secretary in setting loan rates. Some of the cost is recovered in later years as loans are repaid.

"I have talked to the secretary and the deputy secretary," Lesher said. "There is some room for latitude in regard to increasing the loan rate a little bit."

But he emphasized the administration remains "strongly" opposed to any price support loan program retaining target prices or requiring loan rates to be adjusted annually under a rigid formula.

Lesher indicated that "about the maximum we can go" is a wheat support program that would cost next year some $290 million more than the administration's originally planned and about $1.8 billion more over its four-year life.

Off-beat humor of cult film highlights'Where's Poppa'

By JIM MELIZA Collegian Reviewer

"Love American Style" will live on forever in the form of reruns. Its eternal existence on the airwaves is both a curse and a blessing because its humor is a potpourri of inconsistency. One moment the stories are genuinely funny, and the next they reek of juvenile pretensions.

Movies are something like television programs. If they can find a specific audience, movies can become cult films and

In 1970 Carl Reiner, known for his work with the "Dick Van Dyke Show" and "Oh God!", made "Where's Poppa?". As Reiner's sole cult film, it would be tempting to declare the movie stillborn, but that wouldn't be totally accurate.

Gordon (George Segal) resides with his senile mother (Ruth Gordon) who demands constant attention. Her insistent domination ruins his law practice, as well as destroys his love life. Her life, on the other hand, is filled with television and her asking as to the whereabouts of her deceased husband.

Gordon calls his brother Sidney (Ron Leibman) to take custody of their mother. before he throws her out the window or commits her to a rest home. Sidney reprimands him by recalling Poppa's dying words, that Sidney should get married and

18-year promise to result in Quinlan Natural Area

By CONNIE CLOWE Collegian Reporter

The University will begin construction on a garden next month in an effort to fulfill an 18-year promise to L.R. Quinlan, K-State's first landscape architect.

"In 1963 a commitment was made to Quinlan, promising that there would be an area developed that would carry his name as a way of paying tribute to his fine efforts on behalf of the University," Jim Miller, associate director of the KSU Foundation,

"Work will begin in earnest this May," he said. "We hope that when students return in the fall we can have the area pretty well developed."

A TRIANGULAR section of land between Petticoat Lane and Mid-Campus Drive, south of Boyd Hall, was set aside by the University, and designated as the L.R. Quinlan Natural Area in 1964, Miller said.

At this time, an "educational circle," wooden poles arranged in a circle, was built, and a stone was put on the site with an inscription dedicating the area to him. However, that is all that has been done to the site in the past 18 years.

Plans for the area consist of new walkways; a visitor's area; an outdoor classroom setting, able to accomodate up to 35 people; and three areas which will have "Quinlan garden will be used by various academic departments and for outdoor study by the students," he said.

The garden will be in an area that is currently shaded by trees. Miller said this site can be given a new look with land-

TOPEKA (AP) - A constitutional amendment to legalize pari-mutuel betting on horse and greyhound dog racing was introduced Wednesday in the Kansas House by its Federal and State Affairs Committee.

Rep. Neal Whitaker (R-Wichita), committee chairman, said it was submitted because a majority of the members wanted to get it introduced so it will be there when the legislature returns next year.

He disclaimed any idea of an attempt to win adoption of the proposed amendment in the short amount of time remaining in the 1981 session.

A similar amendment was introduced earlier in the Senate but has been bottled up in committee.

Whitaker said he thinks some of the House committee members may have had the idea that introduction of the resolution in the lower legislative branch might spur action by the Senate committee.

If the proposed amendment is to be submitted to a vote of the people, it would appear it makes little difference whether legislative approval is in the 1981 or 1982 sessions. The earliest a vote could come would be in the 1982 elections.

The Rev. Richard Taylor, president of Kansans for Life at its Best, an organization primarily dedicated to opposition of beverage alcohol but also an opponent of pari-mutuel betting, said he could not understand why the Houe committee would introduce a resolution at this stage of the Fish and Game sets hunting dates

PRATT (AP) - The Kansas Fish and Game Commission Wednesday announced the dates for the 1981 big game and waterfowl seasons, while approving a zoning proposal designed to "tailor different habitats to the desires of duck hunters," a commission spokesman said.

Bob Mathews said the commission set Dec. 5 through Dec. 13 as the season for using firearms to hunt deer. The panel approved the issuance of 19,400 permits for the season, an increase of 30 percent over 1980, when 15,010 permits were issued. As in past years, the archery deer season was divided into two segments, Oct. 1 to Dec. 2 and Dec. 16 to Dec. 31.

The commission set Oct. 24 to Dec. 6 and Dec. 26 to Jan. 10 as the duck hunting seasons for Zone 1 in south-central Kansas; Oct. 31 to Dec. 13 and Dec. 26 to Jan. 10 as the seasons for Zone 2, which encompasses north-central, northeast and southeast Kansas, and Oct. 10 to Dec. 6 and Dec. 12 to Jan. 5 as the seasons for the High Plains area west of U.S. 283.

Johnson whips injury to become top golfer

By CARI CAVASSA Collegian Reporter

It wasn't on Brad Johnson's schedule to tear the ligaments in his ankle while playing intramural basketball a few weeks before the K-State golf team was to begin spring practice.

But Johnson, a junior in finance, is proof the ability to win or perform well is mostly a state of mind.

In a cast and on crutches, Johnson missed the first month of practice. But finally the day came when the cast was removed, and Johnson wasted no time getting ready for the remainder of the golf season.

Not to be denied by his teammates, he qualified for a spot on the four-man traveling squad that would participate in the Wichita Classic April 16-17. Only seven days earlier, Johnson began hitting balls for the

Rockets oust Kings; Celtics remain alive

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Moses Malone scored 36 points, Robert Reid and Billy Paultz scored 12 apiece and Paultz grabbed two crucial rebounds in the final two minutes Wednesday night, propelling the Houston Rockets past Kansas City, 97-88, and into the championship finals of the National Basketball Association.

The Rockets, who never led until midway through the fourth quarter, outscored Kansas City, 12-4, in the final three minutes to win the Western Conference championship, four games to one.

The Rockets will meet the Eastern Conference champion, Boston or Philadelphia, in the first championship appareance in the 14-year history of the franchise.

The Rockets, who entered the playoffs with a 40-42 record, will be the first team with a regular-season sub-.500 record to reach the NBA championship series since the 1958-59 Minneapolis Lakers.

Malone, who bedeviled Kansas City throughou the series and anchored the Rockets through series upsets of Los Angeles and San Antonio, poured in 21 points in the first half to keep the Rockets from falling dangerously behind.

Erasing an 11-point deficit in the first quarter, Houston rallied to tie the score at halftime, 50-50, with Malone getting the final bucket.

Houston did not lead until Bill Willoughby canned two free throws with 10:11 remaining in the game. It was tied at 82-82 with 4:35 left, then Reid hit a follow shot and Calvin Murphy drove the length of the floor for a layup and an 86-82 Rocket lead at the 4:02 mark.

After Sam Lacey's two free throws cut the deficit to two points, Malone made a free throw, Tom Henderson hit an 18-footer and Reid connected for a 91-84 lead.

Calvin Garrett's two free throws and a Henderson bucket accounted for Houston's final points.

Scott Wedman led Kansas City with 20 points, while Reggie King had 18 and Phil Ford 17.

Kings guard Otis Birdsong was helped from the arena after suffering a muscle spasm in the back with 4:13 left in the third quarter and never returned. He had scored 15 points.

The Kings, who also finished the regular season with a losing record—40-42—and had to beat the worst team in the league—the expansion Dallas Mavericks—on the last day of the year to qualify for the playoffs, continued their season much longer than anyone had expected.

Kansas City defeated Portland two games to one in its mini-series, winning both games at Portland, to advance against the Phoenix Suns, who won 57 games during the regular

But the Suns fell victim to the Kings as Kansas City took the seven-game series four games to three. The Kings opened up a three games to one advantage before Phoenix rallied to tie it with two straight wins.

Celtics 111, 76ers 109

BOSTON (AP) — Reserve guard M.L. Carr sank three free throws in the final 20 seconds to enable the Boston Celtics to beat the Philadelphia 76ers 111-109 Wednesday night and stay alive in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

The 76ers, who had led for the entire fourth quarter, will get another chance to wrap up the Eastern Conference finals Friday night at home. The 76ers lead the best-of-seven series three games to two.

The 76ers had their biggest margin of the quarter at 109-103 with 1:51 left before a three-point play by Nate Archibald and a driving basket by Larry Bird brought the Celtics to within one with 47 seconds left.

Philadelphia had trouble getting off a shot and the ball was knocked out of bounds several times, the last one giving the 76ers possession under their own basket with five seconds left on the shot clock.

The inbounds pass went astray and was scooped up Bird, who missed a driving basket, only to have Carr grab the rebound and get fouled.

After splitting with Wichita State earlier in the season, the K-State women's softball team won a pair of games Wednesday against the Shockers in Wichita.

The Wildcats easily won the first game 6-4 and then shut out Wichita State 4-0 in the second game.

The visiting 'Cats led throughout the whole first game with the Shockers making only one rally in the fifth inning. They scored three runs then, but were unable to overcome the K-State lead.

Cindy Farris pitched the entire game for the 'Cats and in getting the win boosted her record to 8-6 for the year. WSU pitcher Gloria Baird took the loss.

The second game went scoreless until the sixth inning when Taryn Bachis doubled to put runners on second and third. Then, K-State's shortstop Kris Williams singled to bring both base runners in for the first runs of the game.

The women went on to score two more runs in the top of the seventh to all but decide the issue.

K-State pitcher Janel Anderson got the win, allowing only two hits to even her season record at 10-10. Lisa Cushing took the loss for WSU.

The two wins put the 'Cats over the .500 mark with a record of 21-20.

Women take two K-State to host NAIA powers

By RON BROWN desire to win. Collegian Reporter

Long overshadowed by major colleges, three area small college baseball powers will come to K-State in the next six days trying to make their presence known.

The first chance comes at 1:30 p.m. today when K-State, 27-19, plays host to Central Missouri State. The Mules, from Warrensburg, Mo., sport a 32-9 record which has them in first place in the North Division of the Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

Because of MIAA rules limiting the number of games a conference member can play, the status of the doubleheader remains undecided. It may be changed to one nine-

Although the visitors are Division II members of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, Wildcat coach Dave Baker is taking nothing for granted.

"It won't make any difference," he said, adding those schools are no different in their

ON SUNDAY, K-STATE will face yet another MIAA member—the Northwest Missouri State Bearcats. The Wildcats close out their home schedule Tuesday with a doubleheader against Emporia State's Hornets, a District 10 member of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

"They're all good ballclubs," Baker said. Each has a solid, winning program, Baker said. He should know-especially about Emporia State—because he played his final two colllegiate seasons there.

Last year, the Bearcats were MIAA champions with a 34-12 record, only to lose in an NCAA Division II regional tournament. Coach Jim Wasem has an eightyear record of 199-101 at the helm of the Maryville, Mo., school.

LIKEWISE, EMPORIA State is no stranger to winning. In 1980, the Hornets were 45-19 under Dave Bingham, including a 15-1 victory over K-State.

Bingham, in his eighth season, began the campaign with a career mark of 253-123. He guided the Hornets to prominence in 1978 when they won the NAIA World Series.

All three non-conference foes were added to the schedule when K-State received a bye in conference play. To stay prepared for the league finale next weekend at Ames, Iowa, the approach to these games will not change.

"We probably won't change anything," Baker said. "We'll just keep trying to improve on what we've got."

He has been pleased with his team's play for the most part this season. The entire lineup has contributed, he said.

"I think we've played well. We've played super well as a unit."

Although the 'Cats have a winning record-they are 27-19-there is one thing which could have been improved. "You can never be satisfied," Baker said. "We could have won a few more ball games. We've lost some that we shouldn't have."

Sooners win Big 8 golf crown; 'Cat women 207 strokes off

LAWRENCE (AP) — Oklahoma surprised favorite Oklahoma State to win the Big 8 women's golf tournament Wednesday on the strength of a strong finish by Sooner teammates Dorea Mitchell and Susan Marchese.

The two finished the three-day, 54-hole competition with identical 227 scores after Marchese carded a 72 for the final round to catch Mitchell, who had 76. Mitchell won the sudden-death playoff on the third hole after both parred the first two.

She dropped a 12-inch putt for a par while Marchese missed a 22-footer that would have given her a par.

In team scoring, Oklahoma edged Oklahoma State, 922 to 928, followed by Missouri with 955, Nebraska 972, Iowa State 980, Kansas 1,008 and K-State 1,129. Colorado did not participate. In individual competition, Oklahoma State teammates Alicia Ogrin and Patty Coatney finished in a tie for third. In last week's Drake Relays—the last tournament before the Big 8 Championships May 11-12—Johnson qualified as the No. 1 man on the squad. But he said he didn't play well, finishing third out of the five 'Cats participating.

"It wasn't a case of not trying," Johnson said. "I felt very frustrated. I just didn't feel JOHNSON DESCRIBES himself on the golf course as being aggressive and even-tempered.

"But I'm usually very frustrated," he added. "I don't know how many tournaments I've played in, but I've only felt satisfied with how I played four times—knowing I couldn't have done anything different."

According to Johnson, one of his most satisfying tournaments was in the City Four-Ball in his hometown of Salina last summer. During this event, he played with NCAA golf champion Bryan Norton, who is also from Salina and attends Oral Roberts University in Tulsa, Okla.

The pair won the tournament and shot the best anybody had shot in Salina as a team. The day also marked Norton's departure for the U.S. Open golf tournament.

HAVING NEVER taken a formal lesson, Johnson credits learning a lot from Norton last summer.

"He has the fine line between being cocky and confident," Johnson said, adding that Norton has a good chance to do well on the pro golf tour in the future.

"I realized a long time ago I wouldn't be able to make it on the pro tour because of the lack of formal instruction," Johnson said. "Salina is real weak on teachers; you have to go to Wichita or Kansas City to get instruction.

Cubs snap 12-game losing streak

Cubs celebrated the end of a 12-game losing streak Wednesday as if they had won the World Series.

"I don't know what it's like in the seventh game of a World Series," said winning pitcher Mike Krukow, "but that's what it felt like."

Krukow allowed only three hits in hurling the Cubs to a 6-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals in the first game of a doubleheader. The second game was suspended because of darkness after 11 innings with the score tied 2-2. It will be resumed July 3.

Krukow was unable to finish, as he gave up his sixth and seventh walks in the ninth inning, and departed in favor of Lee Smith, who came in and got Ken Oberkfell to hit into a game-ending double play.

Bill Buckner's two-run, tie-breaking double with two outs triggered a five-run rally in the eighth that enabled the Cubs to break their streak and end St. Louis' eightgame winning streak.

"It's nice to get that streak out of the way," said manager Joe Amalfitano. "Krukow pitched well, the guys hit and it was nice seeing our players running around the bases. I know we're a better team than our record shows."

Krukow singled with one out in the eighth off loser Andy Rincon, 2-1, but was forced by Ivan DeJesus. Scott Fletcher walked before Buckner doubled in two runs, snapping the tie, and scored on another single by Hen-

The Cardinals took a 2-0 lead in the first inning of the second game on a two-run triple by Darrell Porter. Garry Templeton singled and Tony Scott reached first on an error before Porter's hit.

Lary Sorensen retired the first 14 Cubs he faced before Ken Reitz singled with two outs in the fifth. The only other hit off Sorensen in six innings was a pinch-hit single in the fifth for rookie Gary Krug's first major league hit.

Student Senate voids '79 coliseum referendum

By DIANE DOCTOR SGA Editor

Determination of whether students are still supportive of a new coliseum was the basis of Student Senate debate in last night's meeting.

Following discussion with administrators, senators voted not to enact the 1979 referendum committing $2.5 million in student funds for a 17,000 seat arena at K-State. The reason for the disapproval was two-fold; one, it has been determined the facility should hold occupants in the range of 15,000 rather than the stipulated 17,000 and two, it limited any student commitment to $2.5 million without alternative figures.

See related story, p. 5

After voiding the referendum, a resolution was proposed for the reaffirmation of the Student Governing Association's commitment to the new coliseum. When first pressented to senate it read that SGA would "aggressively pursue a new coliseum by seeking student input and supporting information." The wording presented problems with senators and a series of amendments were made resulting in a resolution that could receive the required twothirds majority approval.

THE AMENDED resolution states, "The Kansas State University Student Governing Association reaffirms its commitment to a new coliseum at K-State and wishes to seek additional student input to determine the appropriate level of financial commitment or other support that might be made by students."

Before senate passed the resolution there was lengthy discussion concerning its precise phrasing. Senators tried to decide whether the resolution proposed a commitment in consensus with the present student body and if it would perpetrate a binding financial commitment from students.

Doug Dodds, Student Senate chairman, was supportive of a commitment from senators for a new coliseum, and emphasized that when the referendum was approved in 1979, it passed the student body with a large majority.

"I don't think you can ignore the fact that students voted three-to-one for it (the referendum) two years ago," Dodds said.

"What we're saying (in the resolution) is that there's a great deal of interest and we want to find out what level of student commitment should be made," Dodds said.

SOME SENATORS were in question of the timeliness of a two-year old student body approval.

"I think there's a lot of students out there, that after a 22 percent increase in tuition may not be in approval of a new coliseum," said Jerry Katlin, business senator.

Scott Long, arts and sciences senator, said he was personally in favor of a new coliseum but told his constituents his other feelings.

"The idea behind the resolution is great but I don't think we should take any stand in a resolution saying that we are committed to a coliseum," Long said. "We've had a whole presentation tonight telling us how inadequate Ahearn is and how nice it would be to have a new coliseum. Now its our job to find out what the student body wants."

"This resolution puts us on record as saying that we are in favor of an arena," said Kelly Presta, arts and sciences senator.

ALL SENATORS attended college caucuses this week and were informed of the updated information on the funding and necessity of the proposed coliseum. Senators were given a report prepared by Angela Scanlan, student body president, Mark Skinner, state and legislative affairs director, and Dodds. The three informants explained the gesture to kill the referendum and follow the action with the Scanlan told senators their debate over student support of a new coliseum "frustrated" her when each of them had the opportunity to discuss the issue in the caucuses and voice their approval or disapproval. She said it was necessary to take a positive step toward student commitment to a new coliseum and show the student body that senate wasn't postponing their actions.

"What you're saying is 'I don't know...I'm just going to let the students guide me—the students that don't have this information'," Scanlan said.

DAVID LEHMAN, chairman of the state and community affairs commitee, said students should be given all the information senators were given.

"There's a lot of new information for students to learn," Lehman said.

Former Student Body President Randy Tosh attended the meeting and voiced the need for senators to terminate their debate and take a firm stand with their decision.

"Leave here tonight leaving a clear message one way or the other," Tosh said. "By all means do something, you're the leaders on this campus.'

Paul Stewart, architecture senator, voiced approval of the resolution.

"We need to take this aggressive step now," Stewart said.

Only Democrats support final action

Senate fails to reduce regents tuition increase

TOPEKA (AP) - The Kansas Senate overwhelmingly rejected an effort Thursday to roll back a 22 percent tuition increase for the state's universities.

The vote was 28-10, with only Democrats supporting the move to reduce the tuition increase authorized by the Kansas Board of Regents last week.

The action came during debate on the final appropriations bill for the 1981 session, and was led by Sen. Joe Norvell (D-Hays).

He offered an amendment which would have prevented the Regents schools from spending any money generated by the tuition increase above a 15 percent boost mandated by the Legislature earlier in the

The Regents last Friday went beyond the legislative order and passed the 22 percent increase for the six state universities and the Kansas Technical Institute. It does not apply to medical students at the University of Kansas Medical Center.

The extra 7 percent boost, which Norvell sought to cancel, is expected to generate about $2.6 million in the next fiscal year. The Senate proposes to distribute that money to the schools, allowing it for use to raise student wages and working hours and for operating expenses such as books and equipment.

Had the amendment passed, the Regents could have charged the have had legislative authority to spend any of the revenue.

Sen. Jane Eldredge (R-Lawrence) said she supported the tuition increase only because the higher tuition but they would not universities needed extra money. And she blasted the Legislature for its budget-cutting crusade which axed about $10 million from funding recommended by the governor for the schools.

"This body has totally failed to adequately fund higher education," she said. "And if we don't approve this increase we are being even more irresponsible than we have in the past."

She urged her colleagues not to let higher education "go down the drain," and said there was no other alternative but to increase tuition.

"We have absolutely failed to do our job," she charged.

O'Neill says Democrats having second thoughts on budget cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic-controlled House raised the curtain on its budget debate Thursday with Republican Leader Bob Michel declaring that—"The way I've got it figured"—President Reagan has the battle won.

At the White House, Reagan launched an Oval Office lobbying campaign, setting aside an hour for private, one-on-one chats with four Republicans believed to be wavering.

An aide said Reagan would meet with up to two dozen Republicans and Democrats before the showdown vote expected next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Despite growing Republican confidence, Speaker Thomas O'Neill (D-Mass.) insisted the prognosis "looks a lot better" for supporters of a Democratic alternative budget blueprint than it did earlier in the week.

O'NEILL SAID MANY Democrats are beginning to have second thoughts about backing the president's plan because they realize the impact the administration's huge budget cuts would have on their constituencies.

"It's suddenly hitting home out there," he said.

But Michel (R-III.), replied, "The speaker's whistling—whistling in the dark." Michel said about 35 conservative Democrats already have signed on to support the budget plan the president backs. He expressed confidence that GOP defections could be held to one or two.

Asked if Reagan would have the votes to win, Michel replied that he was.

said Reagan is "building momentum" and will win passage of his tax-cut plan this year. "And all the major elements in it will be enacted," he said.

REAGAN WANTS A three-year, acrossthe-board cut in personal income taxes of 30 percent, as well as faster write-offs for business.

The Republicans control the Senate, but in the House, the Democrats have a 242-190 majority. As a result, Reagan would need a net gain of 27 Democratic votes to triumph on the budget vote assuming all Republicans stood firm with the administration.

Michel virtually dismissed the possibility that a group of more than a dozen restless Republicans from the Northeast and Midwest will abandon the president when the roll is called. He said the group wanted an opportunity to "express concerns they have" about some parts of the president's plan. "So we're giving them that opportunity," he sad, apparently referring to the private sessions scheduled with Reagan at the White House.

THE DEMOCRATIC alternative calls for more spending on social programs, and leaves room for a one-year tax cut. That would produce a balanced budget in 1983, a year ahead of the president's target.

The Democratic proposal originally called for less defense spending than Reagan requested. But Rep. W.G. Hefner (D-N.C.), is sponsoring an amendment to raise the defense budget to the administration's own level, a proposal with support among conservative Democrats.

Officials seek to curb car imports

TOKYO — U.S. trade officials said Congress may order severe curbs on Japanese car imports if Tokyo does not, and U.S. sources at the auto talks here said Thursday the U.S. side had found Japanese proposals unacceptable.

The U.S. sources anticipated the Japanese would make changes in their proposals before a scheduled mid-day Friday meeting between U.S. chief trade representative William Brock and Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki.

Japanese officials, including Suzuki, have predicted the auto issue will be solved before the prime minister's summit meeting with President Reagan in Washington next week.

Major Japanese automakers have resisted any limit below last year's export level, or beyond one year. Japanese government officials reportedly had been considering a one-year cutback of about 1.7 million vehicles, or 7 percent.

However, an American trade official who spoke to reporters on condition he not be further identified, said that kind of reduction would not be accepted by Congress, which is considering a bill sponsored by Sen. Jack Danforth (R-Mo.) to reduce the import of Japanese cars by 20 percent for three years.

Stay in stomach doesn't stop watch

CHICAGO — A new watch kept on ticking inside a man's stomach for more than five months after he swallowed it during a mugging attack, a doctor says.

Dr. Elliot Duboys, a surgical resident assigned to Mercy Hospital in Rockville Centre, N.Y., described the incident in a letter in the May 1 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The 49-year-old man was mugged in New York City, and witnesses said he took off his newly purchased watch, popped it in his mouth for safekeeping and swallowed it, Duboys wrote.

The man later was admitted to a hospital for treatment of a psychiatric disorder and when examining a routine set of his abdominal X-rays, technicians spotted the watch.

The man refused permission for an operation to remove the watch. Doctors performed the operation after he was later ruled legally incompetent and next of kin finally approved surgery.

Surgeons removed a self-winding Timex wristwatch with synthetic band and buckle. The watch was still running.

Court strives to keep schools open

BOSTON — Demonstrators blocked morning rush-hour traffic in a second day of protests against police and fire department cuts Thursday, while the City Council, mayor and state Supreme Court searched for ways to keep Boston's penniless schools operating.

Hopes for a break in a deadlock over a school bailout plan between Mayor Kevin White and the council brightened when the two feuding parties agreed to a rare meeting.

But the negotiations were overshadowed by action in the state Supreme Court, which was considering White's appeal of a lower court decision ordering schools to stay open the full academic year.

The schools, which exhausted their $210 million budget Tuesday, received a temporary respite when state Supreme Court Justice Ruth Abrams deferred the appeal to the full court.

The justices did not immediately rule on the appeal.

The high court heard two hours of arguments Thursday from attorneys representing seven different parties in the case.

Meanwhile, negotiations continued to develop a financial package to bail out the schools.

Reagan calls 8-year-old 'author'

ROCKVILLE CENTRE, N.Y. - President Reagan personally called one of the authors of his recently televised economic address to congratulate him on his way with words.

"Hello, this is Ronald Reagan," the chief executive said when 8year-old Peter Sweeney answered the telephone Wednesday.

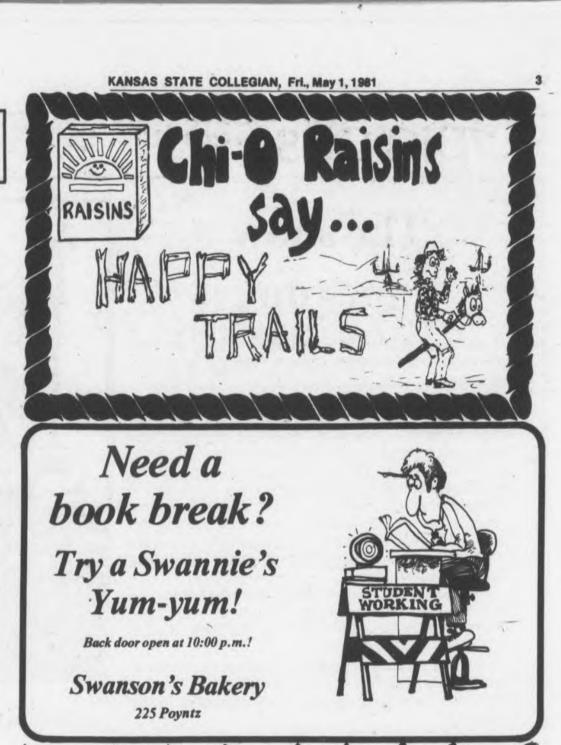

The second grader wrote Reagan that he'd better get well soon "or you might have to make a speech in your pajamas." The line won a long laugh and a round of applause when Reagan, wounded in an assassination attempt March 30, read it in his speech Tuesday night.

"Thanks to you Peter, it was the best line in my speech," Reagan told Peter.

The boy's mother, Mary, listening on an upstairs extension, said "the president thanked Peter for the letter and said he was very heartened by it and got a lot of amusement from it."

Opinions

The show goes on

Last night, Student Senate hastily voided the 1979 referendum to commit student funding to a new coliseum.

Discussion with University administrators resembled a "dog and pony show" with many officials explaining why K-State needs a new coliseum, how much money can be generated from donations, and what proposals have currently been conducted by the administration.

Senate intently listened to the administration's angle and eventually passed the motion voiding the referendum, while agreeing with contentions that the longer the coliseum issue was postponed, the more the new facility will cost.

By voiding the referendum, but continuing to consider the coliseum issue through a resolution, Senate negated the action taken by the largest voter turnout in a K-State election.

This was termed necessary to mount an effort to commit more student funds to a coliseum. Yet this effort can do nothing but cause more delays in the process.

Students voted on the referendum in an emotional display to commit what they thought was a reasonable amount of money to a new arena.

Its passage provided a signal to the administration to work to find other funding sources to pick up the tab.

But when the administration failed, Student Senate gladly listened to its proposals and decided students could certainly foot more of the bill even when tuition is scheduled to increase.

The task of justifying a new arena to the Legislature for funding of any type and the Foundation's role to seek $6 million in donations will not be easy. Failures could again be recognized along these routes and again students will be asked to contribute more money.

A new referendum is needed on the coliseum issue since students are being asked to pay more for the building. Upon a second vote, students should recognize their intent for a new basketball facility means little more than an indication they can be counted on for sharing an increasingly large financial burden.

Mutual benefits

Editor,

I would like to address David Kamerer and his ideas on disgusting promotions.

I feel sorry for any person whose childhood didn't include organized games such as cops and robbers or hide and seek. I can understand how a person with this background could oppose the game Assassin. Some of us, or at least 150 of us enjoyed getting crazy and being kids again, if only for a few minutes.

I also would like to clear up your confusion about how and why there was a tank in front of the Union last week. The tank was arranged specifically as a promotion for the film "Apocalypse Now." The National Guard was notified of our intentions months in advance. It is part of the public relations of the National Guard to allow non-profit organizations such as the UPC to display its equipment. As a taxpayer, I thought it was both interesting and educational to see what I've paid for and how it works.

I'm sure others thought the same, based on the number of people on or near the tank the whole time it was there. If the sight of the tank disgusted you, I'm glad. War and the implements of war aren't pleasant to think about, yet they cannot and should not be ignored.

We, the Feature Films Committee, are extremely appreciative of the National Guard for helping us promote our film and allowing K-Staters to get a closer look at where their money goes. We are also glad to help the National Guard in its recruiting efforts. What really bothered me about Kamerer's letter is how anyone could view cooperation between two groups as disgusting. Maybe if there was more cooperation in the world there wouldn't be any need for this type of equipment or film.

Budget derailment

Once again the nation's budgetcutters are aiming their knives at a semi-limp portion of our railroad system.

Government officials are proposing a $613 million budget cut for the financially beleaguered, yet improving National Rail Passenger Corporation (Amtrak), and are predicting increased need for the Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail).

The Amtrak budget cut is $357 million dollars less than the Carter administration proposed for the 1982 fiscal year beginning October

Amtrak officials claim that the budget cut is unreasonable and are threatening to cut all inter-city passenger service except that in the Northeast Corridor which extends commuter service from New York to Washington D.C.

THIS MOVE would be detrimental to America's rail passenger service as well as the demise of Amtrak because the American citizens are, and have been footing much of Amtrak's bills during its 10-year existence. As a resident of the midwest, I don't believe we want to fund rail service that doesn't even come close to serving our area.

According to a recent report in U.S. News and World Report, Amtrak only recovers 42 percent of its costs through fares. This means that even if ridership continues to increase as it has in the past three poration was wholly inadequate years it would still lose money.

National Rail Passenger Corincrease as it has in the past three poration was wholly inadequate because of the Department of Amtrak has had financial problems from its inception on May 1, 1972. The original federal appropriation was a grant of $40 million and loan guarantees for up to $100 million dollars.

Deficits have not been unusual for rail passenger service. Beginning in 1930, the passenger service has has been severly hindered because of improvements in air passenger service, bus service and private car interests.

THE GOVERNMENT has sponsored investments such as airport construction subsidies, operating subsidies and indirect equipment and development subsidies for the air passenger industry.

Bus passenger and auto transportation have been granted a healthier existence under the Interstate Highway Act of 1956 which created 42,500 miles of high speed limited access highways, in addition to federal support funds for continued public road inprovement.

According to Amtrak officials, the original subsidy to create the National Rail Passenger Corporation was wholly inadequate because of the Department of Transportation's inaccurate report on expected costs. Since then it has been the target of budgetmen each year.

Kansas was lucky enough to benefit from two passenger trains through the state until 1979 when Amtrak was forced to cut several lines because of budget problems.

The now non-existant Lone Star was a salable link between Kansas City and Houston. Currently the Southwest Limited is our safest link with Chicago and Los Angelos, but if Amtrak needs to trim lines again it could go Currently Amtrak, our safest mode of transportation, has been involved in a $¼ billion clean up program replacing out-dated coach and sleeper cars with new first class cars. Its on-time performance has been steadily improving and trains are able to attain higher speeds due to improved track conditions making the system highly reliable.

America is in an economic period that makes rail passenger service very important. As energy cost increase mass transit could be the salvation to transportation dificulties. It's time for the federal government and America to get behind its rail passenger industry and fully support it—not kill it.

Student Senate voted with a show of hands last night to kill a 1979 referendum committing students to $2.5 million in financial support of a 17,000 seat coliseum.

Senators voted against the referendum after hearing from a number of administration officials about the need for a new basketball facility.

University President Duane Acker was the first to speak in favor of construction of a new arena.

"I re-emphasize that our posture as an administration is that we believe a coliseum would be good for Kansas State University," he said.

Acker said the needs of the University could be served by a smaller arena than called for in the referendum. The figures currently being talked about include a 15,000 seat coliseum at a cost of approximately $20 million.

"If we set our goal too high we might not achieve it," he said.

DISCUSSIONS WITH the Foundation, the Alumni Association and the Board of Regents, and informal discussions with legislators have been part of the preparations, Acker said.

Any funding of a coliseum would have to be accomplished without interfering with proposed academic improvements, he said.

Proposed funding sources include a triad composed of the K-State student body, the Foundation and non-traditional funding from the state Legislature. The K-State Athletic Department has also considered providing some money, reducing the amount which would be requested from the Legislature.

Women's basketball coach Lynn Hickey said a new facility would increase support for the women's program and make a better impression on potential recruits.

"We have a very good women's basketball program here, and we want to improve what we have," she said.

Ahearn Field House has inadequate office space and dressing room and shower facilities, Hickey said.

MEN'S BASKETBALL coach Jack Hartman also stressed the recruiting potential of a new building.

"The three things recruits are most interested in is where they're gonna eat, sleep, and play," he said. "Ahearn is a rather bleak building, and we've definitely lost recruits because of that."

Financial demands on the athletic department could be eased by an upgraded basketball program, Hartman said. He said revenues collected from cable television and NCAA playoffs could be used to offset the costs of non-revenue producing sports.

Salvador officials find body believed to be missing priest

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A body believed to be that of an American Roman Catholic priest who disappeared from his hotel four days ago was found here Wednesday, government officials said.

The face was completely unrecognizable, they said, but the shoes and clothes indicated it could be the corpse of the Rev. Roy Bourgeois, who was working as an interpreter for CBS News.

Results of a fingerprint test were not immediately known.

The body, found in a gulch in the western part of the capital city, had a gunshot wound and evidence of a violent death. But it was not known whether the disfiguration was caused by blows or by the fall into the gulch.

Reports indicated the body had been dead for three days.

Bourgeois was last seen Sunday morning when he left his hotel, saying he was going to a pharmacy.

Heart disease and stroke will cause half of all deaths this year.

The basketball program at K-State has produced revenue for years, Hartman said, while most schools consider breaking as the mark of a successful program.

ATHLETIC DIRECTOR DeLoss Dodds cited K-State's "fine" basketball tradition, but stressed the need to plan for the future.

"We need to look forward to what's best for Kansas State University, the athletic department, and the basketball program in particular," he said.

Based on the adminstration's size and cost proposals, University architect Jim Shepard prepared some preliminary cost estimates.

He said a 14,500 seat coliseum with bench seating, no air conditioning and no business or coaches' offices would cost $19,986,000 in projected 1985 dollars, Shepard told senate. This facility would be built into the ground, much like KSU Stadium.

"The facility we're talking about now is a bare bones facility," said Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities.

HOWEVER, the tentative plans would probably be changed before a final decision is made.

"I'd be very surprised if we had a contract for a new coliseum without air conditioning, especially here in the heart of Kansas," Acker said.

If a coliseum is to be built, it should be done soon, Cross said, citing escalating construction costs.

"A good rule of thumb is about 10 percent per year," he said. "The sooner you do it the more you save."

In order to have the facility completed by fall 1987, it would be necessary to have all funds by July 1, 1985, Cross said.

"We cannot bid the project without all of the money in hand," he said.

ART LOUB, executive vice president of the Foundation, discussed funding of the coliseum by the Foundation.

The Foundation is committed to one-third of the total cost of the project and has taken some prelimary steps, he said.

"The period that we're into now is one of identification and cultivation of potential donors," Loub said, adding that 80 percent of the donations must be $10,000 or more.

"We're about 70 percent along toward the prospective goals that we need," he said, but added the task will be challenging.

"We're trying to do in a couple of years what should probably take a decade," Loub said

Alumni support would be important to the project, said Larry Weigel, director of the K-State Alumni Association.

University alumni number approximately 85,000, who would be contacted by the association, he said. The association would also organize key alumni volunteers and leaders, and help the Foundation identify major gift prospects, he said.

Senate tries to avoid raising property tax

School finance bill gets $16 million increase

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate, hoping to resolve the most touchy issue blocking adjournment of the 1981 session, voted Thursday to put $16 million more into school finance to hold down projected property tax increases, but a House committee quickly took it out.

"We shouldn't spend that $16 million because we don't know what the effect is going to be of the federal cuts,' commented Rep. Mike Hayden (R-Atwood), after his House Ways and Means Committee removed the funds from the omnibus appropriations bill only two hours after the Senate

The decision confirmed what has been known all week: The two houses are heading toward adjournment of the '81 session, scheduled for late Friday, at loggerheads over whether to take some of the money cut from Gov. John Carlin's budget this session and use it for school property

THE SENATE leadership charted that course last Sunday, and the House leadership's reaction since it was reported last Monday has been to reject the idea.

Both houses carried out their part of the scenario Thursday, setting the stage for some tough negotiating in a conference committee Friday.

The full House will consider the omnibus bill Friday morning, with the Ways and Means Committee's decision expected to stick.

However, House Democratic Leader Fred Weaver of Baxter Springs told that committee he reserved the right to offer some alternative plan on the House floor.

"We need additional revenue," Weaver said. "A wise and prudent course would have been to raise revenue this year. We're in one heck of a mess and we haven't done one thing about it."

HAYDEN PERSUADED his committee to agree to leave the present school finance law in place, limiting school districts to raise their budgets by just 5 percent next school year, but allow them to spend the extra $7.8 million Carlin put into school finance in his budget.

The Senate had not included a provision to permit spending the $7.8 million, Hayden said.

The House plan will hold the property tax increase next fall to $43.7 million statewide, which is $9.2 million less than a bill Carlin vetoed which would have permitted 6 percent budget increases. Hayden said the House plan maintains Carlin's balanced budget and also retains a small cushion so the state can better absorb anticipated reductions in federal funds.

THE SENATE plan would hold expected statewide property tax increases in 1981 to about $21 million—a prime concern for lawmakers when they return home to face the

The Senate added the money to the current school finance formula through an amendment, approved 37-2, tacked on to the "omnibus" appropriations bill, the final money measure considered for the 1981 legislative session.

The $11.4 million appropriations measure was unanimously passed, 39-0.

The extra money stands as the Republican-controlled Senate's answer to the knotty question of school finance this year, and replaces a school funding measure passed by the Legislature but vetoed by Gov. John Carlin because it would have increased property taxes by $53 million.

"The purpose is to provide property tax relief," said Senate Majority Leader Robert Talkington (R-Iola), who offered the amendment.

HE SAID the money would come from hold-over balances in the state general fund, unspent federal monies and revenue cut from budget proposals during the current legislative session. It would leave a balance in the state general fund at the end of the next fiscal year of about $130

The Senate school proposal is expected to met with greater opposition in the House, particularly since House Speaker Wendell Lady (R-Overland Park) has said he will not accept support a move to use money cut from the budget for other programs.

Steineger throws in the towel; battle over severance tax ends

TOPEKA (AP) — The bitter, session-long battle over whether to enact a severance tax in Kansas to raise more money for schools and highways ended in the Kansas Senate Thursday.

The end came with a whimper, when Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger of Kansas City threw in the towel after losing a procedural vote Thursday morning which denied full debate and a vote on the measure.

His decision not to try to amend provisions of the bill into the omnibus appropriations bill finished all practical consideration of the severance tax issue this session, scheduled to adjourn late Friday.

While Gov. John Carlin refused to abandon the fight, even with just one day of the Legislature's wrapup session left, legislative leaders agreed it was over for

"It will not be done," House Speaker Wendell Lady replied when asked if another effort might be initiated in the House, which passed one severance tax bill on March 9 only to have it die in a Senate committee.

LIKEWISE, HOUSE Democratic Leader Fred Weaver said the issue was dead for this session.

Carlin, who proposed the tax on oil, natural gas and goal on Jan. 6 and has scrapped hard for it, relied on the old saw that "nothing is final until final adjournment."

However, members of his own staff conceded privately the severance battle was

"I'm not saying there's some grand scheme (to resurrect it)," the governor told a news conference late Thursday. "I'm just saying it's too soon to say it's over with. I'm not ruling out any options. If a few key people decide to do something, they can do it very quickly."

Steineger scrapped plans to try to amend provisions of the bill into the omnibus appropriations bill simply because he didn't have the votes.

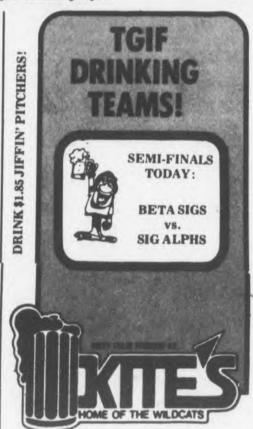

"We've been unsuccessful in getting the 21 votes," Steineger said. "One thing I have learned in my years here is to count. I have had a couple of hip-pocket votes, but even with those I can't count 21. The opponents seem to be locked in pretty solid."

SENATE PRESIDENT Ross Doven, an opponent, said only: "I feel we gave them every opportunity to be heard and apparently the Senate doesn't want to consider it further. I would just say the senator from Wyandotte (Steineger) made a wise decision not to spend additional time on it."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Talkington (R-Iola), said he thought Steineger abandoned his plan to try to amend the severance tax provisions into the omnibus bill because Carlin didn't want his proposal to lose on a clear-cut vote in the Senate. Steineger denied that claim.

The Senate had rejected an attempt by Steineger to gain debate on a new severance tax bill he introduced Wednesday, but the Democratic leader had planned to still shoot for a vote on the bill, putting senators on record on the issue.

HIS ABANDONMENT of that plan surprised most people.

The Senate had rejected on a vote of 14-24 Steineger's motion to suspend a rule to allow debate and a vote on the bill.

There was no debate on Steineger's motion, but in a letter the Kansas City Democrat placed on senators' desks ahead of Thursday's session, he said:

"You should clearly understand that a 'No' note on SCR 1640 is a 'No' vote on the severance tax."

Senate Concurrent Resolution 1640 was his resolution to suspend the rule barring consideration of individually-sponsored bills this late in a session.

Carlin said the Senate's action was a great disappointment to him.

"Nobody was served in this state today-not the kids and not the taxpayers," the governor told reporters. "The $16 million in relief to property taxes...is significant. But it in no way speaks to the real problem, or to the future." The Senate voted Thursday to put $16 million into school finance to help cut the projected increase in property taxes statewide. The House Ways and Means Committee later removed the money from the omnibus appropriations bill. HOWEVER, HE conceded he will have to give serious consideration to approving any new money the Legislature winds up putting in for school property tax relief. And, he said, "for the most part I've had to accept their budget cuts."

Carlin accused the Senate of charting a course of continued deficit spending by the state, because it would drop the general fund balance by June 30, 1982, to $131 million to $132 million. He said that is about $8 million less than is needed for the 10 percent reserve needed to have a balanced budget.

"They candidly admit...that they now believe in deficit spending," Carlin said of The governor said the actions of the Senate will produce greater pressure on the budget next year.

"I cannot understand what their purpose is," he added. "No one is served. There is no planning for the future. It just does not serve the public interest."

Carlin said he was not ruling out an 11th hour miracle.

"I would hope something would happen," he said. "There's still time. We don't have to leave school finance in this ridiculous situation."

Horticulture Club, merchants solve dispute

Collegian Reporter

A misunderstanding between the members of the Horticulture Club and area plant merchants over the purpose of plant sales by the campus group has been apparently resolved.

"Some of the area merchants were unhappy that the Horticulture Club was doing as much marketing as they were," Darrell Westervelt, spokesman for the Manhattan merchants, said. "There were also some complaints because of lost business."

Horticulture faculty members, students from the Horticulture Club and three merchants met recently to discuss the merchants' concerns about the plant sales organized by the club.

AS A RESULT of the meeting, the merchants became aware of the need for the fund-raising activities, Westervelt said.

"We learned a lot about the Horticulture Club through the meetings," he said. "The horticulture program has full support of the industry."

The money from the Horticulture Club plant sales goes toward funding several activities, including field trips, conventions, community service projects, and social events such as barbecues, said Mary Albrecht, sponsor of the Horticulture Club and assistant professor in horticulture. The club also awards a scholarship to one of its members each year.

Although the club usually makes just enough money from the plant sales "to break even," it has had more money than usual in its account during the past year and a half because the members are planning to sponsor a national convention in April of 1982, she said.

THE MERCHANTS expressed concern about the amount of money the club was making through plant sales, Albrecht said. Because the club is a non-profit group, the merchants wanted to be sure they were not out to "make a big profit," she said.

"The final agreement was not so much to limit the number of sales, but that they don't get so large that we're exceeding our needs," she said. "They just want to make sure that doesn't happen.

"Basically, communication was the Charles Marr, associate problem." professor in horticulture, said. "The industries did not have a very clear perspective of some of the activities we are involved in.

"The situation was blown out of proportion," Marr said. "It got blown up as it passed from person to person."

THE SITUATION was also a learning experience for the students, Marr said.

"Students have learned the need to be aware of people in local industries and function in a responsible, businesslike manner," Marr said. "Basically, the local merchants aren't asking us to cut down on sales, only to function in a businesslike fashion."

Westervelt agreed with Marr, saying there was a lack of communications between the club and the merchants.

"By meeting together and talking, things were resolved," Westervelt said.

"Now that we are in agreement we need to keep those channels open," Marr said. "Both sides have agreed to work harder to communicate better."

Although no additional meetings have been planned, both sides have agreed to meet whenever a situation needs to be discussed.

An appreciation dinner will be tonight for the student volunteers and staff who work to provide services through the Union.

The Chow Dynasty is an honors and awards banquet for about 150 invited guests from Union Program Council (UPC), Union Governing Board (UGB), Union department heads and first-line supervisors.

The reception begins at 6 p.m. in the Catskeller, followed by a buffet featuring Chinese food.

The Chow Dynasty has been an annual event since the Union was built 25 years ago. UPC and UGB host the event.

No one really knows why it is called Chow Dynasty. It could be "ciao for good-bye or for chow down," said Marlesa Roney, graduate student in counseling and 1980-81 UPC president.

Film covers lives of vet students

By SHERRY BROWN

The lights are brought in, the cameras set up, the items on the desk straightened and the telephone cord untwisted. The set is

The scene is the filming of an interview with Dr. Donald Trotter, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, for the syndicated television series, "Agriculture U.S.A.,"

The series appears weekly on approximately 70 television stations.

The program is the fourth in the series on the veterinary profession sponsored by the American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA), Tim Donovan, national media coordinator of the AVMA, said. K-State was chosen by the AVMA as the filmimg site for the half-hour show, "Tomorrow's Veterinarian," he said.

"For our purposes we could have gone to any one of 25 veterinary colleges in the United States," Donovan said. "The reason we chose K-State was simply that we had done a project here earlier and the fact that this is an old school with new, modern

"We went to AVMA and asked for one of the best-equipped schools of veterinary medicine with an excellent staff and outstanding students," John Stearns, producer of AG-USA, said.

VARIOUS ASPECTS of what it's like to be a veterinary student will be covered in the program, Stearns said. Filming will include scenes of students in the classroom, working on farms and doing research in the laboratory, he said.

The crew has been in Manhattan for a week, meeting with faculty and students. The filming, which began Monday, will conclude Saturday, Stearns said.

Approximately 40 students from the vet school are involved in the filming, Donovan said. The filming crew met with students on Sunday to brief them about the show and determine which students would be used, Stearns said.

"The students were chosen on the basis of Collegian Reporter how they looked and how they responded to questions," Donovan said.

"As far as we're concerned it's an all-star cast," Stearns said. The students are "enthusiastic and very cooperative," he

THE PROGRAM is scheduled to air "in about a couple of months," Stearns said. It will be shown on KTWU, the Washburn University station, he said.

The crew also taped a sequence in which Trotter answered questions about entrance into the veterinary medicine program. The filming took place in the office of Dr. John Noordsy, assistant dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The show is done with an informal format to make it more interesting, Stearns said. The program tries to present various aspects of agriculture so as to convey a good image of "America's largest business," he

"There has been a negative image of agriculture in the past," Stearns said. "We're sort of the equal time." The purpose of the filming is two-fold, he said.

ALWAYS hold matches till cold.

"First, we are making a movie that can be distributed by the AVMA," Stearns said.

"SECOND, IT WILL air on the AG-USA program which presents interesting aspects of agri-business," he said.

'Veterinarians from coast-to-coast will have the opportunity to borrow 'Tomorrow's Veterinarian' to show to service clubs, agribusiness groups or 4-H groups," Donovan said. "It might also be used at other colleges of vet medicine.

"We are informing future vets and the public about the training and education of veterinarians," he said.

The AVMA's major film in the past was "The Convenant," which contained a "heavy veterinary college sequence," Donovan said. That film was replaced with "Today's Veterinarian" which lacks any information on the training of veterinary students, he said. "Tomorrow's Veterinarian" is being produced as a supplement to the new film, as well as serving as a program in the AG-USA series, Donovan said.

Mayors voice concern about Reagan's budget

BALTIMORE (AP) - Thirteen mayors and social tensions." from around the country, conceding they have little chance of blocking federal budget cuts, warned Thursday that "chaos" and "disaster" will follow as their cities are forced to reduce services.

With a showdown on President Reagan's budget package looming in the 5, the 13mayors, members the legislative action committee of the bipartisan U.S. Conference of Mayors, gathered here, then headed to Washington for some last-ditch lobbying.

But the group was pessimistic about their efforts and critical of Congress for appearing to accept Reagan's program so "I don't expect we'll have much impact immediately," said Baltimore Mayor William Donald Schaefer. "But the benefits will come six, nine, 10 months from now...when people begin to see the effects of MAYOR RICHARD FULTON of Nashville, Tenn., declaring the cuts would bring "chaos," said; "I don't like what I see. I don't like to see the Congress panic. I don't want my people in the streets, but that's where they're going to be ... '

At a press conference, Gary, Ind. Mayor Richard Hatcher, president of the group, said, "Mayors around the country are increasingly anxious that the Reagan budget cuts will cause disruptions, fiscal problems and it will not be there now," she said.

He said the association has found that "66 percent of the Reagan budget cuts fall on state and local programs...a disproportionate amount of the burden."

Referring to attacks on federal spending, Schaefer said: "The message that has been lost in all this...is that people are saying the programs don't work. They do work.'

AND IN AN attempt to prove it, he gave the mayors a tour of Baltimore to view several projects started with federal money. The group visited a housing project, a senior citizens center, sections of the Inner Harbor revitalized by public grants and private investment and a section of the retail district being rebuilt with transit and urban development money.

"There is no constituency for a ramp or a highway," said San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein. "But sometimes that is all that is needed to keep a company from relocating.

"When people start paying two or three dollars to get on a municipal transportation system...people are going to start grumbling and you are going to get a constituency."

She disagreed with the administration's contention that private investors will pick up the slack once federal programs are cut.

"The private sector was not there before,

Government-controlled Laetrile tests produces no 'substantial benefits'

WASHINGTON (AP) - The first government-controlled human tests of the purported cancer treatment Laetrile shows that it "has not produced any substantial benefit," scientists said Thursday.

"Laetrile has been tested. It is not effective," Dr. Charles Moertel of the Mayo Clinic told the meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology.

The trial, sponsored by the National Cancer Institute, hoped to settle decades of controversy surrounding Laetrile and its usefulness in treating cancer.

Moertel said that of 160 patients studied, 104 died during the trial. In only one case was there a partial response to the treatment. And he said that this response was questionable.

Moertel said that Laetrile produced no substantial benefits, proving ineffective in extending life span, relieving symptoms or improving the outcome of patients.

Four medical centers are taking part in the unusual $500,000 test program, which began earwy last year.

The Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., is the lead institution and is coordinating the data from the other centers. They are the Memorial SloanKettering Cancer Center in New York City, the Jonsson Cancer Center of the University of California, Los Angeles, and the University of Arizona Health Sciences Center in Tucson.

Animal tests generally show Laetrile, made from the pits of apricots and other fruits and nuts, is ineffective against cancer, he said. And most doctors and scientists also don't think it works, he added.

But Laetrile has been used by hundreds of thousands of persons, with many testifying to its benefits. DeVita said many sensible people are confused by the differences between these claims and scientific opinion.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration is trying to bar the use of Laetrile, saying its safety and effectiveness is unproven. But at the same time 23 states have approved its use within their borders.

Britain warns against violence; IRA rebels reject pontiff's plea BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Jailed Irish Republican Army (IRA) guerrilla Bobby Sands was reported "deteriorating at an alarming rate" Thursday, and his mother promised to let him die of starvation rather than compromise. Britain refused to give in and warned it would use all means available against violence.

Young Catholics lobbed gasoline and acid bombs at police patrols and set vehicles afire in Belfast as Pope John Paul II's special envoy, the Rev. John Magee, left for Rome after Sands and three other jailed guerrillas rejected the pontiff's appeal to end their hunger strike.

British officials reported the condition of Sands, without food for 61 days, and IRA guerrilla Francis Hughes, who joined the fast 46 days ago, was "deterioriating at an alarming rate."

TWO OTHER guerrillas, Raymond McCreesh and Pat O'Hara, joined the strike 39 days ago demanding political status on grounds they were convicted in their fight to drive the British from Northern Ireland and unite it with the mainly Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

As death neared for Sands, his mother, Rosaleen, emerged from visiting her son in the Maze Prison near Belfast and said he was "prepared for the end" and said doctors must not interfere.

Sands told her not to let doctors try to save his life when he slipped into a coma—unless Britain granted the guerrillas' demands for prison reforms, which amount to political prisoner status.

"I love my son like any mother does," Mrs. Sands told reporters. "He asked me not to (let doctors save him) and I have promised him not to."

IN LONDON, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher reiterated her tough line in the House of Commons and declared: "There can be no question of granting political status to convicted criminals now or at all."

Britain's Northern Ireland secretary, Humphrey Atkins, in an appeal for calm from London, accused the Provisional wing of the outlawed IRA of a "calculated, coldblooded campaign" to stir up Catholic-Protestant warfare.

"Don't play the IRA's game or anybody else's," he told the province's 500,000 Catholics and 1 million Protestants. "Don't listen to the Provisionals. Don't believe lies and rumors....Observe the law."

Atkins said the Provisionals had one aim.
"That is to provide an environment of fear within which the Provisional IRA can stir up sectarian conflict and enable them to exercise control of Catholic areas and present themselves as alone capable of protecting threatened people."

Atkins said the IRA had plans to evacuate residents in one area of Belfast, gut their vacant houses and blame "others" to stir up more sectarian fear and violence.

Soviets buy grain for Afghanistan

LONDON (AP) — The Soviet Union purchased 330,000 tons of wheat for shipment to Afghanistan and 22,000 tons for Nicaragua, the International Wheat Council reported Thursday.

The Afghanistan purchase was made Wednesday, the council said in its April marketing report.

Grain for Nicaragua was bought on April 24, the day President Reagan lifted a partial embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union, the council said. The embargo was imposed by President Jimmy Carter on Jan. 4, 1980, to punish the Soviet Union for invading Afghanistan.

Nations supplying the grain were not named by the council, which was established in 1949 to promote international

Reagan emphasizes human rights issue, recollects Holocaust

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan said Thursday that countries which violate human rights must be willing to discuss the issue in negotiations or expect the United States to leave the bargaining table.

On its face, the statement appeared to be a signal to the Soviet Union, especially when viewed against the administration's past downplaying of an issue that was a top priority of former President Jimmy Carter.

But Larry Speakes, deputy press secretary, said the president did not mean the United States would insist that human -rights issues be included on the agenda of negotiations before talks begin.

He said Reagan's statement merely would "provide a backdrop for any discussions we might have with another country.'

Asked if it were a veiled message to the Soviets, who have been accused of oppressing Jews and other religious minorities, Speakes replied, "I would leave that to you and the Soviets to interpret."

THE PRESIDENT made his statement in an emotional speech at a commemoration of the Holocaust-the extermination of 6 million Jews by the Nazis before and during

"It is up to us to ensure that we never live it again," the president told a group in the East Room of the White House.

"Theodore Roosevelt said that the presidency was a bully pulpit," the president recalled. In a firm voice, he ad-

"Well, I for one, intend that this bully pulpit shall be used on every occasion, where it is appropriate, to point a finger of shame at even the ugliness of graffiti, and certainly wherever it takes place in the world, the acts of violence or terrorism.

"Even at the negotiating table," the president continued, "never shall it be forgotten for a moment that wherever it is taking place in the world, the persecution of people, for whatever reason-persecution of people for their religious belief-that is a matter to be on that negotiating table or the United States does not belong at that table." Even before Reagan concluded the sentence, his remarks were drowned in applause.

MINUTES LATER he watched as six survivors of the Holocaust lit a candle—each signifying 1 million people killed in the persecution.

The president, still on a limited schedule as he recuperates from the gunshot wound he suffered March 30, appeared healthy.

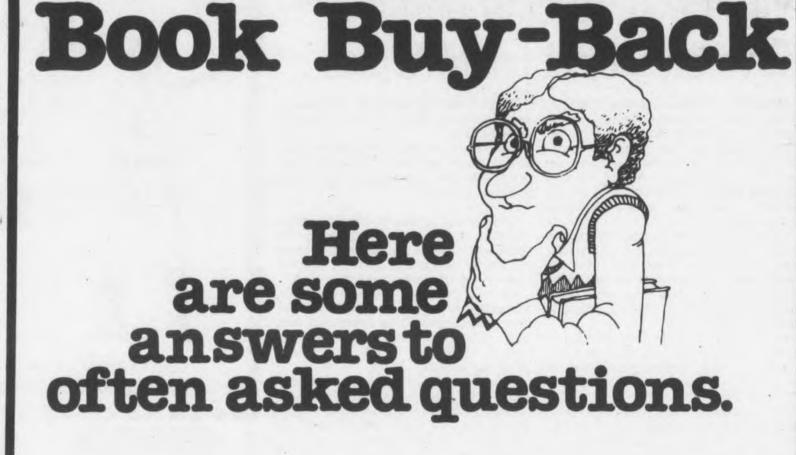

He told the audience that during World War II he helped edit film taken by military cameramen around the world for a secret Holocaust report for the Pentagon's general

"And I remember April '45," the president said. "I remember seeing the first film that came in when the war was still on, but our troops had come upon the first camps and had entered those camps.

"And you saw unretouched-and no way that it could have ever been rehearsed-what they saw-the horror they saw."

He said he was "horrified today...that there are actually people now trying to say that the Holocaust was invented....

Surgeons form new bones with corrective treatment they can induce the body to form new bones of its own—a discovery that may have many uses in correcting birth defects, treating accident victims and fighting dental

The new process means surgeons can mold bones where none existed before without going through the time-consuming and sometimes painful process of removing bone from elsewhere in the body and transplanting it to the affected area.

Among the first patients treated was a child who received a nose after being born without one.

The treatment was developed by a team of Harvard Medical School doctors at Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston. A report on their work is being published in Saturday's issue of the British medical journal Lancet.

"From a clinical standpoint, I'm very excited about this material," Dr. John Mulliken, who conducted the first operation using the powdered bone, said. "I'm especially excited about the concept of being able to transform the body's cells to make something that's needed."

SO FAR, the team has used the material to treat 44 patients, most of them children with birth defects that caused misshapen faces and skulls.

BOSTON (AP) - Using crushed bone will be in treating periodontal disease, the taken from cadavers, doctors have found loss of bone around the teeth that affects nearly everyone over age 40.

In a separate experiment on 15 patients, doctors are using the material to replace this eroded natural bone and, they hope, keep the patients' teeth from falling out.

"That's a very significant breakthrough in the treatment of periodontal disease," Dr. Leonard Kaban, a dentist on the development team, said.

TO MAKE THE material, doctors crush human bones, remove minerals and purify the result. Then surgeons mix this powder with water and form a paste that they mold in the shape of the bones they want to build.

The crushed material does not actually become new bone by itself. Instead, when it is implanted, each speck of bone dust is surrounded by fibroblast cells-or connective tissue cells-from the patient's body. But through a process still not thoroughly understood, the fibroblast cells change to produce cartilage, and eventually, the cartilage becomes bone.

"The powder becomes amalgamated in the new bony material, like nuts in a chocolate bar," Dr. Julie Glowacki, who conducted animal experiments with the material, said.

Most of the patients treated so far with the new material are children with cleft palates, a deformity that strikes one child in 800.

Perhaps its widest application, however, Farmers won't be sole victims of future embargos, Block says

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - U.S. wary of such a policy's effects on com-Agriculture Secretary John Block, saying the grain embargo may have permanently damaged U.S.-Soviet trade relations, said Thursday he can envison no future embargo by the Reagan administration which would single out farmers as the victims.

See related story, p. 11

"I cannot foresee any situation under which this adminstration would impose an embargo and have it not be across the board," Block said during a brief stop in Kansas City.

The bill doesn't include any provision limiting future embargoes like the partial grain embargo against the Soviets, lifted last 'week. But Block noted some congressmen have advanced proposed restrictions on future embargoes.

"We are looking at those carefully and I have some sympathy toward some of them," he said.

BUT BLOCK ADDED he couldn't endorse anything that would tie the president's hands in using embargoes as a foreign

He said during the 14-month lull in grain trading between the two countries, other grain-producing nations moved in to fill the vacuum.

"It will take many years, if we can ever recover the total amount of lost market," he said. "But I'm optimistic we can recover some of it."

Block appeared before about 200 farmers and leaders of farm organizations in Missouri and Kansas, urging them to support the proposed farm bill. He said the bill aims to reduce government's role in agriculture, to increase productivity and exports and reduce the cost of agricultural programs to the government.

HOWEVER SOME of the farmers were modity loan rates, price supports and disaster relief payments.

In an interview, Wayne Cryts, the southeast Missouri farmer who gained publicity when he forcibly took back his soybean crop stored in a bankrupt elevator earlier this year, said the loan rate is the most important issue to many farmers.

"It sets an effective floor on commodity prices, and the only solution we've got is to get a loan rate that's adequate," said Cryts, who was in Washington earlier in the week lobbying for loan rates which are as much as twice the current levels. "But it's awful tough sledding. It doesn't look favorable."

One aspect of the bill Block acknowledged as meeting congressional opposition is the elimination of target prices, which have made direct payments to farmers to protect them against wild swings downward in commodity market prices.

Block said if Congress decides to retain target prices it wouldn't necessarily result in an automatic presidential veto.

"We'd have to look at the whole bill. If it were a target price that resulted in a lot of budget exposure, he would veto it."

Palestine guerrillas blast northern Israel

RAYAK, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian missiles were poised for action near this eastern Lebanese city Thursday as the United States sought Soviet help in heading off a new Middle East war. In southern Lebanon, Palestinian guerrillas rocketed northern Israel again, wounding eight people, sources said.

Israeli jets, which shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships near Rayak Tuesday, refrained from routine flights over Lebanon's Bekaa Valley after Syria moved the Soviet-built surface-to-air missiles into position Wednesday, reporters and official sources said.

However villagers said they saw highflying Israeli jets make reconnaissance passes over the area, but that the planes were out of range of the SAM-6 missiles and none were fired.

This correspondent saw four tracked vehicles, each mounted with three whiteand-black painted, 20-foot-long SAM-6 missiles, in a field about three miles south of Rayak, which is some 35 miles east of Beirut and less than 10 miles west of the Syrian border equipped with radar antennae, are the equivalent of half a battery of SAM-6s-missiles designed for use against aircraft flying at low or medium altitudes. No additional missiles were spotted elsewhere in a tour of the Bekaa Valley.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said Israel had no official confirmation Syria had moved the SAM-6 missiles into Lebanon. His statement contradicted an Israeli military communique confirming the missiles had been deployed.

But Begin appeared to be trying to deescalate the situation. "I don't think there will be war between Israel and Syria," he said. "We don't want war with Syria and I think Syria has reasons not to want a war with Israel."

Deployment of the missiles could deny the Israeli air force the freedom of action it has had to date over the whole of Lebanon. Western diplomats in Beirut have warned THE FOUR VEHICLES, and a fifth that the threat of war between Syria and Israel would increase if an Israeli jet was brought down by a Syrian missile.

THE BRITISH and Austrian embassies in Beirut have advised their nationals to leave Lebanon if they have no pressing business. With Beirut airport closed since last week as a result of shelling attacks, the only routes out of Lebanon are by road to Syria for flights out of Damascus and by ship to Cyprus.

The latest round of fighting in Lebanon erupted April 1 when Syrian forces besieged the Christian stronghold of Zahle, five miles west of Rayak, in an attempt to neutralize the city's defenders, who are backed by Israel and are seen by Syria as a threat to its national security.

Syria has some 22,000 soldiers stationed in Lebanon to police the cease-fire that ended the 1975-76 civil war between Christians and Moslems, but the Christians charge the Syrians have become an occupation army bent on destroying them.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. said Wednesday that the situation in Lebanon was "very worrisome."

Teachers may collect benefits if Carlin accepts retirement bill

TOPEKA (AP) - A bill improving the but are covered by the Kansas Public retirement benefits of an estimated 26,000 school teachers and state employees passed the Legislature Thursday and was forwarded to Gov. John Carlin, who is expected to sign it.

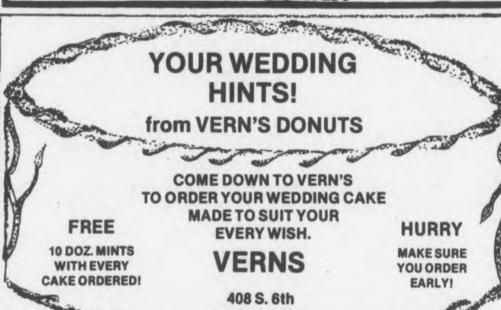

The bill, approved 40-0 by the Senate and 122-3 by the House, boosts benefits of about $18 million and cuts in half the penalty for persons who retire up to five years before normal retirement age of 65.

The retirement measure will affect an estimated 8,000 state employees and about 18,000 school employees already retired. It also will apply to more than 100,000 school and state employees who have not retired Employee Retirement System.

The $18 million to $20 million to be injected into the retirement system for improving benefits comes from a "windfall" of higher collections and earnings on investments of the more than $1 billion in the KPERS fund.

Carlin had offered a rival plan to use up the excess funds by reducing employee contributions to the plan from the present 4 percent of their earnings to 2 percent. But his press secretary, Bill Hoch, said "both bills seemed headed in the same direction," and predicted that Carlin would look favorably on the Legislature's plan.

Dimitri a mixture of talent; mime, clown and musician

Dimitri, who has been combining his talents as a musician, circus clown and classic mime for more than twenty years, will be making his third appearance at K-State 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Born in Ascona, Switzerland, Dimitri, 45, began his artistic career while living in Bern, Switzerland. He played comic roles in student plays and took music, ballet and took acrobatic lessons. He moved to Paris to study Mime under Etienne Decroux. Later he became a circus performer with the clown Maisse and a member of Marcel Marceau's company.

Dimitri is the current holder of the Grock Prize, the highest award for circus comedians in the world.

Often compared with Marceau, Dimitri explains the differences.

"Marceau does a poetic kind of performance, also alone, as I am. We are both silent, but he's really the classic mime, whereas I'm the classic clown. I use musical instruments, some props, sing, and sometimes use my voice in exclaimations or I sing a song in an inverted, nonsense language," he said.

Becoming a clown was "like a destiny" for Dimitri. "There is only one character, always myself. My person, my clown-I play not as a character, but as myself," he said.

Wearing ballet slippers and a white face like that of a mime and a baggy suit with knickers like that of a clown, Dimitri's blend of the two is easily discerned.

Tickets for Saturday's performance are available at the McCain Auditorium box

"Sometimes late at night." Sayer's effort is not an altogether new act, though her name is not familiar to the radio airwaves or its listeners.

Collegian review

Those of you who look at the inner-sleeve and line credits of your albums, will recognize Sayer's name and some of her material. Sayer is one of the best writers and composers in the music industry today. Her sometimes collaborator, Burt Bacharach, has co-written much of the material here and co-produced the album.

It might sound stupid, but the worst thing about this LP is Sayer's vocal work. She doesn't have a very pretty voice. But she has surrounded herself with the best in the business to help write, arrange and play the music. It's the combination of her great

By PETE ECKHOFF lyrics and musicianship that make Collegian Reviewer "Sometimes Late at Night" so good.

The album's credits look like a Grammy nomination list, with all of the following helping out: Michael Jackson, Neil Diamond, Lee Ritenour, David Foster, Jay Graydon, Jeff Porcaro and Bacharach. Providing some very nice background vocals are Jackson, Melissa Manchester and Richard Page and Steve George of Pages.

It's an easy listening masterpiece that shows why Sayer is one of the best, and that the people who helped her are too. These songs may never reach the top forty with Sayer singing the vocals, but look for these songs to be done over by some of the biggies in the business. They'll have smashes on their hands.

Sayer's "Sometimes Late at Night" proves there is more to easy-listening than Barry Manilow, and she has done it with lots of class.

'Urban Cowboy' rides into failure

Editor's note: "Urban Cowboy" will be shown at 7 and 9:45 "Saturday Night Fever." To do so he tonight and Saturday night in Forum Hall.

By JIM MELIZA Collegian Reviewer

America's love affair with the cowboy has spanned the last 100 years, and has come in all shapes and forms. Most notably westerns have assulted the screens of televisions and theaters.

The desire to see this legendary lifestyle seems to have died down. Recent box office failures of "The Long Riders" and "Heavens Gate" substantiate the losses of audience.

Collegian review

This may be attributable to the need for a scenario that is more familiar with the masses. Instead of putting modern, moral qualities into a setting of frontier America, it logically follows that if one took the cowboy image and put it into a modern city, audiences would love it as much as they did the popular television show "McCloud."

James Bridges' "Urban Cowboy" attempts to merge that ideal with the popular enlisted John Travolta and went to Gilley's bar in Houston. Unfortunately, Bridges attempt resulted in a small failure.

Bridges did most of his research from an article in Esquire magazine, which detailed the lifestyle of the urban cowboy. Aside from the sequences at the oil refinery and in Gilley's the research becomes secondary to a love, whose plot is as old as melodrama.

Travolta is good in his role, but the supporting actors do as well or better. Scott Glenn plays a villan whose emotional range is as wide as David Carradine's and Clint Eastwood's. Debra Winger on the other hand brings a sensual aura that more than rivals Travolta.

House approves new approach; judges to define parole eligibility over the future of the Governmental Ethics Commission, and a plan to provide a mandatory 30-year sentence for some criminals were set into motion Thursday.

On unrecorded voice votes, the Kansas Senate refused to agree to changes made by the House in two bills approved earlier by the upper chamber.

That sent the proposals to conference committees made up of three members of each chamber.

The Ethics Commission proposal poses a battle of willpower between the two top leaders in the Legislature-Senate President Ross Doyen and House Speaker Wendell Lady.

Resolution of the campaign ethics issue, along with school finance, is the key to a speedy wrapup of the 1981 legislative

As it now stands, after House passage on a vote 101-24, the Kansas Campaign Finance Act would be re-established and the commission would be renamed as the Kansas Public Disclosure Commission.

THE LEGISLATIVE action was prompted because of a Kansas Supreme Court ruling in January which struck down much of the state's campaign finance law enacted

The Senate, however, is resisting reestablishment of the old law. Led by Doyen, a Concordia Republican, it passed a bill before adjourning April 9 to scale down the law to only require limited disclosure of campaign contributions.

Representing the Senate will be Republicans Paul Hess of Wichita, Ron Hein of Topeka, and Democrat Leroy Hayden of

THE 30-YEAR proposal poses less of a problem for compromise.

The Senate has already passed a bill calling for doubling from 15 to 30 years the minimum sentence that a person convicted of a Class A felony must serve before becoming eligible for parole.

However, the House refused to act on that proposal, instead amending another bill to provide for a new approach to the same

The House would allow a judge to specify how many years, between 15 and 30, that a person would be required to serve before becoming eligible for parole of the top felony, which includes first-degree murder, aggravated kidnapping, aircraft piracy and

Whatever compromise is reached by the two panels must be approved by the full membership of each house before it could be sent to the governor for his consideration.

Food prices decrease contrary to predictions

(AP) - Supermarket prices went down in juice prices-which have been rising April for the third straight month, but the decrease was much smaller than in either of the two preceeding months, an Associated Press marketbasket survey shows.

Experts in and out of government have been steadily predicting that grocery bills would go up because of last summer's heat and drought. The predictions haven't come true so far, but the slowdown in the rate of decline in the AP marketbasket may indicate that the bad news is about to arrive.

The AP survey is based on a list of 14 food and non-food products, selected at random and priced at one supermarket in each of 13 cities. Prices have been checked on or about the beginning of each month since March 1973.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket bill increased at the checklist store in seven cities last month and decreased in six. Overall, the marketbasket bills at the checklist stores were an average of two-tenths of a percent lower at the start of May than they were a month earlier.

During February and March, the marketbasket bills went down by an average of 1.5 percent and 1.3 percent, respectively.

Last month's supermarket prices reflected several developments at the wholesale level. Peanut butter and orange sharply because of bad weather that affected crops-have stabilized. The price remained unchanged last month at the checklist stores in more than half the cities surveyed.

At the same time, sugar prices are continuing to decline. During April, the price of a five-pound sack of sugar dropped at the checklist stores in nine cities.

Members at the SAE house are grief stricken at the news that their illustrious alum was found dead this morning in a drainage ditch near the animal palace by Sgt. Jack Daniels of the R.C.P.D., also an alum. Murphy was released from jail last night on the S.A.E.'s promise to call a temporary cease fire of the bottle rocket barrage against the apartments across the street. Paddy was last seen by the brothers enjoying himself at a "welcome back" Kamikazee party when a local sorority came by to serenade. As the girls struck up "How can you tell a real fraternity man," Paddy ran from the house screaming "After 40 years! I can't stand to hear that song anymore!" He was spotted later in Aggieville attempting to "J.F." over a Miller beer truck. The attempt was unsuccessful, and Murphy landed on a local beer establishment owner. No injuries were sustained by the tavern owner.

Funeral services are to held Saturday afternoon. Arrangements are being made by Manhattan Refuse Control Service. A wake in his honor is to be held Friday night after Aggieville and all are invited. Paddy's will had one stipulation: that his wake should include at least 1 keg for every year that he was married to Lucy Pattie.

Stubborn Mules finally fall, 'Cats win 5-4

Those stubborn Mules.

Central Missouri State's baseball team lived up to its nickname in giving K-State a run for its money Thursday at Frank Myers

In the end, the Wildcats and pitcher Duane Harms worked out of a bases loaded jam in the top of the ninth to notch a 5-4 victory over the visitors from Warrensburg, Mo.

Originally, the two teams had planned to play two seven-inning games. However, Central Missouri State could play only one game because of a rule limiting the number of games league members can play in one

> THREE CENTRAL MISSOURI State pitchers limited K-State to only seven hits, but they combined to issue 11 walks.

The Wildcats took a quick 1-0 lead in the bottom of the first inning when shortstop Antonio Triplett scored from third base on an error by his counterpart Beanie Lemken.

THE VISITORS went in front 3-1 in the

The complete-game performance of Harms, who raised his record to 5-0, pleased Baker. He allowed seven hits and two walks while striking out seven.

"This was Duane's probably best outing of the season," Baker said. "He was in total control of the ball game. This is what he's going to have to do to be the kind of pitcher we'd like him to be."

While Harms was holding the Mules in check, K-State found time to get him the third inning, collecting three hits, including a two-run triple by second baseman Craig

K-State cut the lead to 3-2 with a run in the fourth inning and it stayed that way until the Wildcats came up with three runs in the sixth without a hit.

Losing pitcher Mark Winsor, 4-1, walked five in the inning-including four in a row-as K-State scored twice. Left fielder Don Grause scored the final and deciding run when Lemken committed his second error of the game.

The Mules made one final run at regaining the lead in the top of the ninth. With one out, Harms walked first baseman David Thielker. Then Triplett could not handle a roller by pinch-hitter Will Cobbins, putting runners at the corners.

Catcher Mark Stanko singled home Thielker to make it 5-4, but the inning wasn't over. Harms issued his second walk to load the bases but induced Lemken to bounce into a game-ending double play.

The loss snapped a 12-game winning streak for the Mules, 34-10. K-State, which boosted its record to 28-19, will next play a 1:30 p.m. doubleheader Sunday at Frank Myers Field against the Northwest Missouri State Bearcats.

After the Bearcats, the 'Cats will battle the Emporia State Hornets in a doubleheader Tuesday at 1:30 p.m. at Frank Meyers Field.

They will return to Big 8 action May 9-10 against the Iowa State Cyclones in Ames.

Confidence key to success for 'Cats' Stucky

By LINDA LUGINBILL Collegian Reporter

Weekends were made for Michelob. Except for Janice Stucky. To her weekends were made for track meets.

Stucky, a junior in animal science, is back for her third season on the K-State track squad and is carrying the main throwing load as she is the top weight person for the Wildcats.

Stucky, a Burrton native, attended Moundridge High School where she collectively lettered in volleyball, basketball and track nine times. She said she picked track over other sports when she came to college because she seemed to do better at it.

"I came up to K-State's track camp as a sophomore and I liked what I saw," Stucky said. "The coaching staff was really great."

STUCKY, WHO THROWS both the shot and discus for K-State, developed an interest in the shot put when she was in seventh grade.

'My brother was throwing then and we always had one around," she said. "I just picked it up and started throwing it."

But she didn't pick up a discus until her sophomore year in high school and she went on to make those two events her Stucky brought her talents to K-State fter high school and has improved her throwing ability ever since. She has thrown 46-5 in the shot and her best toss in the discus is 151-3.

But just as her talent increased, so did the level of competition.

"It's tough," Stucky said. "It got tough real quick. The Big 8 is especially tough but I'm getting into it better now.'

Both men, women tracksters compete in final home meet

By T.J. ELLIS Collegian Reporter

For the first and last time this outdoor season, both the K-State men's and women's track teams will be competing at home this weekend.

The competition begins on Friday for the women with the heptathlon starting at 2 p.m. Other women teams entered in the meet will be Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa State and New Mexico.

The rest of the events in the KSU Invitational-or for the men, the Sunflower Classic, with K-State, Kansas and Wichita State competing—get underway Saturday at 11 a.m. at R.V. Christian track.

"We should fare better than we ever have against KU," K-State men's coach Mike Ross said. "K-State has never beaten KU head to head or in a triangular meet. I want to push them all the way to the wall on Saturday.

"I'm looking for a good team effort. There will be good head to head competition in almost every event and several races should go right down to the wire."

KANSAS WILL BRING a full squad to town, featuring 400-meter ace Dean Hogan. Hogan has had some injury problems this year, missing the KU Relays and last weekend's dual with Oregon State, but he is expected to run on Saturday.

Perry envisions Wildcats in playoffs

Collegian Reporter

Don't give up on K-State baseball-not

To hear Glynn Perry talk about the program, one might come to the conclusion that the Wildcats aren't far from becoming a factor in the Big 8.

Perry, a jack-of-all-trades player who plays on the infield as well as in the outfield, is confident K-State has the makings of a conference title contender.

"The character and attitude (of the players) is a lot better than it was last year," Perry said.

That difference has produced a 6-10 conference record and a 27-19 overall mark. In 1980, K-State finished 2-18 in league play and 15-29 overall.

In fact, Perry said the 'Cats are still in the running for one of the four spots in the league tournament May 14-18 at Oklahoma

Speaking of close, Perry had a close encounter of the serious kind early this season. While playing center field for the first time in his career, he and left fielder Mark Nordyke ran into each other while chasing a fly ball.

"It was the first game of the season. In fact, it was the first ball hit to the outfield. I guess there was a lack of communication,"

The accident kept Perry out of only two of K-State's 46 games this season. He has come on to bat .394 and driven in 36 runs. Both totals are second-best on the team.

Stucky is doing. She said she is happy with the way the season is going, especially her discus throwing.

Even though discus is her favorite, Stucky said she needs to be stronger in both events.

"I'm working out all the time and doing a lot more throwing this year," Stucky said. "I think that will help me improve a lot."

Right now Stucky said she should be throwing 48 feet in the shot and 160 in the discus. But she has set her goals at 50 feet in the shot and 175 feet in the discus, something she knows will take work.

AND TO HELP HER achieve her goals, coach Barry Anderson is making sure she's receiving the right training.

"Janice does a lot of weight training."

with some running," Anderson said. "She does a great deal of working on her technique and the fundamentals of throwing."

For about three hours a day, Stucky is out doing just that—throwing the shot and discus. She said she's having more fun than ever.

"It's a lot more fun this year," she said. "The better you do, the better you feel."

And according to Anderson, she is still capable of doing better, adding Stucky hasn't reached her full potential yet.

"She still can do much, much better," Anderson said. "Her weight training and strength have improved a lot and she will definitely improve in another year.

"When throwing becomes more automatic for her and she doesn't have to think about what she's doing, she'll make bigger and better throws."

STUCKY CREDITS HER achievements at K-State to Anderson, who has worked with her a lot and helped her on her technique.

But before the coaching, Stucky thanks her parents for all their support.

"They've backed me all the way and have always been supportive," she said. "They would come to every meet if they could."

And after three years of track meets, Stucky believes in herself and has gained confidence.

"In these three years, I've gained more confidence in myself," she said. "When you place well you can hold your head up, and now I look forward to the weekends."

The long jump will feature four prominent jumpers—K-State's Veryl Switzer (25-4) and Rodney Brogden (24-10½) and KU's Warren Wilhoite (25-3¼) and Mark Hansen (25-0).

Plus, K-State, KU and Wichita State will have a full squad entered in the running events.

ON THE WOMEN'S SIDE, track fans will be able to see the sensational Merlene Ottey, Nebraska's world record holder in the 300-yard dash, the 300-meter dash and the 200-meter dash. Representing Jamaica, Ottey placed second at the Olympics last summer in the 200-meter dash.

"This will be a tremendous meet," women's coach Barry Anderson said. "Several outstanding people will be here and every team has a good chance for the title.

"We've been running a lot of relays lately and we need to get back to running some open times. The athletes are also excited about competing at home, so we should do well."

After a bout with a virus, Wanda Trent should be back to full speed. Trent, who placed third in the 600-meter dash at the AIAW National Indoor Championships last year, will be trying to qualify for either the 200 or 400-meter dash Saturday

Also performing well for the women is Janice Stucky. Stucky currently has the school record in the discus—151-3—and a personal best of 46-5 in the shot put.

"I tried to play for them and I got hurt," he said. As a result, he was red-shirted his

His one year there ultimately led to his decision to give major college baseball another try.

"The thing that helped me the most was the state tournament (for junior colleges)," Perry said. "I had a real good tournament. I had a game-winning home run to put us in

Lake Land lost that game to Triton Junior

Perry, who played shortstop there, came here as a shortstop and relief pitcher. This

He is another Wildcat who is eligible for the June baseball draft, but he might pass up the opportunity to turn pro this summer.

"The situation would have to be just right for me to turn pro," he said. "My education means a lot to me. They (pro teams) can release you at any time."

Rangers hand Royals 7-0 loss

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Pat Putnam had two doubles and two runs batted in and Rick Honeycutt shut out Kansas City on five hits—the fourth shutout in a row for Texas pitching—as the Rangers beat the Royals 7-0 Thursday night.

The victory for Texas was tarnished when last year's Gold Glove third baseman, Buddy Bell, limped off the field when he stumbled after beating out a grounder in the seventh inning. The Rangers said Bell had pulled a groin muscle.

Honeycutt, 2-0, struck out one and walked one in his first complete game of the season.

Putnam got his two RBI's in a four-run fifth inning against Rich Gale, 1-2. Putnam's double scored Bell, who had walked, and John Grubb, who had singled.

The other two runs came when Grubb singled in Bump Wills and Mickey Rivers. Wills had reached base on a fielder's choice and Rivers had singled.

Texas got single runs in the third, sixth and seventh innings. In the third, Billy Sample singled and scored on a double by Wills. In the sixth, Sample scored again on Wills' sacrifice fly after doubling and taking third on a wild pitch. In the seventh, Bill Stein ran for the injured Bell, moved to third on a double by Grubb and scored when reliever Paul Splittorff balked.

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians rallied for three runs in the seventh, two on Toby Harrah's homer, to beat the Chicago White Sox 3-2 Thursday night.

NATIONAL LEAGUE Reds 4, Padres 3

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dave Collins rapped three hits to support the combined five-hit pitching of Mike LaCoss, Joe Price and Tom Hume, enabling the Cincinnati Reds to beat San Diego 4-3 Thursday night.

Joe Lefebvre had two homers, driving in all the Padres' runs.

LaCoss, 1-2, scattered four hits and walked four in 7 1-3 innings. Price relieved him with one out in the eighth and San Diego runners on first and second. He struck out Barry Evans and Luis Salazar and gave way in the ninth to Hume, who recorded his third save.

Collins doubled to lead off the first against Steve Mura, 0-3. He came around on a ground-out and Dave Concepcion's single. In the second, Ray Knight singled, took third on Joe Nolan's single and scored on Ron Oester's single. One out later, Collins looped an RBI single to center to score Nolan.

Weekend sports

Softball

Taking with them a 21-20 record, the K-State softball team goes on the road today to play three consecutive games this weekend.

The Wildcats start their three day schedule in Maryville, Mo., taking on Northwest Missouri State.

The two teams met once before this season at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational where the 'Cats had no trouble downing NMS 8-1.

Coach Charlotte Michal expects the doubleheader to be tough, though.

"I expect different games from them this time," Michal said. "They have played some good teams and have split with them."

The next step for the women will be on Saturday in Omaha, Neb. There the 'Cats take on Creighton for the second time this season.

K-State lost to Creighton 5-0 in the championship game at the Emporia State Invitational earlier in the year.

K-State's final stop will be on Sunday to play the University of Nebraska in Lincoln.

The Cornhuskers swept a doubleheader from K-State here in Manhattan and now the 'Cats are ready for revenge.

But the women would have a difficult time getting a victory as Nebraska is ranked in the Big 8 and is a very tough team, according to Michal.

"There are no easy games coming up for us this weekend," Michal concluded.

Women's Golf

The K-State women's golf team, after finishing last in the Big 8 tournament which ended Wednesday in Lawrence, travel to Stephens College in Columbia, Mo, today and Saturday for an invitational.

A's finish off best April in history

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - How good are Billy Martin's boys of April, the 18-3 Oakland A's? Well, they just set the record for the best April in major league baseball history, that's how good.

Pitching ace Mike Norris said one reason he signed a new, five-year contract early this week was that, "It's beneficial for me to stay here because we've got a dynasty going."

An April 1981 dynasty, for sure. It will take a lot more victories before the baseball world recognizes the A's as something more than an exciting young team reaching the age of maturity as a contender.

Their 18 victories and three losses set the American League (AL) record and tied the major league record for winning the most games in the month of April. The San Francisco Giants teams of 1971 and 1974 won 18 games in April. In 1971 they lost four games in April and lost six times in April starting with Friday night's invasion of the New York Yankees, the team which has twice fired Martin as manager.

Casey Stengel's Yankees, winners of five straight World Series (1949-53) and nine American League pennants in a 10-year span, were definitely in the dynasty class. The best team showing since was by the A's, who won the first of five consecutive AL West titles in 1971 and claimed consecutive world championships in 1972, 1973, 1974 with Catfish Hunter, Reggie Jackson, Rollie Fingers and Vida Blue.

"We're a younger team than the A's of 1971, and I think we've got more talent, too," said Norris, the 26-year-old hurler who was 22-9 last year and stands 5-0 this season after beating the California Angels 6-4 Wednesday-the first in the league with five

BERT CAMPANERIS, the shortstop

THERE ARE 141 games left this season, whom former A's owner Charlie Finley often described as the most important player on the championship Oakland teams, isn't sold yet on the new A's. But, he admitted this week, "Yes, they remind me of our team about 10 years ago.

Campaneris, now with the Angels, said in comparing Martin's team with the old A's, Their outfield is good, their infield not so good, and their pitching really good."

The earned run average of the A's staff was 1.90 after Norris, with a five-hitter, recorded his fourth complete game and the team's 17th of the young season Wednesday.

"As I've said before, our pitching is too good for us to lose three games in a row," he said after stopping a two-game losing streak.

The losses in the opening games of a threegame series with the Angels were by 3-2 and 3-1. The A's opened the season with 11 straight victories.

'Cats sign Bonner

K-State women's basketball team signed its' first high school prepster, Angie Bonner of St. Louis Southwest High School.

Bonner, a 6-1 center who averaged 30 points and 14 rebounds per game, chose the Wildcats over Missouri, Cincinnati, Wisconsin and Florida.

Bonner was voted MVP of the city and received the Illinois-Missouri Female Athlete of the Year award.

Derby's entrants exceed 20-horse limit

Lass, an uncertain starter, put her mark on the 107th Kentucky Derby Thursday when she was entered with 22 other 3-year-olds.

Because there were 23 entered, the 20horse-limit rule, based on career earnings, was invoked and Law Me and Mythical Ruler, as expected, were bumped when Tap Shoes and Double Sonic were entered.

Then trainer Jose Martin dropped a bombshell when he not only entered Noble Nashua but Wayward Lass, who bumped Flying Nashua from the field.

Larry Barrera, who trains Flying Nashua, and his brother, Albert, who trains Derby starter Pass the Tab, were upset because there was no also-eligible list.

ALBERT NOTED the Illinois Derby, in which Pass The Tab finished second, was restricted to 14 starters, but had an alsoeligible list of six. When three horses were scratched the day of the race, three moved off the list and into the starting field.

If Wayward Lass is scratched from the Derby on Saturday, the race would be run with a 19-horse field.

"She probably won't run in the Derby," said Larry Barrera. "She's entered in two races in two days." Wayward Lass also is entered in the 1 1-16-mile Kentucky Oaks for fillies the day before Saturday's 14-mile Derby, which was won last year by the filly, Genuine Risk.

"We were 90-10 that we were going before the post-position draw," said Carl Lizza, majority owner of Flying Zee Stable, which races Wayward Lass and Noble Nashua. He said "there was no question we would have gone" if the filly had drawn a No. 4 through 10 post.

BUT SHE DREW the No. 20 slot, and Lizza said her chances of starting were 50-50. He said a decision would be made Friday morning.

"Maybe he (Martin) is upset because LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - Wayward (Angel) Cordero took off Noble Nashua to ride Larry's horse," Lizza said. "Now he's out and Larry's out." Cash Asmussen was named as rider on Wayward Lass and Noble

> Larry Barrera, 21, assisted his father when Laz Barrera won the Derby with Bold Forbes in 1976 and with Affirmed in 1978.

But Martin said he held no grudges against the Barreras. "This is a business," he said. "I'm doing my job."

Wayward Lass's career winnings of $212,967 make her the No. 7 money-earner in the field. She has won three of seven starts this year and has five victories in 19 career

Flying Nashua, who did not race at 2, has earnings of $79,250 on a record of two wins, one of them in San Vincente; a third in the San Felipe Handicap; and a fourth in the Santa Anita Derby.

Amtrak birthday could be its last if Reagan cuts the budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amtrak is marking its 10th birthday, but the party could be Amtrak's last, as Reagan administration budget cutters take aim on the national passenger railroad.

Nevertheless, Amtrak president Alan Boyd cautioned recently, "Don't send flowers yet," indicating he has hope that Amtrak's friends on Capitol Hill may yet save the rail system.

But Boyd's optimism is tempered with uncertainty.

If President Reagan gets his way in Congress, Amtrak's future will be limited to running trains along the Northeast corridor—no more Empire Builder, San Francisco Zephyr, Lake Shore Limited or other long-distance trains crisscrossing America.

The administration has made clear it believes the government's decade-long experience in financing a national passenger rail system should end. It claims, though, that its budget still would allow some trains to run outside the Northeast.

AMTRAK EMPLOYEES mark the railroad's 10th anniversary with ceremonies today and Saturday in Washington. It was May 1, 1971, that Amtrak took over the country's passenger train services from financially troubled private railroads.

These days, Boyd notes "the irony of finding ourselves in the best shape we've ever been in and at the same time with our backs to the wall." Indeed, Amtrak services are at their peak today.

Almost the entire system has new locomotives and cars. On-time performance eclipses that of many airlines. Customer complaints have dropped. The number of passengers—nearly 22 million last year—is growing steadily, and Amtrak's goal of having fares cover half of operating costs may be achieved in 1983, two years ahead of schedule.

"It's like the kid who takes the first dive off the diving board and comes out of the water and says, 'Hey, Ma, look at me!' And at that stage of the game, Ma comes over and pushes the kid's head under the water," Boyd said.

THE ADMINISTRATION says it will give Amtrak $613 million next year. Amtrak is asking for $853 million. Sources say privately that subsidies of $750 million to $800 million might be enough to keep the trains running, although some capital programs would have to be postponed.

The Senate Commerce Committee voted this week to go along with the Reagan budget cuts, but Amtrak officials say that was expected. The real fight will now be in the House, they predict.

Robert Blanchette, head of the Federal Railroad Administration (FRA), says Reagan's budget will allow limited services outside the Northeast corridor, and that Amtrak is overestimating costs of shutting down.

"The FRA has brought a lot of figures over here," Boyd responded. "We asked them how they got them, and they'd say with this assumption or that assumption. And WASHINGTON (AP) — Amtrak is we've been able to point out that those arking its 10th birthday, but the party assumptions are not valid."

IF AMTRAK is limited to the Northeast corridor, its executives say, the government would be left with almost 700 new or newly refurbished passenger cars, dozens of virtually new locomotives and contractual obligations totaling $350 million.

Much of the Amtrak debate has focused on statistics that often are contradictory.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis is fond of telling audiences it is cheaper for the government to give passengers airline tickets than to have them take some Amtrak trains.

He and Blanchette argue that trains don't attract enough riders—"less than 1 percent of the nation's intercity travelers"—to warrant nearly $1 billion in federal money a

The passenger train, Blanchette recently told Congress, is largely "a non-essential component of this nation's transportation system."

SUCH TALK incenses Ross Capon, executive director of the 11,000-member National Association of Railroad Passengers.

"These clowns are talking about buses. They don't ride buses. When's the last time Drew Lewis took a 500-mile bus trip?" Capon snapped during an interview.

"It makes no sense at all to be the only major country in the world" without national passenger rail service, he said. Eliminating Amtrak, he said, would deprive many people who can't afford air travel over long distances.

Capon says the 1 percent figure for intercity travelers is misleading because it's based on a 100 percent total that takes into account anyone who travels more than 30 miles, including tens of thousands of commuters who are not truly intercity travelers.

Clark Tyler, an Amtrak vice president also said the 1 percent figure doesn't accurately reflect Amtrak's pulling power in the markets where it competes. Tyler said that in such markets, Amtrak trains carry 15-20 percent of intercity travelers.

AND AMTRAK executives say only a few trains—such as the Washington-Cincinnati Shenandoah, which is to be scrapped in October anyway—have costs so high or ridership so low as to make an airline ticket more economical.

The final verdict on Amtrak's future may well rest on a broader policy issue: Should the country have a national rail passenger system that all agree will never be selfsufficient?

ifficient? Lewis says no. Boyd says yes.

Boyd notes that other forms of transportation receive federal assistance. Buses and trucks run on tax-paid highways, and airlines use a federal air traffic control

"For Amtrak they are 'subsidies," he said. "(But) money that goes to support the highway system or the air traffic control system represents 'a public investment."

increase in tuition, students in the semester fees. College of Veterinary Medicine recently received a surprise when one that was bandied about in the it was mistakenly announced their fees would increase by 54 percent.

An article that appeared in the April 24 edition of In-View, a newspaper for K-State employees published by the University Relations office, reported that tuition and fees for vet students would be $790 per semester, up from last year's fee of $512. The actual total fee for next year will be $607.

The In-View article stated the incidental fee of the College of Veterinary Medicine would be $683. The fee will actually be approximately $500, an increase of 22 percent from last year. The incidental fees are set by the Board of Regents and do not include student fees.

THE ERRONEOUS information apparently originated in the University Relations office and was later picked up by staff members in the dean's office in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

By STEPHANIE MOWRY The article in which the in-Collegian Reporter formation appeared was about Although many students are student tuition increases and inconcerned about the 22 percent cluded a breakdown of the 1981 fall

> "The figure that we printed was regent's meeting and when the figures were calculated it was from the wrong number," Bob Bruce, director of information and the writer of the article, said.

> In-View is distributed to all faculty and staff members and University offices. When it reached the dean's office in the College of Veterinary Medicine, the amount of tuition increase was noted and a letter was sent Tuesday to all vet students telling them how much their fees were going to be increased, John Noordsy, assistant dean of veterinary medicine, said.

> "A routine letter was sent out to inform students of the fee increase," he said. "That's what we do as a service to our students. We advise them of any fee increases so they can prepare their budget for the next semester."

> THE MISTAKE in the amount of the fee increase was not noticed because everyone involved believed what was printed in the Many students were surprised when they received the notices informing them their tuition had been increased by 54 percent.

"When I saw the figures I was mighty surprised," Bob Ryan, senior in veterinary medicine, said.

"We were all real surprised," John Weigant, senior in veterinary medicine, said. "A lot of us thought the increase was a typo."

When they learned from the dean's office the figure was not a typographical error, they questioned the faculty about the tuition hike and Carolyn Roberts, assistant to the dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, investigated. She found the figure

"Unfortunately, the fees were misquoted but I think it's been rectified," Noordsy said.

Weigant said many of the students have received the corrected letters and, "it looks like things will be OK now."

Demonstrators protest conduct in El Salvador quoted in In-View was a mistake.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Tens of thousands of demonstrators marched to the Pentagon in Sunday's spring sunshine to protest U.S. military involvement in El Salvador and President Reagan's proposed cuts in domestic social programs.

The march of about 21/2 miles began near the Lincoln Memorial about 1 p.m. EDT, moving slowly. As those in the back of the line were just arriving at the Pentagon three hours later, others were heading for home though the rally didn't end until about 6 p.m.

MEANWHILE, THOSE at the rally cheered speakers ranging from Washington high school student Warren Coleman to former New York Congresswoman Bella Abzug.

"The same gang of crazies in the Pentagon and at the White Houset that brought us that war in Vietnam are now trying to get us into a war in El Salvador," Ms. Abzug said. "The time to stop a war is before it begins.'

Dry weather hampers Fort Riley fox hunt

Collegian Reporter FORT RILEY - Many people's image of a peaceful morning horseback ride may not include the sound of a horn and barking hounds, but these sounds were prevalent for those who participated in a Fort Riley fox hunt Sunday morning.

About 70 people, primarily from the Fort Leavenworth Hunt, participated on Sunday. The Fort Leavonworth Hunt is a private organization composed of civilian and military members. The hunt was the first one to be held at Fort Riley since during World War II.

Susan Hines, sophomore in general business administration, is a member of the Fort Leavenworth Hunt who participated in the hunt.

"I ride mostly to have a good time and to watch the hounds work," Susan said.

Although Susan and her father, Lt. Col. Norman "Sam" Hines, both began riding horses as

By GAIL GAREY children, Sam did not become involved in fox hunts until he joined the military.

Others participating in the hunt ranged from experienced fox hunters like Susan and Sam, to those riding for the first time.

ONE PERSON riding for the first time was Barb Robel, director of Greek Affairs. Robel said that although she is more familiar with the Western style of riding, "it is very interesting to watch another aspect" of horse competition.

Many of the participants said that although they have been riding for years, they are primarily out to have fun.

As in protests past, counterdemonstrators gathered in support of U.S. policy. Some carrying American flags stood briefly at one of the entrances to the Pentagon, and others met at the Lincoln Memorial and across from the White House.

The main demonstrations recalled the October, 1967, protest of the Vietnam War when between 30,000 and 35,000 people angrily confronted 8,000 troops and hordes of police and federal marshals at the Pentagon. That two-day protest resulted in 600 arrests and 50 injuries.

SUNDAY'S MARCH and rallies were orderly and peaceful. No troops were present. One arrest was reported, that of a male who threw a red substance on the front of a Pentagon entrance, federal police said. He was charged and released, they said.

Gathering at the Lincoln Memorial, they carried signs protesting the draft, demanding money for jobs instead of war, and asking the United States to end its military aid to the government of El

The United States has dispatched 56 military advisers and $25 million in aid to bolster the civilian-military junta that rules El Salvador. President Reagan says the Soviet Union is helping arm Salvadoran rebels, and that he fears communists will spread rebellion elsewhere in the hemisphere if the junta is overthrown in El Salvador.

"No Draft, No War; U.S. Out of Salvador," chanted demonstrators waiting to hear 26 speakers ranging from Washington high school student Warren Coleman to former U.S. Rep. Bella Abzug. Others sunbathed, threw Frisbees and sang.

Hunger-striking IRA guerrilla nears death, lapses into coma

Jailed IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands was reported to have lapsed into a coma in the 64th day of his hunger strike Sunday. But his family and Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, the fiery Irish nationalist, urged Sands' followers to stay calm.

Sinn Fein, political arm of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, said Sands became comatose before dawn and remained unconscious. British authorities said the 27year-old guerrilla was "asleep for most of the day" but refused comment on whether he was in a coma.

Sinn Fein said it got word that Sands was in a coma from Oliver Hughes, who visited Sands around noon. Hughes is the brother of Francis Hughes, 25, also reported nearing death in the 50th day of a hunger strike at the Maze prison.

OLIVER HUGHES told a rally of thousands of Irish Republican Army supporters later in the day that Sands was lying on a waterbed with a large golden crucifix in his hand.

"On my way out, I saw Bobby Sands' door was open and I went through and saw him.' Oliver Hughes said. "I was frightened. I thought he was dead. His eyes were closed, there was no movement in his body, his face was a blackish color. Bobby Sands was lying on his back just like a dead man."

Sands' mother, Rosaleen, told reporters before entering the Maze, "My son is dying. I think he is coming up to near the end. I can't see how he can last much longer. I appeal to everyone to stay calm and not to get involved in any fighting.'

Her call was echoed by Mrs. McAliskey, who told 15,000 people at a rally outside Toome, 30 miles from Belfast, to "hold your tempers."

"I don't want a single riot, a single stone (thrown). We don't want any (fire) bombs thrown," Mrs. Devlin said.

BUT SHE added, "If Bobby has paid with his life for his demands, we cannot afford not to have them granted." She urged that BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - random violence be replaced by organized pressure.

> The IRA has vowed a new terror campaign if Sands should die without achieving his goal—special privileges for IRA inmates that would amount to political prisoner status—and Protestant extremists said they would retaliate with a force that would drive the British-ruled province into civil war.

> Thirteen people have died violently in Northern Ireland since Sands, who was elected to the British Parliament April 9, began his hunger strike March 1. He demanded IRA prisoners be allowed to wear their own clothes, refrain from prison work and associate freely among themselves.

THE GOVERNMENT of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has refused, saying this would give legitimacy to the guerrillas' campaign to end British rule in the predominantly Protestant North and reunite it with the Roman Catholic Irish Republic.

Sands has rejected all outside appeals to end his fast. Pope John Paul II's personal envoy, the Rev. John Magee, failed in three visits to Sands, and the jailed guerrilla refused to see two mediators from the Strasbourg, France-based European Commission on European Rights.

In Vatican City Sunday, the pope called for an end to Northern Ireland's 111/2 years of sectarian violence. He said tension in the province "threatens to break out in new. grave acts of fratricide."

NATO talks with Russia appear likely, says official

ROME (AP) - It is highly likely that NATO will soon announce plans to start nuclear missile reduction talks with the Soviet Union, the secretary general of the Western alliance, Joseph Luns, said Sunday.

Luns said announcement of a date for talks could come at a two-day meeting of 15 North Atlantic Treaty Organization foreign ministers beginning Monday. Luns said, however, the date would more likely be announced after a meeting of defense ministers in Brussels next week.

"Practically all nations of the alliance wish the resumption of talks as soon as possible and I assure you the U.S. government is very aware of this," Luns told a news conference.

Luns said that Secretary of State Alexander Haig and the other foreign ministers in Rome will hold a closed-door session without a fixed agenda to discuss current relations between the alliance and the Soviet bloc.

The United States has been under pressure from West Germany, the Netherlands, Britain, Italy and other countries to open negotiations with the Soviet Union to reduce the number of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

When NATO agreed in 1979 to base 572 cruise and Pershing II missiles in Western Europe beginning in 1983, it also promised to negotiate.

Western European governments, faced by anti-nuclear demonstrations and pressure from opposition parties, have been urging the United States to negotiate with the Soviet Union.

Luns said NATO should "become more active in informing the public about the nature of the alliance and the crucial role it continues to play in guaranteeing the safety and freedom

It was an apparent reference to recent calls by several leaders for public relations activities to counter the arguments of nuclear disarmament advocates.

"I think it is thanks to the atomic arms of the United States that war has been avoided and peace maintained," Luns said.

Iran holds Texas research ship

LONDON — Iran is holding a seismographic ship belonging to a Texas-based research company after it apparently strayed into the Persian Gulf war zone, company officials said Sunday. They said Kuwait, which hired the ship, is seeking its release.

The ship and its crew of 19—most of them British—were escorted Thursday to the Iranian port of Bushehr on the southwest coast of Iran, according to Damir Skerl, a vice president for Western Geophysical Co., which has offices in London.

Skerl said the ship was looking for possible sites for the Kuwaiti National Oil Co. to begin oil and gas exploration.

"It's not absolutely clear why this happened, but we think the ship may have strayed into the war zone, so the Iranians decided to get it out of there," he said.

Officials determine oil spill 'unsafe'

LIVERMORE, Calif. — The last of some 3,000 gallons of oil laced with poisonous PCBs (polychlorinated biphenyls) that spilled in a highway accident was washed from a major highway here Sunday, authorities said.

A double tanker truck rammed an empty pickup parked on the shoulder of Interstate 580 and flipped over Friday night, authorities said, spilling the oil laden with PCBs used in making electric insulation and linked to birth defects and cancer.

Tests conducted Saturday showed the oil contained up to 21 parts per million of PCBs, officials said. Under federal standards, 50 parts per million is the maximum concentratin considered safe.

Men claim bean theft not a trend

BATON ROUGE, La. — Prosecutors call it the nation's biggest single theft from interstate commerce—$1.25 million worth of soybeans on two barges stolen from their Mississippi River moorings.

But men who deal with tugs and barges said Sunday they were surprised by U.S. Attorney Don Beckner's statement that the theft, for which two men were indicted Friday, is part of a markedly rising number along the river.

"This is the first one I have heard of," said Capt. Merle Harbourt, regional vice president of American Waterway Operators—a national trade group of tug and barge fleet operators and the shipyards which service them.

He said the only similar incident he could remember was theft of diesel fuel from moored barges near New Orleans several months ago.

Joseph Domino, owner of Joseph C. Domino Inc., a tugboat operating company, said he'd never heard of barges being stolen.

Heart-lung transplant succeeds

STANFORD, Calif. — A man who received a new heart and lungs last week breathed without help Sunday at Stanford University Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Charles Walker, who underwent the heart-lung transplant Friday, was taken off a respirator Saturday. It was only the fifth such operation in history and the second in the past decade.

Walker was weaned from the respirator sooner than was Mary Gohlke, the world's longest-living survivor of the double transplant. She needed the respirator for 16 days.

Walker, 30, of Binghamton, N.Y. was "doing well" Sunday, hospital spokeswoman Bobbi Navickis said.

Walker, who had a congenital heart defect that led to severe lung damage, waited nearly a month at Stanford before organs from a compatible donor were available.

Plea for painless life convinces jury

CHICAGO — A woman left a speechless quadraplegic after cosmetic surgery on her nose was awarded $9 million by a jury in her damage suit after she testified that the one thing she wanted was for her pain to stop.

The 12 Circuit Court jurors never heard Eileen Tannebaum describe her condition aloud—she testified by making highpitched sounds meaning "yes" or "no" as a therapist pointed to a board with 64 words

Mrs. Tannebaum, 46, appeared in court for about five minutes, testifying from flat on her back in a bed.

Doctors said Mrs. Tannebaum's arms and legs were permanently paralyzed after her brain was deprived of oxygen during surgery in 1975 at Northwest Hospital. She cannot speak.

At one point during her court appearance, Mrs. Tannebaum was asked: "If you could have one thing in the world, what would it be?" With the help of the words on the board, she replied "Stop pain."

Weather

If the Legislature is trying to stay in session this year 'till hell freezes over, it may take quite a while. The high today is forecast for the low 70s with a chance of thundershowers.

Dead week?

Once again K-State students have reached that pinnacle in the semester commonly known and celebrated as "dead week."

Dead week is an interesting term that says everything, but means little to the University.

Supposedly social functions are not conducted during this period. Supposedly academic testing is minimal during this period. Supposedly its a week students can use to finish those term papers they have avoided the entire semester, and brush up for finals without added academic and social pressures.

But any student can take a look around and clearly see that dead week, as defined by other universities, is a non-existent event at K-State.

Many students are scrambling this week, wondering how they are going to handle the four or five tests scheduled for the next five days and then make it through final exams next week.

Attempts have been made to define dead week and establish guidelines for its implementation, spawning debates on what should or should not occur during the week. These efforts have obviously failed. While some students face academic pressures this week, others are free to begin studying for finals.

If K-State is going to have a dead week, then the University should insure that it is a week of no testing. If not, the University should eliminate the confusion caused by the ambiguous term.

Letters

YAF misunderstood

Editor,

I found Bill Crum's attack on YAF in his letter to the editor quite provocative.

He asserts that if the government were to abondon education only the rich would be able to afford it. This assertion runs contrary to the evidence of a free market system-that competition produces a cheaper, higher quality product. It makes no difference whether the product is a loaf of bread, a pair of shoes, an automobile or an education-all can be produced at a lower price and better quality when the incentives of profit making are introduced.

To the extent that the government has gotten involved in the automobile, agriculture and education industries, the consumer has paid dearly in terms of higher prices and higher taxes. Furthermore, the issue of freedom cannot be ignored. Does the ability to force someone else to pay for one's education, under the threat of imprisonment, constitute freedom?

Crum also cited what he considers the failures of a laissez faire economic system-monopolies, chronic poverty and political corruption and dominatin. Ask yourself what monopolies exist today and why. If you come up with answers like the postal service, utilities and sugar growers, the why part is not difficult to answer. Has 20 years of massive spending on social programs actually alleviated the problem of chronic poverty, or has it contributed more to the affluence of bureaucrats, politicians and other special interests? The evidence speaks for itself. Finally, political corruption cannot, by definition, exist in a truly laissez faire system.

As a libertarian, I am encouraged by YAF's commitment to economic freedom. However, the conservatives have yet to learn that freedom will not be attained until we halt aid to oppresive regimes such as the junta in El Salvador, abolish victimless crime laws, put an end to business subsidization and guarantee each and every persons' right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness in a peaceful, honest way.

Rugby neglected

Editor.

There is good news for all you fans of K-State athletics. Saturday one of K-State's teams will be going to Dayton, Ohio to battle with the University of California, Harvard and a third team yet to be determined.

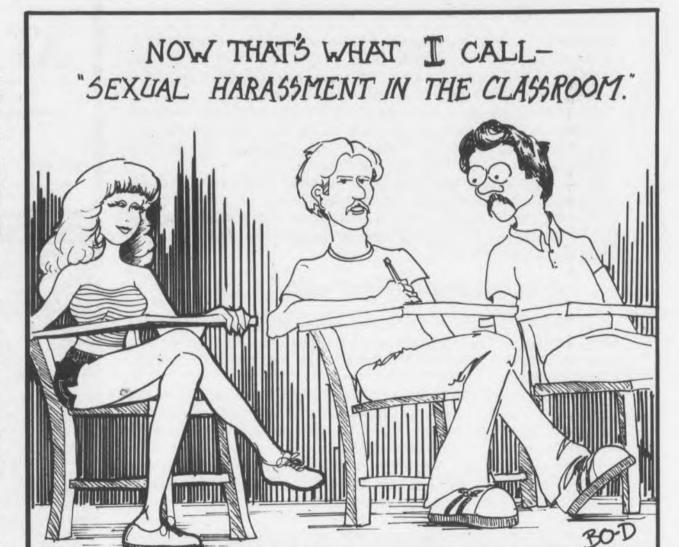

Why haven't you heard about this before? It's because you missed the one-inch rugby feature in last Monday's Collegian. If you are afraid you will miss out on the results of the tournament because the Collegian thought it was too unimportant, don't worry, Sports Illustrated is covering it.

Of course, complaining won't change things. Being one of the top four college rugby teams in the nation for two or three years in a row will. So, if you are an athletically-inclined individual looking for some serious athletics, consider the facts about playing K-State rugby. You won't have cheerleaders, a band or Pridettes. You won't have eight coaches, funds from the athletic department, scholarships, equipment or uniforms given to you.

However, you will have a few dedicated and appreciated supporters, a great bunch of teammates, and the privilege to play on the most successful athletic team this University has produced in at least eight years.

Carry me back to old Virginny

I'm a girl without a state. Kansas doesn't want me and Virginia doesn't have me.

Three years ago I came to Kansas to live with my grandmother and attend K-State. Three years ago I left my home to set up residence in Kansas. Three years and I'm still not a real resident of Kansas.

Because I graduated from a Virginia high school and my parents live in Virginia, the University doesn't seem to want me. They want my money of course, they just don't want to accept me as a fellow Kansan.

My purpose here is not to gripe about the unfairness of my having to pay out-of-state tuition. Nor is my purpose to downgrade the University system. My purpose is to shed some light on the unfairness of that system.

ONE AND one-half years after I came to Kansas, I applied for residency-I was denied. The letter-received only two days after I had turned in my application-said: "After careful consideration..." you have been determined a non-resident for fee purposes.

Curious as to why I had been turned down, I called the Office of Admissions. To my dismay I learned that I could not be told why unless I appealed the decision. Though I didn't see the sense in that, I appealed. I met with the committee that hears residence appeals and was turned down. The fact that I intend to remain in Kansas upon graduation did not seem to make much of an impression on them.

Soon after this meeting I was once again turned down-again without knowing the reason.

FOUR MONTHS passed before I tried again, hoping this time the committee would see it my way. To shorten a long and involved story, my application went straight to the appeals committee, I met with them and I was turned down. The most intelligent question that was asked of me was "Where is Fredonia, Kansas (where I live with my grandmother)?"

The senselessness of this system boggles my mind.

I drive with a Kansas driver's lisence, I am registered to vote in Kansas (something that a nonresident can't do), I live with my grandmother (in Kansas), and my student loan is from a Kansas bank. The state seems to consider me a resident though the University does not. To top things off, in order to be employed with the Department of Housing I was required to swear an oath of allegience to this fine state.

This system should be investigated. Students who seem to meet all requirements are being denied their rights without a stated reason, while those who do not qualify have somehow circumvented the system.

If we were all to be determined residents, simply by the location of the high school from which we graduated, things would be a lot different. I should not be penalized because I went to high school in Virginia. I love the state, I was born there and it will always have a place in my heart. I imagine many "Kansans" have a special love for a state other than this one.

If the University is allowed to deny residency without giving a reason, will we soon be putting persons in jail without due process of law?

I wonder

Forestry department dispute upsets students

Editor's note: Students interviewed for this story requested their actual names not be used because of the possibility their input into the article could negatively affect their grades.

> By DEBRA GRABER Staff Writer

One man calls it "the greatest tragedy I've seen in a university setting;" another terms it "a lonesome fight."

Both are leading characters in an innerdepartmental drama. And both are more than a little saddened by the politics they must play.

The first is Tom Warner, assistant professor of forestry; the other is Ben Mahaffey, associate professor of forestry. They are embroiled in a bitter and complicated controversy about faculty teacher evaluations and the salary increases based on the evaluations.

Their students involved say that above all, they are tired of the tension and bickering within the department. Many say simply that they want it to be over.

THE TENSION has increased during the last 21/2 years. Mahaffey filed a grievance in 1979 over his 1978 teaching evaluation because he believed the evaluation and the way it was conducted was unfair. He also claimed an unfair pay increase based on that evaluation.

The grievance was filed against Harold Gallaher, who recently retired as head of the Department of Forestry, and David Mugler, then associate dean of the College of Agriculture.

The results of his first grievance were never released, because contents of hearings are confidential unless the grievant approves its release.

On Feb. 1, 1979, Warner replaced Mahaffey as teaching program leader in the natural resource management curriculum, a position that involves no extra money or teaching duties but does involve making teaching evaluations. As department head, Gallaher made this replacement and was responsible for recommendations on merit increases.

MAHAFFEY'S 1979 evaluation upset him and he filed a grievance against Warner and Gallaher. Mahaffey released the results of that hearing, in which the General Faculty Grievance Board ruled against him in four of his six grievances. He filed a third grievance March 18, claiming he received an unfair 1980 teaching evaluation and unfair merit increase based on that grievance will be May 8.

Grievances continue to incite tension

Mahaffey has claimed he is harassed by his colleagues and that personal differences resulted in low cooperation ratings and a zero percent salary merit increase.

Administrators are using the effects of his grievances to discriminate against him, Mahaffey said.

"If a man files a grievance and it causes a disruption, if it embarrasses people, they can't use those happenings to downgrade him in subsequent years," he said. "That's a civil rights violation."

HE SAID WARNER received a 28.8 percent increase over the last two years. He says he would have gotten a portion of the money had he not been unfairly evaluated.

Gallaher has defended Warner's increase stating there are other instructors with no increases within the department and some instructors with increases of more than 20 percent.

"It's not that I'm incompetent. I have a good track record," Mahaffey said.

"They claim that I intimidate students and that my cooperation and faculty interaction are poor," he said. "I got a zero merit increase two out of three years." He said the evaluations have been incorrect.

"What matters is political favoritism, obeisance to selective administrators," he Warner said Mahaffey isn't harassed and stands behind his evaluations.

"I believe I've worked to try to help Dr. Mahaffey in regard to his assignment within the department," Warner said. "Harold Gallaher and Carroll Hess (former head of the College of Agriculture) counseled with Ben in regards to his performance. I don't think that counseling has done much good.

"I will be the first to admit that Dr. Mahaffey has talent, but there are certain areas of his performance that I simply have to put him less than acceptable," Warner said. "Everything in my evaluation is supportable; documentation is my only defense."

STUDENTS ARE divided on the issue. Some side with Warner or Mahaffey and others said they are "in the middle of the road." The upperclassmen speculate that evaluation. The hearing for his third many freshmen and sophomores don't know what's going on.

Those who are involved are angry or simply tired.

"We're getting ripped off because of those guys' conflicts and beliefs," said Kim, an upperclassman. "They can get another job. We suffer from their petty grievances. It ticks me off."

Some students have complained about Mahaffey's performance in class, saying he is domineering and dogmatic.

One student said that after a class under Mahaffey, "I didn't even want to learn anymore."

Others say Mahaffey is an excellent in-

"He's got a spark most teachers don't have," Kim said. "But he's in a political situation that's dragged the curriculum down and dragged the department down."

MAHAFFEY VIEWS complaints as a natural part of teaching.

"They said I called a student 'dumb.' I never called a student dumb in my life," he said. "Student complaints are as normal as those Sears gets for business, but if they're used against teachers, they can force professors to give high grades.'

Some students said they have been disadvantaged because of the time the men spent writing defenses for grievance hearings.

"I don't think we're getting as much out of their classes as we should be," Jay, another upperclassmen, said. "If something drastic doesn't happen within the department, I think it'll disintegrate. The new students coming in can tell right away that things aren't right between those two.'

ONE STUDENT describes chance meetings between Mahaffey and Warner as "extremely formal." "It's uncomfortable if you're in one of their offices and the other walks by."

Susan, an upperclassman, said she believes she is in the middle and suffers because of it.

"I don't know who to complain to. We don't know who to turn to because there's enough tension already in the department," she said.

Warner agrees with students that there has been "a serious negative impact" on the curriculum.

"I feel we've lost students. Student enrollment is down...I feel we've had students leave the program without even saying anything. They just pick up their folders and go. It's one big mess," he said.

AS FOR HIS relationship with Mahaffey, Warner said, "Ben and I communicate professionally. I can't say we smile and joke around...I feel I'm courteous to Ben and that he's reasonably courteous to me."

Faculty members are deeply concerned about the dissension in the natural resource management curriculum, according to William Moyer, assistant professor of

"It concerns us all that one person can tie up the valuable time of an administrator when there are more important things to be done," Moyer said. "I feel a grievance is an important aspect. But once the grievance runs its course, I think we need to get on to bigger and better things and not go on to more and more grievances.

MOYER SAID he expects the issue to

"You can expect 10 to 20 grievances over the next 10 to 20 years," he said. "He'll file whenever he can."

Another assistant professor in forestry, Keith Lynch, said the tension has made faculty members more defensive and more careful about documenting details.

"They're more careful about getting things down in writing in case they're involved in a grievance so they'll have a paper trail to prove what they have or have not done," he said.

Lynch said the department is reevaluating the faculty evaluation form, which originally was designed by Mahaffey. The form has been modified once at Mahaffey's request.

"It's my understanding that he's not happy with it, so we're looking at it now to

FACULTY MEMBERS rarely mention the tensions in class, Lynch said, unless a student asks about them. He said students do come into his office to discuss the

"The question they ask me is, 'When is there going to be a solution to the problem? When is the bickering to stop?'

"Primarily, the thing they ask is, 'What can be done to solve the problem?' Unfortunately, I really don't have the answer. I don't know when the problem will be solved or if it'll ever be solved. I think this has dragged on too long without a solution."

Students say Mahaffey used the grievances as examples in an administration class he taught and Warner rarely mentions the tensions in class.

Poland celebrates Constitution Day

WARSAW, Poland (AP) - With the unprecedented backing of the communist government, hundreds of thousands of Poles joined in colorful ceremonies Sunday marking the anniversary of the 1791 democratic constitution, an important symbol of Polish independence.

"For the first time in 35 years we are celebrating in the whole of Poland the 190th anniversary of the constitution," said staterun Warsaw Television. Ceremonies took place in dozens of cities, and in Warsaw, the Sejm-or Parliament-was opened to the public.

Also celebrated Sunday was the Feast of the Virgin Mary, Queen of Poland. In Czestochowa, 300,000 Roman Catholics thundered "We Want God" and joined in an outdoor Mass at the monastery of Jasna Gora, home of Poland's holiest shrine, the portrait of Our Lady of Czestochowa.

In the audience was union leader Lech Walesa, whose Solidarity labor federation championed the reforms that made Constitution Day ceremonies possible.

The constitution was overturned two years after its adoption when Poland was partitioned. But the document inspired generations of Polish nationalists, and Constitution Day was a state holiday between the two World Wars.

The communists, who took power after World War II, ignored the observance, regarding it as a relic of the bourgeois past. But it was kept alive by dissidents and the Roman Catholic Church, which claims as members 90 percent of Poland's 35 million

Farmers live daily with change

K-State will study stress in farm families

Collegian Reporter

Research on methods farm families use to cope with the stress involved in transferring farm property from generation to generation will begin this summer at K-

Candyce Russell, associate professor of family and child development, said she believes one of the most stressful periods for the farm family is during the decisionmaking process to decide who, if anyone, is going to continue the family farm.

'Research in other states shows that there is a lot of stress associated with family differences of any kind, but stress associated with farm families seems to be even higher," Russell said.

Although the research will be funded by the Agricultural Experiment Station, the exact cost has not been determined. Families from 18 northeast Kansas counties will be interviewed for the program. The results will give extension agents information to help them run workshops on transferring farm property.

RUSSELL IS now preparing inventory

By CONNIE CLOWE sheets and checklists that will be used in the study. She is also gathering names of people who are in the process of transferring farm property and who would be willing to be interviewed by agriculture and home economics extension agents and employees of the Farm Management Association.

At least two hours will be spent with each family, interviewing the parent generation, the farming child generation and any nonfarming siblings.

'Some families, facing big challenges, with limited resources are able to do a tremendous job," Russell said. "If we could understand how those families are able to draw from their own interpersonal and community resources and do a good job of coping, then perhaps these open strategies can be taught to other families that are under similar stresses."

BECAUSE MANY farms operate with close personal contact between two or more generations, differences of opinion can arise. Therefore, the ability to manage stress becomes a valuable resource in farm

"We think it is important to know the amount of stress that is associated with the transfer process, because it is likely to be associated with the psychological well-being of the family members," Russell said.

In some farm families with several siblings and limited acreage, the issue of farm transfer is "really quite critical," she

"There is a variety of ways that people go about making a decision, ranging from informal to very formal ways," Russell

SOME FAMILIES will discuss it as the children grow up, while in other families any talk about the issue is forbidden. Occasionally, a family will decide to gradually transfer the property by making it into a corporation, where the siblings buy shares as they can afford them, she said.

Some siblings will enter a partnership with their parents, grandparents or in-laws, while in other families the parents will give part of their land to the child to start a farm of his own, Russell said. In some cases, family members in a younger generation will leave the farm to work in another occupation, fully expecting to come back after the parents retire, Russell said.

We want to find out if this sort of formal legalistic way of transferring property is associated with more or less stress than an informal method, such as a handshake saying when the father retires the farm will be yours," she said.

RUSSELL SAID she is also interested in how the farm child who moves to another environment, handles the transition and establishes a support network for himself.

This could develop stress within the child because often children who live on a farm develop an identity with the farm and a lifestyle that allows a lot of independence," Russell said.

Many of the findings of the study will depend on factors such as how large the farm is, how many children are involved, if the children have been exposed to other occupations, and have had the opportunity to voice their opinion and make their own choices, she said.

Begin says U.S. efforts fail to cool Mid-East crisis

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin said Sunday that U.S. efforts to defuse the Israeli-Syrian crisis have made no progress. He also said Syria probably has moved anti-aircraft missiles into Lebanon and called it a "very grave development."

Begin spoke in an Israel Radio interview during a break in a five-hour cabinet meeting where he reported on the Lebanese situation along with Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir and the military chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan.

Asked if there had been any progress toward a solution, Begin replied, "No, not yet at all." He said the U.S. ambassador in Syria had not been able to speak with President Hafez Assad and had been relegated to dealing with officials in the Syrian Foreign Ministry

Last week Israel and Syria edged toward war in a conflict of interests over eastern Lebanon, where Israel's Christian allies are besieged by Syrian forces. Israeli jets shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships in the area last Tuesday and the next day Syria moved antiaircraft missiles into the region to block Israeli air superiority, witnesses said.

Begin, apparently leaving Syria a graceful exit, said Thursday that Israel had no official confirmation of the missiles' existence, even though they were seen and photographed by Western journalists. But on Sunday he guardedly admitted the missiles' presence when the radio interviewer queried him.

"We still are checking, but probably there are such missiles," Begin said.

The escalation over Lebanon alarmed the United States, and Washington moved on the diplomatic front to calm the situation. The Soviet Union was urged to work with Syria, and the U.S. ambassador in Israel, Samuel Lewis, emphasized in meetings with Begin the need for political solutions rather than military action, U.S. officials said.

Syrian troops in Lebanon "came as a peacekeeping force but they wage cruel war, killing men, women and children....They should have left long ago," the Israeli leader told the radio interviewer

Heading for covert...Huntmaster Lt. Col Norman "Sam" Hines and the comprising the field watch from a nearby hill. hounds head for the next covert, or area to be hunted, while the riders hounds are bigger and more obedient than the American fox hounds, Sam said.

The hunting hound can lock a scent in his brain and retain it, Sam said. For this reason, when a hound is young it will be allowed to play with coyote and fox paws.

During the hunt, the hounds catch the line, or scent of the quarry-a fox or coyote-and follow it, he said.

If they lose the scent, all the hounds circle in a cloverleaf pattern and search for the scent by "checking" the ground. If a hound has his nose to the ground and his tail is wagging, he is checking, Sam said.

BECAUSE IT has been so dry lately, the hounds couldn't "get the scent up," on Sunday, Susan said. There needs to be moisture in the air to hold the scent, Sam

Although the hounds were successful in finding the scent of a deer and a coyote, they couldn't hold the line of the coyote and "we don't hunt deer," Sam said.

When the hounds got on the line of the deer Sam blew the signal on his horn for the hounds to return.

The hounds are part of the first of three groups involved in a fox hunt. The huntsman, who is responsible for controlling the hounds, is also in the staff, or the first group.

The whips, who assist the huntsman in controlling the hounds, are also part of the first group. They carry whips and as a visual indicator, wear a spare stirrup strap across their chest. Although there is a minimum of four whips used, the total number depends on the area of the hunt and the conduct of the hounds being used, Ken Kuster, subscriber (civilian member) of the Fort Leavenworth Hunt, said.

THE HONORARY kennel huntsman who takes care of the hounds is also a member of the first group, Sam said.

The second group, or the field, is led by the field master.

The field riders follow the hounds and the field master while hunting. There are two types of field riders-those with their "colors" and those without, Sam said. The colors are fabric covering the hunting coat's collar, he said.

A rider is awarded his colors after he has demonstrated the ability and knowledge of a journeyman foxhunter, Sam said. This is normally after about two years of membership. Those with colors ride at the front of the field, directly behind the field master.

Men who have been awarded their colors are only allowed to wear them on the collar of what is known as a pink coat, Sam explained.

Women and juniors (riders under the age of 18) who have been awarded their colors, wear them on the collar of a black coat. Men who have not been awarded their colors also wear a black coat, he said.

THE THIRD GROUP is the hilltoppers. They can wear anything they want and can ride anywhere they want. This group usually contains two types of riders—those who want to learn about the hunt and those who want to watch for enjoyment, Sam said.

The clothes worn by the riders are functional, as well as traditional, Sam said.

He explained the heavy coat is for warmth because the main hunting season is from October to April.

Along with the coat, the rider wears English riding boots to protect him from scratches and tears.

The shirt is white and without a collar. Instead of a collar, each rider wears a stock tie. This tailored white scarf, which is wrapped around the neck and secured with pin, can serve as a sling or bandage if a rider or horse is injured during the hunt, Kuster said.

Other traditional parts of the hunt originated from the British style of fox hunting which began in the United States in the mid-1600s, Sam said. Two of these are the stirrup cup and the blessing of the hounds, Sam said.

The stirrup cup is a small drink, usually sherry, served to the riders before the hunt begins, Sam said.

During the hound blessing a priest actually blesses the hounds before the hunt K-Staters.

Speaker urges women to plan for successful executive careers

By KAREN FRANKLIN Collegian Reporter

The most successful people in corporate America are persons who carefully plan their careers and "women are much less prone to plan than men," according to Helen McLane.

McLane is vice president of Heidrick Struggles, Chicago, a firm which specializes in finding persons for management positions of other firms.

She spoke Friday in the Union to about 50 people at the noon luncheon of the midwest regional meeting of Women in Communications Inc. (WICI).

McLane, author of "Selecting, Developing and Retaining Women Executives," said individuals who plan are "more satisfied with their work than people who have not planned."

In the past, there has been little reason for women to plan because the career choices were so few, she said.

"It's a different ballgame today, and that's why I'm delighted to note that increasingly younger, better educated and more highly paid women are planners, just as their peer group on the male side are," she said.

IN THE EXECUTIVE marketplace today, standards for men and women are more stringent than ever before, McLane said.

For today's women, selection, appraisal and reward systems in business are more objective than they were a few years ago, she said.

"Part of this is the consequence of government regulations; part of it is simply the enlightenment that has occurred as management, which are under intense pressure for competition, has discerned that yes, it is possible to identify women executives who can make a meaningful contribution," McLane said.

The movement of women into the upper levels of management is an "irreversible trend," she said. Organizations are looking for persons with above-average intelligence and emotional maturity.

Organizations also are looking for people with "personal integrity," she said, because the government has become increasingly concerned with the actions of business organizations. Corporate America has become more aware of the irreparable harm of people at any level of business who do not have a conscience, McLane said.

SHE SAID she "hates to admit it," but persons in her firm say job applicants who fabricate degrees, work history and awards are a problem.

However, "Our clients are not concerned with whether or not people have an undergraduate or master's degree. They are only interested in the quality of an individual," McLane said.

The comfort level of a job—how she gets along with others in the office and the physical environment of the office—is an important consideration for women, she said

Personal recognition is more important to men, and they are "obviously" interested in more money, McLane said. Men are always ready to move up to the next job because they know they've mastered the previous one, she said.

Generally, women are never ready to move on, no matter how many years they've been on a job, McLane said.

In an organization, people "must seek out and win sponsorship from people who are in key positions" in order to succeed.

Women facing bigger challenges and going further than ever in management, will be the topic of Tuesday's business seminar at the University Ramada Inn, "Women in Management, The Challenge of the '80s."

"The conflicting problems and personal difficulties facing women in management in a male-dominated society pose a challenge to the business women of today," Kim Olson, senior in office administration, said.

Olson, Judy Eilert and Marilyn Ludwig, seniors in accounting, are coordinating the seminar to fulfill a requirement in their Business Policy class.

The seminar is designed for managers or owners of small businesses, or women who want to advance their business careers. It will provide guidelines on how to succeed in business, Olson said.

"The seminar is designed to analyze the problems that women are faced with and to discuss possible solutions and alternatives," Olson said.

The guest speakers will be Sandy Coyner, director of Women's Studies at K-State, who will speak on "Combatting Sexism and Sexual Harassment in Employment." Jan

Dry blood liquifies as believers pray for annual 'miracle'

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Dried blood said to be from the fourth century martyr St. Januarius liquefied Sunday, church officials said, a day later than legend says the "miracle" is supposed to happen.

Thousands of believers anticipating the liquefication prayed in vain in St. Clara's Basilica on Saturday. They returned Sunday, and, after prayers, the blood liquefied.

Many Neopolitans believe bits of dried blood of their patron saint, kept in two vials, are supposed to liquefy on the first Saturday of every May, marking the day the saint's body was transferred to the city, and each Sept. 19, the day he was martyred in the year 305.

The church has not classified the liquefication as a true miracle, and some contend the warmth of the people in the church or the heat from candles causes it.

Fedderson, national accounts manager for the sales division of Adolph Coors Co., will speak on "How to Succeed in a Male-Dominated Field." Judy Doyen, travel agent and tour agency owner, will deliver a speech, "Hats off to Sucess." Julie Strecker, owner of Contemporary Interiors of Manhattan, will speak on "Parenting—a Business"; and Paula Welch, customer services supervisor for Southwestern Bell, will speak on "Management Careers by Plan-Not Compromise."

The conference is being co-sponsored by the College of Business Adminstration, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and the Small Business Administration.

There is a $20 registration fee, which will include refreshments and lunch. Registration begins at 8 a.m. Tuesday.

Legislature reconvenes in overtime session

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Legislature, which caved in to frustration and fatigue Saturday night, reconvenes Monday morning in an effort to mend a deep chasm over school property tax relief which has its roots more in political strategy than in any philosophy.

The legislative express seemed headed for adjournment Saturday, but derailed a little before midnight.

Senate and House Republicans could not agree whether it would be better to give property taxpayers some relief this year—to salve the sting of no new tax revenue being available—or to wait until 1982 when House members are up for re-election and tax relief may do them more good with the voters.

The Senate reconvenes at 9 a.m. Monday and the House at 10 a.m. However, House members of both parties will reassemble for party caucuses at 9 a.m.

THE HOUSE recessed at 11:16 p.m. Saturday and the Senate quit at 11:19 p.m. Both houses had decided to throw in the towel three hours earlier, then made one last stab at reaching compromise on the amount of new money, if any, to put into school finance to hold down next fall's property tax increases.

As the lawmakers resume in the third overtime day of the 1981 session, which had been scheduled for adjournment last Friday night, there is little to indicate compromise will come quickly.

Most Senate Republicans want to hold firm for putting $16 million more state money into school aid—reducing the projected property tax increases statewide next fall from $43.8 million to $21 million. Senate, House dispute property tax relief

Most Senate Democrats support that approach.

A MAJORITY of House Republicans don't want to put any more money into funding schools, contending the Legislature should sit on a projected $162 million general fund balance because of the uncertainty of federal budget cuts, the economy and even bigger property tax increases foreseen next year.

House Democrats support the Senate GOP's $16 million proposal.

"We would like to have significant property tax relief," said Sen. Paul Hess, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

"It seems to me a reasonable approach is to get somewhere in the middle—10 or 12 or eight (million dollars) or some more middleground figure. We've been realistic throughout this thing. I don't think the House has."

ASKED WHAT HOUSE Republicans' top figure is, Chairman Mike Hayden of the House Ways and Means Committee, replied, "It's low. We had a heck of a lot of votes in our caucus for nothing. I couldn't even sell $5 million."

"I don't think the House is going to budge," said Speaker Wendell Lady (R-Overland Park) who opposes putting more money into school finance, on grounds the large balance was achieved by cutting programs which needed the money and to now give it away on tax relief is wrong.

"All bets, all agreements are off," House Minority Leader Fred Weaver (D-Baxter Springs) said. "We're coming back with our original proposal for tax relief."

That means some kind of attempt to resurrect the severance tax, but there still is virtually no realistic hope of getting it through the Senate. Nobody seriously believes the proposal will make an 11th hour comeback.

THE PROPERTY TAX issue is political, of course.

Senate Republicans want to put as much money as possible into holding down property taxes to blunt public criticism because they refused to pass Gov. John Carlin's severance tax proposal—which would have raised $80 million for school finance and reduced property taxes.

House Republicans feel they can get better political mileage by spreading around any extra money next session—when they run for re-election.

Whatever happens, Carlin told a Saturday night news conference, the amount of tax relief will constitute a small bandage on a large wound. "I certainly can accept and live with it if they agree to $5 million or $8 million, but that's not going to be that much of a factor," he said.

CARLIN SAID there is no "good response" left after the Legislature's "irresponsible failure to pass the severance tax."

He finally conceded he knew that plan was dead when the Senate refused Thursday to adopt a resolution to permit debate and a vote on a new bill submitted by Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger (D-Kansas City)

There are other matters still to be addressed.

The omnibus appropriations bill into which the Senate is trying to insert the school finance money also contains authorization for the state's universities to spend funds which a 22 percent student tuition already approved by the Board of Regents would generate.

The House is insisting that the schools be allowed to spend just the $6.4 million a 15 percent tuition increase would produce, while the Senate wants to let them also spend the $2.6 million the additional seven percent hike would bring in.

The Senate had agreed to the House position, but as Weaver said, all bets are now off.

KC marchers oppose military policies

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — About 85 people marched through a primarily black section of midtown Kansas City on Sunday to protest President Reagan's proposed cuts in domestic social programs and U.S. military involvement in El Salvador.

The protesters, most of them young and white carried signs that read "No More Racist Attacks," and "U.S. Guns Kill U.S.

The Kansas City march coincided with similar protests in Washington, D.C., Seattle and San Francisco.

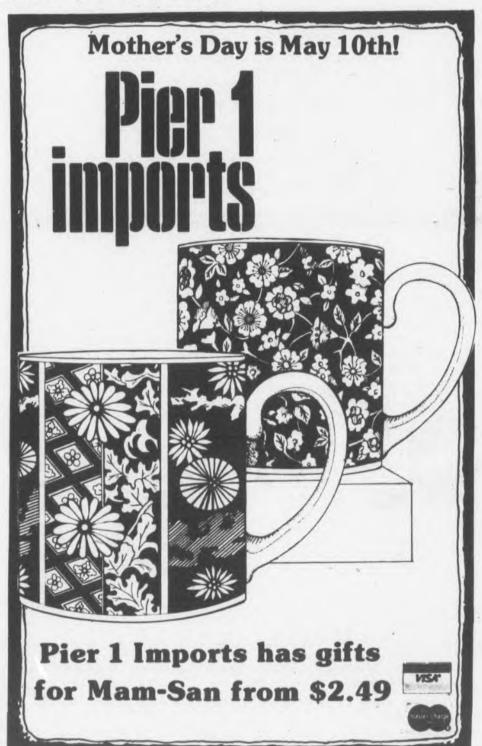

"The massive war spending dumps money but not goods into the economy—a classic definition of inflation," said Lenny Harold, one of the organizers of the Kansas City demonstration."

Harold said marchers decided to walk through a primarily black area of the city "to demonstrate the anti-racist focus of the

At the end of the route, the protesters listened to Joseph Smith of the United League of Northern Mississippi. The civil rights veteran called Reagan a "warmongerer," and pictured the United States as "a bully that believes in bulldozing people around."

Sports Lytle sets mark in K-State's win

Collegian Reporter Both the K-State men's and women's track squads were victorious Saturday at R.V. Christian track, but they came in different fashion.

The men's portion, called the Sunflower Classic with state schools K-State, Kansas and Wichita State competing, was won by K-State with 80 points. The Wildcats upset favored KU, which finished with 74 points, but not until a bit of controversy pertaining to the team scoring was straightened out.

With only two events left, it looked as if Kansas had the meet locked up, but there was a problem with the overall team point totals.

The problem was centered around the large number of entrants competing unattached in the javelin. It left some confusion as to whether K-State's Joe Bramlage, who finished sixth with a throw of 227-0, should have been awarded five points for first place. The top five finishers were competing unattached.

ACCORDING TO K-STATE men's coach Mike Ross, athletes competing unattached are not included in the point totals. This gave K-State a much-needed five points for Bramlage's victory, and was possibly the key to the Wildcats' first win over KU on the track in several years.

Although Kansas won the final event—the mile relay-K-State still finished six points better than its intra-state rival. Wichita State was a distant third with 37 points.

The top performance of the meet easily belonged to K-State freshman pole vaulter Doug Lytle. Lytle stole the show when he cleared 17-5 on his third and final attempt, breaking his own previous school record of 17-0 and also breaking former KU standout Terry Porter's track record of 17-4 set in 1974.

"I wasn't really all that surprised about the vault," Lytle said. "I've done it in practice quite a few times. This outdoor season I've been in a big slump and I was hoping I would have a good day.

"I'm just happy to see that I'm finally improving. The whole outdoor season has been disappointing to me. I set a goal of 17-8 for this season and I'll just have to improve at the Big 8 outdoor in two weeks."

THERE WERE NO other R.V. Christian track records set Saturday, but KU's Kevin Graham tied teammate Joel Light's 1980 high jump mark of 7-0. K-State's Steve Cotton tied Light and Paul Titus of Kansas for second place, all of them clearing 6-10.

Besides Lytle's first place finish, K-State also picked up golds from Ray Bradley in Try, try again...After two unsuccessful attempts at 17-5, Doug Lytle, freshman in construction science, cleared the height on his third vault. With this vault, Lytle broke the school record, set at 17 feet, and the

R.V. Christian Track record. The track record for the pole vault was 17-4, set by Terry Porter of Kansas in the shot put (60-10 ½); Mark Smith in the triple jump (49-11 ¾); Brian Howie in the 110-high hurdles (14.3); Dan Schleicher in the 5,000-meter run (14:56.7); and the 440 relay team (41.3).

"We had great efforts in the 400 meters from Mike Bradley and Steve Wright, along with Dan Schleicher and Rick McKean in the 5,000," Ross said. "Also, our 400-meter relay team ran well. We competed as tough as we ever have on the track Saturday. The times weren't all that great, but head-tohead we received great efforts from everybody."

ON THE WOMEN'S side, K-State had four first place finishes along with nine se to easily win the meet with 161 points. Kansas finished second with 94, Iowa State by Larry Bird's 23 points, completed their remarkable playoff comeback Sunday by wiping out an 11-point second-half deficit and beating the Philadelphia 76ers 91-90 to move into the National Basketball Association's championship series against the Houston Rockets.

Bird rallies Celtics from behind for 91-90 win

The 76ers led 67-56 during the third quarter and still clung to an 89-82 advantage with 5:23 left in the intensely physical seventh game of the Eastern Conference finals. But Boston scored nine straight points, the last four by Bird, while holding Philadelphia scoreless for 4:54.

Bird, the 1980 rookie of the year, then came back with a 15-foot bank shot from the left side for a 91-89 lead with 1:03 to play.

Following a pair of turnovers, Philadelphia had a 3-on-1 fastbreak, and Maurice Cheeks was fouled by Gerald Henderson with 21 seconds on the clock. He made just one of two free throws to leave Philadelphia trailing by one.

M.L. Carr missed a 20-footer for Boston, and Philadelphia's Bobby Jones gathered in the rebound and called time out with one second left. Jones' inbounds paas bounced

As the final buzzer sounded, more than 1,000 spectators from the capacity crowd of 18,276 at Boston Garden poured onto the famous parquet floor in a jubilant celebration.

By winning, the Celtics became only the fourth team in NBA history to capture a best-of-seven playoff series after falling behind 3-1. The others were the 1968 Boston Celtics, 1970 Los Angeles Lakers and 1979 Washington Bullets-all of whom also did it in the semifinal round.

Of the three previous comeback clubs, only the 1968 Celtics-who also beat Philadelphia in the semis-went on to take Nate Archibald sank two, center Robert off the top of the backboard, and the Celtics the title. The current Celtics are hoping to match that and win the 14th championship in the history of the tradition-steeped franchise when they take on the Rockets in the finals, which opens here Tuesday night.

It was an intensely physical game, but one in which referees Darell Garretson and Jake O'Donnell elected to call relatively few fouls. There was much contact and bodies thrown to the floor with regularity, as the officials chose to let the two teams go at it.

Maxwell had 19 points for the Celtics, Parish finished with 16 and Archibald had 13. Darryl Dawkins scored 16 points for Philadelphia but was blanked in the final

Baseball team sweeps twinbill from Bearcats

By RON BROWN Collegian Reporter

On a windy Sunday, the K-State baseball team breezed to a doubleheader sweep against Northwest Missouri State at Frank Myers Field.

The Wildcats, who raised their record to 30-19, combined good hitting, pitching and defense to defeat the Bearcats by scores of 13-3 and 9-4. All in all, coach Dave Baker saw little to complain about.

"We made some mental mistakes," he said. "But we played well and hit the ball well and made things happen. We capitalized on their mistakes."

K-State could not have played the Bearcats at a better time, either. For the visitors, the games were anti-climatic, coming on the heels of twin losses Saturday to league rival Central Missouri State.

TAKING ADVANTAGE OF the situation, the Wildcats rapped out 26 base hits in the twinbill, 16 of them in the first game.

The big inning in that game was the sixth when 10 batters went to the plate and six of them scored. Three misplayed balls in the inning led to five unearned tallies.

Hitting stars were numerous, led by shortstop Antonio Triplett, who went 4-for-5, scored three times and knocked in a pair of runs. He also stole two bases, leaving him one shy of the school record of 19 set two years ago by Mark Nordyke. In addition, he has already eclipsed the single-season mark for runs scored.

First baseman Joe Goedert, who went into the game with a .408 average, proceeded to get three hits in five trips to the plate while scoring twice. In the game, he knocked in four runs to add to his team-leading total.

Hitting in the fourth position, third baseman Glynn Perry stayed hot at the plate, raising his average with a three-hit game.

RIGHT-HANDER MICKEY Fleeman, making his first start in two weeks, was the pitching star for the Wildcats. He allowed 10 hits—nine of them singles—while walking one and striking out five.

"Fleeman pitched a good ball game," Baker said. "It was his first outing in a while."

Singleton tops 'Cats in golf invitational

LuAnn Singleton shot a first-round 86 Friday and came back Saturday in the final round to shoot another 86 to finish with a 36-hole total of 172 to lead K-State's five-woman team in the Stephens College women's golf invitational in Columbia, Mo.

Other K-State scores were Julie Navrat (93-87-180), Rose Atkins (90-92-182), Nancy Hagen (92-97-189) and Becky Stromgen (100-93-193)

Another six-run inning carried K-State in the second game. After designated hitter Kent Schaede flied out to left field, a string of 10 consecutive batters reached base. By the time cacher Dan Linden made the third out, the Wildcats had collected three hits and six walks off of Bearcat pichers Glenn Walsh and Dan Wuebker.

Southpaw Greg Jones, 4-0, started and went the first four innings allowing three runs on five hits. He was relieved by Doug Able, who finished the game and picked up his first save. He gave up one run on five singles.

THE STRONG WIND blowing to left field throughout both games was not a factor until the fourth inning of the second game. In the top of the fourth inning, Bearcat left fielder Rick Leinen touched Jones for his third homer this season—a mammoth three-run clout to dead center field.

The Wildcats, not to be outdone, launched two of their own. Leading off the fourth inning, Perry hit a pitch to left field for his fourth round-tripper this season. It tied him with Goedert for the team lead in that department. Center fielder Rob Golden muscled up for the first time, sending a pitch beyond the left field fence with Linden aboard in the fifth inning.

The sweep boosted K-State to the 30-victory plateau for only the third time in its history. Still within reach is the school record for most wins in one season. With six games left this season, Baker's squad has its sights set on eclipsing the 35-19 record compiled in 1976.

K-State returns to action Tuesday afternoon when it hosts NAIA foe Emporia State in a doubleheader beginning at 1:30 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

Putnam's homer in 10th inning gives Texas 9-8 win over KC

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) - Pat Putnam clubbed a 10th-inning leadoff home run to cap a Texas comeback and give the Rangers a 9-8 victory over the Kansas City Royals Sunday night.

The homer was Putnam's second of the year and came on a 3-2 pitch from Kansas City reliever Juan Berenguer, 0-2. John Henry Johnson, 1-1, was the winner in relief, working 113 innings.

The Rangers, who led 3-0 early in the game against Kansas City starter Paul Splittorff, trailed 8-5 but erupted for three runs to tie the the game in the eighth inning. Johnny Grubb led off with a walk, and Jim Sundberg was safe on an error by third baseman Jamie Quirk.

Putnam doubled one run across, and Sundberg scored on Bill Stein's third hit of the game, a single. Putnam came home with the tying run on Bump Wills' single.

Texas starter Ferguson Jenkins was cruising along with a four-hitter and a 3-0 lead until the sixth, when Kansas City batted around, scoring seven times. Willie Wilson, John Wathan and Hal McRae opened with singles for the first run, Willie Aikens doubled Wathan across and Otis singled to bring McRae and Aikens home.

Otis stole second and scored on Frank White's single, then Cesar Geronimo homered to chase Jenkins.

Grubb had a two-run single for Texas in the first, and the Rangers scored again in the second on a sacrifice fly by Wills. After the Royals took an 8-3 lead on Otis' RBI single in the seventh, Texas came back with two in the bottom of the inning on Al Oliver's

Yankees 3-2, A's 2-0

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - Jim Spencer broke up a scoreless game with a seventhinning home run, his first of the season, and the New York Yankees defeated Oakland 2-0 for a doubleheader sweep which cooled off the A's Sunday.

The Yankees won the opener 3-2 on Jerry Mumphrey's 10th-inning leadoff homer, his third of the season, off Steve McCatty. Yankees relief pitcher Ron Davis, the winner, struck out the last five Oakland batters to end the game.

The A's took a 20-3 season record and a three-game winning streak into the doubleheader before a sellout crowd of 48,592, but they ran into excellent, and sometimes overpowering pitching.

In the first game, starter Rudy May and Davis combined for 14 strikeouts and walked none. In the nightcap, Tommy John, 4-1, went eight innings-plus before being relieved by Rich Gossage with nobody out in the ninth inning.

Padres 4-4, Mets 1-7

Rain postpones Houston Open: Streck remains 3 strokes ahead

HOUSTON (AP) - A heavy, steady rain and the forecast for heavy rains and severe flooded portions of the Woodlands Country thunderstorms later in the day, we had no Club course Sunday and forced a one-day postponement of the final round of the $350,000 Michelob-Houston Open Golf Tournament.

Weather permitting, the final round now is scheduled for Monday. The leaders, including pacesetter Ron Streck, have the last tee time, 11:08 a.m. CDT.

NBC executives decided not to provide live television coverage of the day late final

"The rains have made the course unplayable," said Clyde Mangum, Deputy Commissioner of the PGA Tour who is in charge of this event.

Some greens, tees and bunkers were flooded.

"The (weather) system is a large one," Mangum said. "With the present conditions, choice but to postpone."

The forecast called for slightly better conditions Monday but with the possibility of rain and thunderstorms continuing through

Under its contract, the tournament can continue through Tuesday. Should Monday's play be washed out, however, officials also have the option of cancelling the final 18 holes and ruling the tournament complete.

In that event, with only 54 holes finished, the purse would be reduced by 25 percent. Streck would be ruled the winner, and his first-place prize would be $47,250.

Streck, whose only previous victory came in the 1978 San Antonio-Texas Open, took command of this event Saturday with a nineunder-par 62 which matched the low score on the tour this season.

It wasn't much of a weekend for the K-State softball team as it traveled to Missouri and Nebraska for doubleheaders against Northwest Missouri State, Creighton and

The women dropped a doubleheader to Northwest Missouri State in Maryville on Friday by scores of 5-3 and 4-2, and in Omaha on Saturday the Wildcats suffered 6-1 and 3-0 losses to Creighton.

Sunday started out the same way for K-State as it journeyed to Lincoln to play Nebraska in a doubleheader. The Wildcats lost the first game 4-3.

But in the nightcap, the women struck for two runs in the first inning and made it stand the rest of the way, defeating Nebraska 2-1.

Singles by Tammie Totland, Taryn Bachis and Pam Rufener and a double by Julie Laughery in the first inning produced both of K-State's runs. Rufener and Laughery both got runs batted in, with Totland and Bachis scoring the runs.

Sherrie Johnston allowed only four hits in going the distance for K-State to get the win. In the opener on Sunday, Janel Anderson yielded only three hits, but it was too many. K-State could manage only three hits, too.

Nebraska scored the winning run in the fifth inning on three walks and a fielder's choice.

K-State got two of its runs in the first inning. With the bases loaded, Rufener hit a grounder to the infield, but the throw home was dropped by the catcher, allowing two runs to score.

Lack of hitting doomed K-State against Creighton, too. The Wildcats managed only four hits in the opener and two in the Here answersto often asked questions.

Answer:

DUESTION: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

> If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

> For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for

> If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

> If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country? for textbooks around the country?

> Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about peperbecks? Does the 80 per cent policy apply to them too?

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

JUESTION: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40. Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the

Soft-coal industry negotiator ready to discuss issues

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The chief negotiator for the soft-coal industry, B.R. Brown, said Sunday he's ready to return to the bargaining table to "discuss real issues" to bring about an end to the 39-day-old United Mine Workers strike.

"I'm prepared to negotiate at any time they put real negotiations on the table instead of a long list of demands," said Brown, head of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association and president of Consolidation Coal Co. "I see no swaps on their side."

Meanwhile, the coalfields were reported quiet Sunday, following reports of shootings at several parked coal trucks Saturday in Whitesburg, Ky., according to state police. There were no injuries, but damage was estimated at about $10,500, police said.

The UMW has attacked the BCOA for refusing to compromise after miners' rejection of a tentative agreement, but UMW spokesman Eldon Callen said Brown's statement Sunday appeared to be a softening of the BCOA's position.

"The last time we were at the table he didn't even allude that he would give," Callen said.

The UMW strike began March 27 when the old contract expired. The 160,000 UMW miners later rejected a tentative contract settlement.

An attempt to patch up the differences ended April 17 when both sides met briefly and talks broke off with each saying they were far apart on key issues. Each side has charged that the other is unwilling to bargain.

Some industry and union officials have speculated that talks are being delayed until after the May 12 elections for several UMW district posts.

Summer work scheduled for campus ramps

By STARR LEE Collegian Reporter

Many buildings and paths on campus will be accessible to handicapped students by the end of August because University Facilities is building ramps and curb cuts, according to Vince Cool, director of facilities planning.

See related story, p. 5

Twenty-seven campus buildings are slated to get ramps and doors, modified bathroom stalls, elevators and special elevator controls, according to a priority list established by the University Coordinating Committee for Handicapped Services. The students, faculty and administrators.

Renovations for handicapped students continue

Because of an increased work load for University Facilities and the delay in receiving building materials, about one-third of the committee is composed of 14

materials, about one-third of the renovations should be complete by the beginning of the fall 1981 semester, Cool said. Cool said no target date had been set for the rest of the renovations.

"We're more overloaded than in a number of years—with the moving around of all the people and classes to the new classroom buildings," Cool said.

THE RENOVATIONS are being made because Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 requires all schools receiving federal funds to make programs and classes accessible to all students, regardless of their physical handicap, or lose funding.

There are about 200 handicapped students at K-State, according to records of the Services for Students with Physical Limitations, Jane Rowlette, director, said. At least five students use wheelchairs.

The rules and procedures to implement the 1973 Act were not established until 1977, Cool said, so K-State didn't have the procedures to implement Section 504 until then.

Temporary, wooden ramps could have been built to make buildings accessible, but are "expensive, unsafe (and) need high maintenance," Cool said.

THE HANDICAPPED services committee agreed with University Facilities not to use the temporary ramps, but wait for permanent structures

"We decided to not do a Band-Aid approach first, so it has taken more time to implement," said Richard Ruch, chairman of the handicapped services committee.

"When funds were available, University Facilities recommended, and the Coordinating Committee for Handicapped Services agreed, that unless it was an urgent matter in a particular case, we shouldn't spend money on temporary structures requiring high maintenance," Cool said.

K-State has been making a "good-faith effort" in trying to conform to Section 504 as soon as

Death is expected to produce storm of violence

IRA guerrila dies after hunger strike

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Irish Republican Army guerrilla Bobby Sands died early Tuesday in the 66th day of his hunger strike at Belfast's Maze prison, the British Northern Ireland Office reported.

It said the 27-year-old Sands, who had campaigned from his jail cell and was elected to the British Parliament on April 9, died at 1:17 a.m. (7:17 p.m. CDT Monday) in the prison's hospital wing.

His death was expected to bring a new storm of violence to this British province, torn by a decade of bloody underground warfare between Roman Catholic and Protestant extremists.

Sands was the 13th Irish nationalist hunger striker to die in British jails this century and the first to perish in Northern Ireland.

THE NORTHERN Ireland Office issued a statement saying: "Mr. Robert Sands, a prisoner in the Maze prison, died today at 1:17. He took his own life by refusing food and medical intervention for 66 days."

Sands lapsed into a coma early Sunday and never regained consciousness.

His family had been at his bedside along with a Catholic priest.

Another hunger striker, Francis Hughes, 25, once the IRA's most wanted gunman, was in the 51st day of his fast and continued to deteriorate rapidly.

Hughes' brother, Oliver, 31, said after spending several hours at his bedside: "He is virtually unconscious and appears to be slipping in and out of a coma. The end can only be a short time away."

MOBS OF RIOTING Catholic youths had staged hit-and-run attacks against Belfast police and British troops with firebombs and acid-filled milk bottles Monday night as the emaciated Sands was sinking toward death.

Ignoring pleas for calm from Protestant and Catholic leaders, Sands' family and Irish nationalist activist Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, roaming gangs of up to 300 youths stoned police and troops throughout the day in the Falls Road section of West Belfast.

The area once was dubbed "ambush ally" by British soldiers and is the heart of Catholic militancy and Irish Republican Army sympathy.

Firebombs were hurled at police patrols in another Catholic area, the Short Strand, where there were two arrests. Police said mobs overturned and burned two trucks, and one policeman was injured.

Police fired plastic bullets to break up the gangs, but they quickly reformed on adjacent streets.

Outside the Divis Flats, a flashpoint along the slogan-painted Falls Road, youths built barricades across entrances and children shouted obscenities at police.

Because of fears of hijackings, city buses stayed out of the area, consisting mostly of city-owned rowhouses.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Here is a chronology of important dates in the hunger strike by Irish Republican Army guerrilla Bobby Sands at the Maze prison.

March 1 — Sands, 27, begins his hunger strike, demanding special status for IRA prisoners in Northern Ireland.

March 2 — IRA calls off 4½-year "dirty" protest at Maze prison in order to focus attention on Sands hunger strike.

March 5 — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher visits Northern Ireland and declares the province will remain part of Britain.

March 15 — Francis Hughes, 25, once the IRA's most wanted gunman, joins the hunger strike.

March 22 — IRA activists Raymond McCreesh and Patrick O'Hara, both 24, begin hunger strikes.

March 26 — Sands supporters announce he will run for the British Parliament in Northern Ireland's Fermanagh and South Tyrone constituency, where the incumbent's death caused a vacancy.

April 9 — Sands elected to Parliament, narrowly defeating Harry West, a Protestant hardliner.

April 18 — Sands is administered the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church.

April 19 — Thousands of Roman Catholics march in Belfast to mark the anniversary of the 1916 uprising in Dublin against British rule. April 22 — At a press conference Thatcher says, "There can be no question of political status for someone serving a sentence for crime. A crime is a crime is a crime."

April 23 — Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark and Roman Catholic priest Daniel Berrigan arrive in Belfast to see Sands but the British government rejects a meeting.

April 24 — Sands' family asks the European Commission of Human Rights to intervene to try to end the hunger strikes.

April 25 — Two members of the commission spend nine hours at the Maze prison but leave without seeing Sands. They said they had "established that Mr. Sands did not want to assosicate himself with the application made by his family."

April 30 — Magee returns to Rome, having failed to persuade Sands to give up hunger strike in three visits.

May 3 — Sands slips into a coma. His mother, Rosaleen, and Irish nationalist leader Bernadette Devlin McAliskey appeal to his supporters to remain calm.

May 4 — The European Parliament rejects an Irish plea for emergency debate on the hunger strike.

May 5 — Sands dies at 1:17 a.m. (7:17 p.m. Monday CDT), in the 66th day of his hunger strike.

possible, Ruch said, but it takes time to locate resources from the state or donors to finance the renovations.

"About half of the major colleges (nationwide) are in full compliance (with section 504) and the others (such as K-State) are still working towards that goal," he

IN FISCAL 1980, the state Legislature allocated $50,000 to the Board of Regents for K-State to make exterior renovations such as curb cuts and ramps for wheelchairs, Cool said.

"We are still using some of those funds," he said. "A good portion is for building an exterior ramp into Eisenhower Hall, which we hope to do this summer."

The Legislature appropriated $256,066 for interior and exterior renovations in fiscal 1981, Cool said. K-State has requested $101,775 for handicapped renovations next

A 500-plus page report was made in December 1977 that analyzed the work and materials needed to make all the paths and buildings on campus accessible. This was done by the University Facilities staff at a cost of "several thousand dollars," and was paid for from the University Facilities budget, Cool said.

THE REPORT described each building and path on campus and what renovations were needed to make the buildings accessible to handicapped students, Cool said.

Total cost of the interior and exterior renovations, classified by the staff as "urgent," "necessary" and "desirable" would have cost about $4 million. The average cost of a curb cut is $1,000, Cool said.

It has taken time to begin the renovations because University Facilities needed to complete the drawings so orders for materials could be placed, Cool said. About one-third of the plans have been completed.

"And we're waiting for materials to become available," he said. "We'd be very happy to get something like a toilet partition in a couple of months."

GETTING HADRWARE such as door locks that are keyed to the system take the longest, he added, often with a waiting period of 18 months to two years.

In 1979, a legislative committee was established to visit state schools and decide which of the "urgent" projects for which they would consider appropriating money, Cool said.

Last fall Cool asked the committee to establish a priority list for renovations because University Facilities didn't have the manpower and materials to complete all the tasks at the same time.

Besides the matter of money, interpretation of Section 504 has changed somewhat since the study was made, Cool said. Some of the modifications classified as "necessary" or "urgent," may not be considered as necessary now.

"I don't think the state is ever going to attempt to make all buildings on campus accessible as long as the programs are accessible," Cool said.

TO SAVE money and time, most of the work is being done by the in-house staff, Cool said. This way, University Facilities does not have to ask for bids and do the extra paperwork of contracting out for work.

All the buildings on campus that were built since the early 1960s have no obstacles to the physically handicapped, such as stairs to the entry ways, Cool said, though these buildings may not have the modified restrooms or special elevator buttons. The plans for buildings since the late '60s are in accordance with a state law requiring that all buildings on state property be accessible to the handicapped.

Dentists receptive toward plans for adding services at Lafene

The addition of dental care services to from the Conrad J.K. Eriksen and Dortha Lafene Student Health Center may be one step closer.

The Riley County Dental Society met last week to discuss the possibility of staffing a clinic at Lafene. Dr. Tom Barth, president of the society, said he got the impression from the meeting that the dentists are "more than willing" and "enthusiastic" about working with Lafene.

The final decision whether the dentists will work at Lafene will be made when the dental society meets again in the next couple of weeks, he said.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene, talked with Barth on Monday about the dental society's meeting.

Tout said the meeting didn't make him more optimistic about adding dental care to Lafene and he is currently only "laying the groundwork" for establishing a dental clinic

"The kind of service we will get will depend on the type of dentists" who agree to work at Lafene, Tout said. He said he doesn't "know what the dentists want to

The current plans call for dentists to work one or two afternoons each week at the clinic, performing dental evaluations, cleaning and some restoration work.

Barth said he also plans to meet with Tout; Michael Johnson, assistant to the president; and members of the Student Health Advisory Committee to discuss the possibility of the clinic.

Remodeling and equipping an office for dental care services would cost about $25,000, Tout said. The funds would come Eriksen, a former K-State instructor, donated the money to the University to buy equipment and remodel facilities for new medical services, Tout said.

Investigation of the possibility of adding dental care to services to Lafene came after a survey of about 300 students in November showed dental care was the most highly desired service not available at Lafene.

FTC includes carbon monoxide in cigarette content ratings

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Federal Trade Commission, for the first time Monday, ranked cigarettes according to how much carbon monoxide-labeled a major contibutor to heart and lung diseases and danger to unborn babies-they produce.

"The three most recent surgeon general's reports have suggested that carbon monoxide in cigarette smoke may be related to some of the most serious health consequences of smoking," the FTC said in a statement listing test results for 187 American cigarette brands. The report listed carbon monoxide and, as in previous years, tar and nicotine for each brand.

The report quoted the surgeon general's office as concluding that "carbon monoxide may interfere with fetal development, increase symptons in patients with heart and lung disease and contribute to hardening of the arteries."

Breathing carbon monoxide, a product of incomplete combustion, reduces the ability of blood to carry oxygen. For smokers, this occurs at the same time that inhaled nicotine is increasing the heart's oxygen needs, the surgeon general's office said.

"We have not done an analysis yet to determine just what is a low carbon monoxide cigarette and what is a high one," said Dee Ellison, an FTC spokeswoman.

Man to serve 3 years for threats

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A state prison inmate was sentenced to three years in federal prison Monday following his conviction last month on a charge of threatening the life of the president.

U.S. District Judge Dale Saffels ordered Kenneth Smith, 30, of Manhattan, to begin serving the federal term in 1985 after he completes a term in the state prison at Lansing on charges of assault with a deadly weapon and criminal damage to state property.

Smith allegedly made the threat against former President Jimmy Carter. Court records said Smith sent a letter to Carter in April 1980 telling the president he would kill him if he was not allowed to leave prison by 1981.

Kent State observes 1970 riot

KENT, Ohio — Memorials attended by some 1,200 students Monday quietly marked the 11th anniversary of the anti-war protest here that left four students dead from National Guard bullets May 4, 1970.

Classes at the northeastern Ohio campus were suspended from 11:50 a.m. to 2:15 p.m. to allow students to take part in ceremonies which included speeches by two actors from the television movie "Kent State," which aired on NBC in February.

The memorials were sponsored by the May 4th Task Force, a student organization. Unlike the 10th anniversary and earlier memorials, it was held without anti-war protests.

Most students who visited the site of the shootings were in junior high school when the four students were killed and nine others wounded by gunfire 11 years ago as they protested the Vietnam War.

About 600 people marched in the annual Candlelight Procession on Sunday night, sponsored by the Center for Peaceful Change. An all-night vigil at the site of the shootings followed.

April tornado death toll 'below normal'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — April, normally the cruelest month of the year for killer tornadoes, saw 13 persons killed by twisters this year across the nation—well below the normal figure of 36.

The deaths came in six tornadoes which occurred in Oklahoma, Missouri, Alabama and Wisconsin, according to a monthly tornado summary issued Monday by the National Severe Storms Forecast Center

Fred Ostby, director of the center, said 148 tornadoes were reported during the month, more than the normal figure of 98.

Oklahoma led the list with 25, followed by Iowa and Missouri with 24 each, Illinois with 20 and Texas with 13. The figures are preliminary, pending final confirmation.

Man seeks to eliminate last names

NORRISTOWN, Pa. — Joseph Lavarnway has been known by the last names of his mother, his great-aunt and his stepfather. Now he says he's had it, just "Joseph" is good enough.

The custom gunmaker from Hatboro has petitioned to have his name reduced to his given name, saying he doesn't believe he needs "a whole string of names following me around."

Born in 1938 in New Hampshire, Joseph was raised by a great-aunt until he was 6, then for the next 10 years by his mother and a step-father named Lavarnway, according to documents filed in Montgomery County Court. His mother's last name is on his birth certificate.

"When I first talked to my attorney about this, he thought I was kidding," said Joseph, whose petition will be considered by a judge June 8. "I just want to live on my own and I feel most comfortable with 'Joseph."

Florida governor dons police uniform

MIAMI — A dozen speeders on Interstate 95 in South Florida got tickets from a very high-level officer trainee—Gov. Bob Graham.

Graham has been a TV reporter, a construction worker and a teacher—among some 100 other jobs—during "workdays" begun during his 1978 campaign for governor. On Sunday, he wore a uniform and bulletproof vest for an eight-hour stint as a state trooper.

"When I said this is Governor Graham of Florida they were shocked," said Trooper Ken Edmonds, who accompanied the governor. "They didn't really have a whole lot to say but thank you."

"Nobody was rude or hostile," Graham said of the 12 people he and Edmonds ticketed. "In most cases they said, 'Nobody likes to get a ticket but I'm glad you're here."

Reviewing the Supreme Court?

Two bills recently introduced in Congress, if adopted, could have frightening implications for future Supreme Court decisions.

The Senate bill, introduced by Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) determines that human life begins at conception and that an unborn fetus is a "person" protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. The House bill, introduced by Rep. Henry Hyde, (R-Ill.), says essentially the same thing.

The issue here is not the definition of human life. Doctors, constitutional experts, theologians, and philosophers do not now, and will probably never, agree on when human life begins or how to legally define a "person." Nor is the issue ethical or moral acceptability of abortion. There will never be a consensus on this emotional issue.

The problem with the Helms-Hyde bill is that it presumes Congress has the authority to overrule Roe v. Wade, a 1973 Supreme Court decision, which held that a fetus cannot be considered a "person" and thus be entitled to Fourteenth Amendment rights.

The absurdity of this presumption is obvious in the history of constitutional law. The Supreme Court has the responsibility to "say what the law is" and to lay down "the supreme law of the land." Any attempt by Congress to review a Supreme Court decision is a serious threat to our system of constitutional government.

Constitutional lawyers and even former attorney generals of both parties have said that Congress may not constitutionally overrule the Supreme Court by enacting contradictory legislation. Now all Congress has to do is listen.

Coalition continued

Editor,

It is funny to see Student Senate refusing to fund the Coalition for Human Rights and the expression of hatred by some students, in the form of thanks to Senate for doing so. Senate has refused to respect and support human rights which call for justice and the abolition of inequality, racism and prejudice among people and between nations.

Student Senate defines human rights as the rights of the United States to maintain its claimed possessions in Southern Africa, South America, and other small countries, as regards extraction of resources for their economy without interference from the Soviet Union. The human rights issue is not capitalism vs. communism, rather it is capitalism enslaving others in their own land. The rights of indigenous people in these countries are not important to the senate because these people are regarded as non-human.

The Coalition for Human Rights originated from the provisions made in the meetings held with Provost Owen Koeppe before the visit of Ian Smith. Senate has shown a lack of respect for the University administration and a deaf ear to the proposition agreed upon by the provost and sanctioned by the president. We listened to Smith's speech on meritocracy, which explained oppressive attitudes as divine rights. Student Senate has supported these inhuman practices going on in South Africa and such support could be found in their symbolic refusal to fund a program which talks about these practices.

Apology extended

Editor,

My apologies to the K-State Nigerian students. Two of the DVM students called to my attention the error in the article of April 22, 1981, where I was misquoted about how the "Advanced Teachers College (ATC) trains students to live like the majority of Nigerian people—in inadequate housing facilities." At ATC home economics is just beginning and so far they have one classroom and one sewing laboratory. At the Ahmadu Bello University in Zaria, the extension home economics program in the College of Agriculture does have a unique

"home management" experience where the students live for two weeks in native housing and use the same type of equipment that many of the rural Nigerians have. On that campus there are two good home economics programs, one in the College of Education and one in the College of Agriculture. Their model village was an excellent example of the way students are taught to apply principles of good nutrition and home management in a real setting.

Taking it to the streets

It was new to many of the participants, routine to others and perhaps frightening to those who remember the violent demonstrations a little more than a decade ago.

To the nation, the approximately 25,000 protesters who converged on Washington Sunday to protest U.S. involvement in El Salvador and President Reagan's proposed budget cuts in social welfare programs, signalled they are not willing to assume a role of non-involvement.

The mass demonstration was formed by people throughout the nation. Few groups were left unrepresented. But as one chant ("Gay-straight, black-white, same struggle, same fight") declared, the message was uniform.

The demonstration was, by all definitions, peaceful. The protestors took time to eat, smoke marijuana, drink beer and get some sun—not exactly what you would call an uproar in a city with an incredible crime rate.

AT THE SAME TIME, just because it was peaceful, it should not be put aside as a group of crazy hippies trying to relive a past experience.

It's relationship to those demonstrations of the 1960s is perhaps minimal. The reasons for the demonstration are strikingly similar to those of the '60s.

The main thrust of the protest was the uprising in El Salvador. Since Reagan has taken office, the United States has sent 56 military advisers to the country and $25 million in aid to boost the junta that rules El Salvador, Deja vu.

Reagan has said that the Soviet Union is aiding the rebels in El Salvador, and Reagan is fearful that if El Salvador falls rebellion will spread to surrounding nations. Deja vu.

THE ADMINISTRATION has said that the aid given to El Salvador will be limited, not escalated in future months. Deja vu.

People from 18 to 22-years-old in America today are well versed on the problems of the Vietnam War. They may have been young at the time, but they saw the violence overseas and in the United States. They witnessed the grief of families of war victims.

They will not be tolerant of bellicose actions which threaten to engage America into another war—another Vietnam.

If the demonstration in Washington were an isolated incident, simply the work of effective organizers with a strong following, perhaps it could be ingnored.

However, while protesters marched on the Pentagon, rallies also were conducted in Seattle, San Francisco and Kansas City.

IN KANSAS CITY, as in Washington, approximately 85 demonstrators protested the war in El Salvador and Reagan's social welfare proposals, as well as the murdering of black children in

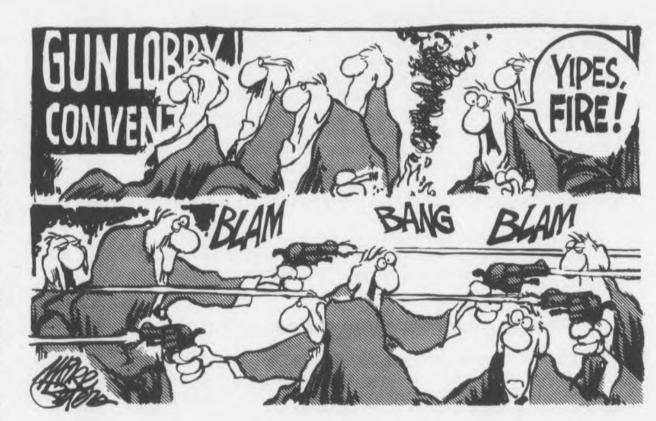

It could be argued that these demonstrators are leftist leftovers from the '60s who were just waiting for a cause to rally around again. Granted, various and sundry groups inevitably attach themselves to causes they do not believe in or have an interest in. To say this was the case in Washington, despite the variety of groups displayed, would be too simple an answer.

According to the Associated Press, many of the demonstrators interviewed said they were not protesting a single event of government policy, rather the entire state of affairs in the United States.

THIS IS more likely—a case in which the combined events of the last two or three years have triggered the desire and need to return to involvement.

Another key to the protest is that it was highly organized and well thought out. While individual participation in government supposedly can result in change, the demonstrators obviously recognize government doesn't change that quickly and responds faster to intensive lobbying efforts or revolutionary tactics.

During the Nixon administration there reportedly was a standing joke among FBI personnel which went: "Come the revolution save one bullet for John Ehrlichman and one for Bob Haldeman." Watch out Ehrlichman and Haldeman, the revolution may not be far away.

Wheelchair access to Holtz Hall limited by door

Administrative mixup hinders handicapped

Collegian Reporter

An administrative mixup has made it difficult for handicapped students to enter the building intended to serve them.

A misunderstanding between Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, and Vince Cool, director of facilities planning, has caused problems for students in wheelchairs entering Holtz Hall and the office of Services for Students with Physical Limitations.

Two years ago, new energy-efficient windows and doors were to be installed in Holtz by University Facilities. The double doors, at a cost of about $1,100, were to be installed on the east side. These doors required a vertical pole through the center to latch the door. These kind of doors have better insulation and provide more security, Cool said.

THE VERTICAL pole also makes it almost impossible for a person in a wheelchair to get in or out of the building because of the small width of the doors, said Mark Cowan, president of Students for Handicapped Concerns and senior in history education. The weight of the doors also causes problems for persons confined to wheelchairs.

Presently at least five people on campus use wheelchairs, according to Jane Rowlette, director of Services for Students with Physical Limitations.

"It's a breakdown of communication," said Steve Lee, junior in agriculture economics and member of the Coordinating Committee for Handicapped Services. "The administration spends thousands of dollars to make a place accessible and then put in these types of doors."

THE WORK ORDER for installation of the doors was stopped two years ago, Rowlette said, and a request for pneumatic sliding doors was submitted to University

Terrorists kill Spanish general

MADRID, Spain (AP) - Left-wing terrorists shot and killed a general and three policemen Monday, and four passers-by were wounded in a shootout between security forces and one of the assassins, authorities said.

Two gunmen of the Maoistline GRAPO killed the general and a policeman in Madrid, and 30 minutes later two other GRAPO militants killed two Civil Guards drinking coffee in Barcelona.

GRAPO stands for the First of October Autonomous Revolutionary Group and takes its name from the date it killed four policemen in Madrid in 1975. More than 30 killings have been blamed on GRAPO since

The twin attacks seemed certain to set off fresh unrest in the armed forces, angered over the government's plans to bring 45 military officers to trial for the abortive right-wing coup Feb. 23.

About four weeks ago, the wooden doors in Holtz were replaced by the doors requiring the vertical pole. Cool said he understood that Peters was moving the administrative offices, including the office of Services for Students with Physical Limitations, to a different building, and so he approved the

But Rowlette's office is not to be moved from Holtz. The new doors remain and Cool said University Facilities would try to get the pneumatic sliding doors installed by next fall, depending on how soon they can get the doors. The doors were approved to be ordered on today by Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities.

BECAUSE OF how Holtz's doorway is built, the pneumatic doors will have to swing in or out instead of sliding to the side.

The doors are "subject to abuse; maintenance is high, water and snow defeat its purpose" and the high wind in this area can easily damage the doors, Cool said.

"There will be times when the door will not be in operation," he said, "and it's harder to open them manually," because of the mechanical equipment in the doors and because they are heavier.

"There's a little bad in everything," Cool said about the disadvantages to pneumatic doors in Holtz.

HOLTZ HALL is not the only building with hindrances to the physically handicapped, Lee said. A visually handicapped person has trouble with the elevator in Farrell Library.

"A blind person has no idea which floor he's getting off on," Lee said.

Lee, who is blind and uses the library two or three times a week, has been working since January to get some type of raised numbers by the elevators in Farrell

"The money is there (has been appropriated in fiscal 1981 funds)," he said. "It could be solved fairly simply.'

Lee said several blind students use Farrell Library regularly.

"I attempted to put up labels, with Braille markings on it, by the controls on each floor," he said, "but they were either ripped off or fell off within a couple of days. It was only a temporary solution at best."

COOL SAID at this time there is no contract or work order for Braille numbering in Farrell, but he understood that some numbers had been put up by students.

Lee said the request for the library materials was written by some students

At the time of the order, "we did not have the material on hand to put up incised numbers," Cool said.

"I called them (University Facilities) in early April," Lee said, "and they said that it had been ordered only a few days before."

There are no raised numbers in Farrell at Controlled approach to studying for exams can alleviate end-of-the-semester stress

By JUDY KLEMM Collegian Reporter

4 a.m.—The table is hidden beneath a foot of books, papers and an overheated electric typewriter. An ashtray is again reaching its overflow stage while the coffee pot has been perking its stimulating brew for the past 72 hours. Personal hygiene becomes irrelevant as the body droops and the bags underneath the eyes assume lower levels.

The test schedule lying on the floor describes the gloomy outlook best. On it reads the caption, "Finals week."

According to those specializing in methods of coping with final week pressure, the scenario above is not conducive to good test results.

The stresses that accompany the end of a semester are something many college students experience. However, if students are aware of the pressures, there are steps which can be taken to relieve some of the

THERE ARE MANY ways for students to reduce the amount of stress they encounter during final exams. One method is not cramming for tests, Jonathan Lewis, assistant professor for student development, said. Cramming leads to stress because of the pressure to learn so much in a small amount of time, he said.

"Sometimes people will have to cram, but if you use it as a style of getting through college, at the end of four years you aren't going to have much to remember or retain," he said.

One urgent phone call sends them rushing through school, and are in many different to the ambulance, where flashing lights, blaring sirens and split-second decisions instantly become a way of life.

Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) are authorized by the state to provide basic life-support to victims of accidents, heart attacks and other medical emergencies.

The Riley County Ambulance service consists of 18 EMTs, 14 of whom are K-State students who work the night and weekend shifts, Terri Hadden, graduate student in business administration, said.

The county-owned and subsidized ambulance service operates out of a new facility located at 2005 Claflin.

THE EMTS spend many demanding hours on call, since the station has sleeping facilities, answering and responding to emergency situations along with contending with school work.

"It's kinda hard to go to class the next day when you go to bed at midnight, get up at one, and then are up half the night," said Kirk Maher, freshman in general business administration, and instructor-coordinator of the Riley County Ambulance Service. After serving as an EMT in Abilene, Maher came to K-State to attend classes and teach basic EMTs in Manhattan for the University of Kansas Medical Center.

"We come in at a quarter of five in the evening and work till a quarter of eight in the morning," Maher said. "We set our classes up (at K-State) between 8:30 and 4:30, so we will not miss any of our work at the ambulance department.'

The attendants are working their way majors, Maher said. Most are full-time students and some are graduate students.

The attendants work at the department on an alternating schedule that gives them four days off for four days of work during a 48 hour work-week, Maher said.

TO BECOME an EMT a person must complete a minimum of 81 hours of study, combining classroom and hospital experience, Maher said. Ten of the hours are spent observing the methods and procedures of hospitals to become familiar with the hospital setting.

Emergency calls can come in any time, and the EMT's must be ready for any situation that arises.

The emergency calls are recieved by the 911 emergency phone number by a dispatcher based at the Riley County Police Department, who in turn calls the ambulance service.

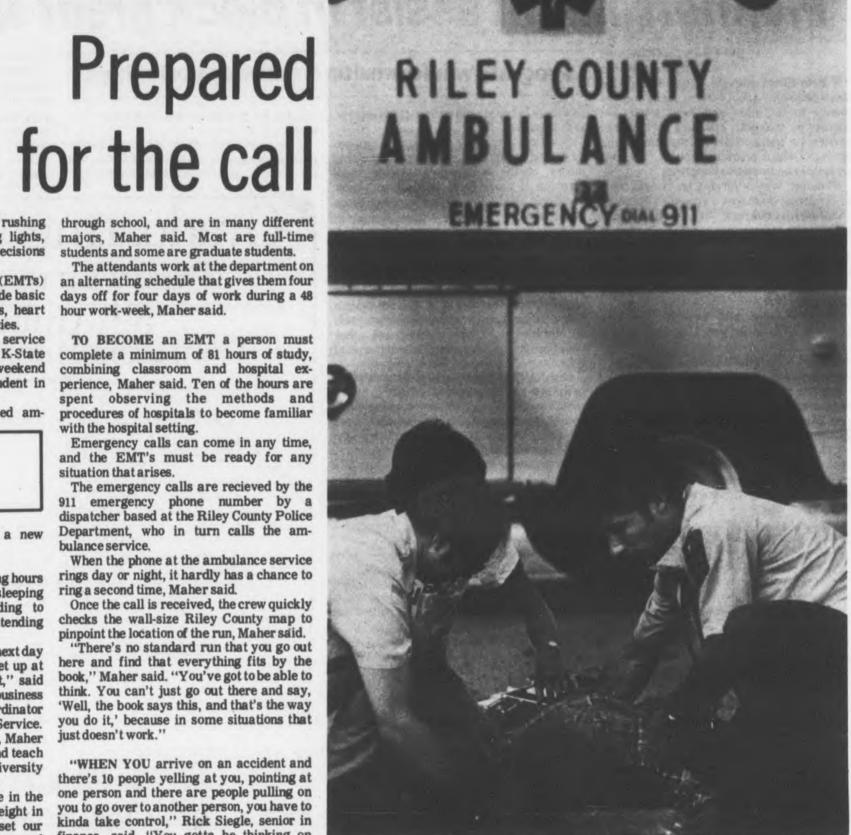

When the phone at the ambulance service rings day or night, it hardly has a chance to ring a second time, Maher said.

Once the call is received, the crew quickly checks the wall-size Riley County map to pinpoint the location of the run, Maher said.

"There's no standard run that you go out here and find that everything fits by the book," Maher said. "You've got to be able to think. You can't just go out there and say, 'Well, the book says this, and that's the way you do it,' because in some situations that just doesn't work."

"WHEN YOU arrive on an accident and there's 10 people yelling at you, pointing at one person and there are people pulling on you to go over to another person, you have to kinda take control," Rick Siegle, senior in finance, said. "You gotta be thinking on your feet all the time.

Planners might assist in block grant spending

By SUSAN LAVERENTZ Collegian Reporter

If President Reagan's efforts to transfer more decisions about how to spend federal money to the state and local levels are successful, planners will have a chance to participate more in the process, according to Rep. Doug Bereuter (R-Neb.), the first planner to be elected to Congress,

Bereuter, who is serving his second term in Congress, delivered a speech, "Planning and the 97th Congress," to a small audience in the Union on Monday.

Under a block grant program, money is allocated to states with few restrictions on its use. With categorical grant programs, money is allocated only for specific programs.

"Many people who benefit from the current categorical grant programs are very much accustomed and pleased they're dealing with the federal agencies," Bureuter said.

BEREUTER SAID that now those people are being asked to sever the old relationship and establish a new relationship with state government-especially the governor.

"There is a real opportunity for planners in the new system, once we move into the new system. Because decision-making processes will be shifted to the state and local level, it offers many opportunities to be very creative," he said.

Program would provide creative opportunities

"I think for training of planners it means increased emphasis on decision-making theory, on the management orientation of planners to assist local officials with their decisions about how to spend these block grant funds.'

There are two major issues being "hidden" from the public in Reagan's proposed budget cuts, he said. The first is a proposed move to decentralize the decision-making process in American government by using block grants, Bereuter said. The second is a reduction in the number of people who will be eligible to receive welfare and other social programs, including student financial BEREUTER SAID he supports switching to the block grant program.

"We're in this period of time when these proposed savings which will help us to keep the same level of service for the truly needy, are to be gained by block grant programs,"

SOME OF the benefits to be gained are by reducing the number of federal employees that administer the categorical grant programs, which can be accomplished by continuation of the hiring freeze at the federal level. It is also helped by the fact that an unusually large number of federal employees are retiring next month, he said.

"You have to be automatic," Siegle said. "When you go to a possible heart attack, you're thinking of what has to be done even though you don't know the severity of it or what the situation is, and when you get there, your mind is attuned to that and you automatically do it,"

Bystanders and patients may not really understand why the EMTs are as under control as they are when working accidents, Mike Kinsman, sophomore in pre-medicine, said.

"We're much more capable of telling the extent of the injury of an individual than they (bystanders) are. And believe me, if we think a person needs to go to the hospital in a hurry, we'll get there in a hurry, but if we feel that the circumstances are to the patient's advantage to take more time and be able to do it properly, that's exactly what we'll do," Kinsman said.

"I've been asked, 'How can you pull somebody from a car, work on somebody that's really screwed up in a car wreck, and how can you do it without it affecting you?' You can at that time. But there's nothing saying that after you get that person to the hospital and you're released from charge of that person, that you don't get sick, or you don't get very upset about it," Maher said.

STRESS IS a big part of being on call for the ambulance service.

"There's a lot of stress on us. In two minutes we could be on our way to a plane wreck, and who knows, we could have a 747 crash out here," Maher said.

Education council asks for federal rules relief

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Council on Education asked the Reagan administration Monday to relax dozens of federal regulations that affect colleges, from rules against sex bias in athletics to accounting for how research grants are spent to disposal of waste from college laboratories.

The organization, which lobbies on behalf, of more than 1,600 colleges, sent Vice: President George Bush a 140-page document listing dozens of examples of what it considers onerous regulations. Its complaints were directed at rules issued by virtually every major government agency.

"Institutions of higher education are not requesting to be exempted from the protective laws prevailing in society as a whole," ACE President Jack Peltason wrote. "They are, however, asking to have the unreasonable burdens of federal regulations lifted."

He said colleges and universities are "non-profit entities whose resources are being dissipated by having to comply with many unnecessary regulations and paperwork requirements."

Peltason said the government's relationship with the academic community has become strained during the past decade and removing "these irritants can aid in the re-establishment of the good will necessary to achieve the goals of federal programs."

The appeal was sent to Bush in his role as head of a task force on regulatory relief.

THE ACADEMICS' hit list included:

discrimination in education. They suggested letting colleges use peer review to determine whether a college's athletic programs violated the law. Instead of federal civil rights investigators, volunteer teams of athletic directors, coaches and financial aid officers would be brought in to scrutinize an institution. They also called for curbs on when the government could demand to know the salaries of coaches of men's and women's teams.

—Handicapped barriers. They called for "a more realistic standard of compliance" with a rule requiring colleges to remove physical barriers to the handicapped. Colleges were supposed to have done so by last June, and the council said many are now technically in violation of the rule despite making progress in altering their old buildings.

—Research cost-accounting. They urged the Office of Management and Budget to relax its controversial Circular A-21, which lays down rules on how federal research contracts and grants must be accounted for. They want more freedom to write off scholarships for graduate students as part of research costs and other changes in the rules, which were revised only two years ago.

—Veterans. They demanded that colleges, not state agencies, be allowed to certify courses for enrollment of veterans, and they urged that other restrictions on use of G.I. Bill benefits be eased. One change would allow veterans to use the benefits to take courses broadcast over radio or television.

—Waste Disposal. They said the Environmental Protection Agency "should accept a general statement from a college or a university as to the nature of wastes stored or treated without any complex identification of the multitude of substances and compounds."

Reagan uses soft approach to sway budget opponents

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan applied his softsell approach to Democratic congressmen Monday, assuring them their concerns about specific items in the budget would be addressed after a crucial House vote on the overall spending proprosal.

Reagan appeared to be having some success and the outcome appeared less and less in doubt. Several who had made no commitment previously emerged from the meeting fingering gift boxes of presidential cufflinks and indicating they would support the administration.

As the three hours of meetings at the White House were breaking up, House Speaker Thomas O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., told reporters at the Capitol that he was lobbying his own party members but was getting no commitments that they would stay in line.

And one Democrat, Rep. Bill Nichols of Alabama, left the White House vowing to support the president's budget program and stating that he was feeling "absolutely no pressure" from the speaker.

The focus of Reagan's and O'Neill's attention was a vote, likely Wednesday, on a blueprint put forward by two House members, a Republican and a Democrat, that the president has endorsed. The House resumed debate Monday.

If Republicans stay solid, a switch of 26 Democrats would give Reagan his biggest budget victory yet. GOP leaders say they expect only one Republican to vote against the president.

An Associated Press survey late last week found 29 Democrats who had decided to join the Reagan plan, and five others saying they were leaning that way.

Gregory Humphries, who is leading a coalition of education groups attempting to reverse Reagan's proposed education budget cuts, said Monday the vote will turn on "about 20 votes of people who have not made up their minds."

THE PRESIDENT has been engaged in personal lobbying for several days and the two dozen congressmen who met with him Monday, a few at a time, were described as "probably the largest group yet" by White House aides. Most of them were Southern Democrats. More representatives are to be invited in Tuesday and possibly Wednesday.

Among those on hand Monday was Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., who had not committed himself to voting with the Republicans but who emerged to say "in all probability, I will."

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said no promises were made about specific programs, but added: "I think we promised them we will listen to their specific concerns."

Leaders set date for '81 session adjournment

Carlin threatens to veto Senate-approved bill

TOPEKA (AP) - The Kansas Legislature finally adjourned last night; after sending Gov. John Carlin an omnibus appropriations bill providing a token amount of additional property tax relief but preserving an inviolate goal of the House to have a balanced state budget.

The two houses adjourned near midnight, after the 93rd day of the 1981 session and an extended battle over how much to allow property taxes to go up next year across the Legislative leaders set May 29 as the date for sine die, or final, adjournment. That date was purposely set farther in the future than usual, because Carlin threatened to veto the omnibus bill, or portions of it. If he does, they may want to bring back the full Legislature to consider an override.

THE SENATE approved the omnibus bill, 25-12, after the Republican caucus failed four hours earlier to garner the needed 21 votes for passage.

The House passed two versions of the omnibus bill after a conference committee finally broke a massive stalemate over school funding and property tax relief.

The Senate gave up trying to gain more money for education and tax relief from a stubborn House, whose leaders insisted balancing the state budget was more important to them and to voters this year than putting a few million more dollars into school property tax relief.

worked out by the conference committee by the bare majority of 63-54.

The House had passed the first plan, 64-54, but Senate Republicans couldn't get the 21 votes needed to pass that version, so the conference committee went back to work and came up with a slightly different ver-

THE SENATE lost ground in its battle to get more property tax relief. The first version would have carried a $28.6 million property tax increase next fall; the second version pegged the increase at $35.5 million.

The latest package put $5 million back into full state funding of special education programs in elementary and secondary schools instead of spending the money on property tax relief.

That meant school boards would have $5 million more to spend on other things, such as teacher salaries, but also meant property taxes would rise by $35.5 million next fall if Carlin signs the bill.

Another change in the latest package removed $70,000 which had been put into the omnibus bill for family planning. It was taken out to try to get the votes of two senators who objected to having the state spend money on that.

INCLUDED IN the omnibus bill is a provision which would let the state's universities collect and spend the full 22 percent student tuition increase aproved by The House passed the second compromise the Board of Regents, but use $1.44 million of the universities' money for school finance. Through the complicated school finance formula, that would add $2 million in property tax relief.

Also, instead of allowing school districts to raise their budgets from 5 percent to 15 percent next school year-depending upon whether they are above or below the median per-pupil expenditure for education-permit them to raise them 5 percent to 8 percent. That would cut the tax bite by $6.2 million.

Carlin had sent word through an aide that he would veto the first package. The aide, Press Secretary Bill Hoch, said the governor also would veto the second compromise being tried Monday night.

Shifting the special ed money and removing the family planning money had nothing to do with the governor's opposition, Hoch said.

"His opposition was based on other factors, namely taking university tuition money and putting it into school finance, and the impact the budget limitation reduction would have on poor school districts," Hoch said.

"His more general concern was it was just rotten public policy."

Carlin's opposition raised the possibility of a special session, if he vetoes the plan, and parts of the omnibus appropriations bill

Hoch said it was premature to speculate whether Carlin would call the lawmakers back into special session.

Kansas justices receive experience as cameras are allowed in court

TOPEKA (AP) - The Kansas Supreme Court, for the first time in its history, permitted television and still camera coverage of its proceedings Monday as it considered a potentially landmark case.

It was a one-time, one-hour experiment by the state's highest court designed to give the seven justices first-hand experience for determining whether television and still cameras will be made a permanent fixture in Kansas courtrooms at some later date.

The court, earlier this year, altered its rules to permit tape recorders to be used during its proceedings. However, its procedural rules still bar photographic

City commissioners to discuss forming planning committee

Several items to improve the downtown will be considered tonight by the Manhattan City Commission at 7 p.m. in City Hall.

Among those items is a request from Downtown Inc. to form a planning committee, to help establish a business improvement district.

According to Gary Stith, director of community development, the business improvement district was made possible through a state law passed during this legislative session.

This means businesses should be able to form a district in which they share expenses for snow removal, landscaping and holiday decorations.

Commissioners will vote on the first step of the process to set up the planning committee, which will be made up of merchants in the district.

A proposal from a securities company in Wichita to begin a feasibility study on issuing commercial rehabilitation revenue bonds for a loan program to businesses downtown and in Aggieville also will be considered.

Put your money where your Heart is.

In the case, which lasted an hour as attorneys for both parties presented oral arguments, the court was asked to overturn a more than century-old law prohibiting husband or wife from suing each other for damages because of personal injuries from

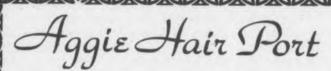

Two television cameras quietly recorded the proceedings. One was at the back of the eggshaped courtroom and another at the front, alongside the long curved bench where the justices are seated. A photographer from a Topeka newspaper was able to shoot pictures from either side of the three-year-old courtroom.

There were no klieg lights, no flash bulbs, no noisy motors on the cameras. During pauses in the arguments, one could hear the hum of overhead fluorescent lamps that light the plush carpeted room.

Royals award Leonard, White contract extensions through '86

City Royals announced the signing Monday of Gold Glove second baseman Frank White and pitcher Dennis Leonard to contract extensions through the 1986 season.

The Royals would not disclose terms of the two contract extensions. But published reports said Leonard's pact was worth about $4.5 million, which would make him the American League's richest pitcher, and that White was seeking about $2 million.

The Kansas City Star said in a copyright story Monday it had learned Leonard would receive about $800,000 per year beginning in 1982. The Star said he would also receive a signing bonus of about $500,000.

THE AGREEMENT GAVE the Royals an option to renew Leonard's contract for another two years, 1987 and 1988, at the same salary, which the Star said would make it a $6.1 million, seven-year contract for the right-hander.

White, one of baseball's top defensive second basemen, was reportedly seeking a package worth about $2 million. White is currently working under a six-year contract extension through the 1983 season that pays about $110,000 a year in salary and $50,000 a year in deferred payments.

White was originally represented by agent Tony Pace, but switched to a Kansas City lawyer to represent him when Pace insisted that the Royals agree to contract terms with designated hitter Hal McRae before negotiating the White contract.

WHITE, 30, HAS won four consecutive Gold Gloves at second base and has a .252 lifetime batting average since winning the starting spot in the Royals' infields near the end of the 1975 season. He was named the Most Valuable Player in the Royals' threegame sweep of the New York Yankees last fall in the American League playoffs, where he sparkled in the field and batted .545.

"Frank has been an asset to the Royals and we are looking forward to the same results for many more years," General Manager Joe Burke said of the signing.

The Star said Monday that figures available through the Major League Players Association indicate Leonard's extension is the highest-paying contract among American League pitchers. Four National League pitchers-Phil Niekro and Al Hrabosky of the Atlanta Braves and Nolan Ryan and Don Sutton of the Houston Astros-are reported to have contracts calling for $900,000 a year or more.

Free agents sign pacts with Chiefs

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Chiefs Monday signed six free agents, including William Jewell College star running back David Cunningham.

Cunningham, 6-2 and 210 pounds, rolled 1,419 yards on 167 carries last year, averaging 8.5 yards per carry and scoring nine touchdowns. He was a big reason for Jewell's 10-0-1 regular season record and helped the team reached the NAIA national semifinals.

The Chiefs also signed quarterback Mike Solomon, formerly of Missouri Western, who played with the minor league Kentucky Trackers last year. Solomon is expected to contest Bob Gagliano, the Chiefs No. 12 selection in last week's draft, for the third quarterback position behind Steve Fuller and Bill Kenney.

Also signing were Ken Harbuck, a 6-3, 280pound nose tackle from Sacramento State; Joseph Homan, a 6-2, 255-pound guard from Cal State-Northridge; free safety Thomas Warren, 6 feet, 190 pounds, from North Carolina A&T; and Deron Cherry, a 5-11, 185-pound punter from Rutgers.

Heart disease and stroke will cause half of all deaths this year.

Leonard, who turns 30 Friday, the second highest paid player for the Royals. Third baseman George Brett reportedly signed a contract extension last year that boosts his salary to about $1 million a year beginning

Leonard, a 20-game winner three times in the past four seasons, is in the final year of a five-year contract reportedly calling for $120,000 a year in salary and $60,000 in deferred deposits to be paid following his

Leonard recalled negotiating a one-year contract after a 15-victory rookie season in 1975 for $32,000, twice the salary of the previous year. "I was happier than a pig in mud when I negotiated that myself," Leonard said. "Then later, I realized I could have gotten more. That's when I hired Jerry Kapstein."

LEONARD SAID DURING the winter that he would enter the free agent market in the fall if he did not have an extension by spring training. Later he and his agent, Kapstein, moved the deadline to the start of the season, but the deadline was lifted as they neared agreement.

Agreement reportedly was reached at the start of the season on financial figures, and the past month was spent working out contract wording on guarantees and money

The agreement was reached just before the start of Saturday night's game against the Texas Rangers, which Leonard won 7-2 to boost his career record to 109-76.

"Over the last five years, Dennis has been the winningest pitcher in the league (92 victories). All we can say is, the contract clearly recognizes that achievement by Dennis," Kapstein said.

Fitch faces task of getting Celtics 'back down'

BOSTON (AP) - Most teams work at getting up for big games, but the task facing trailing 3-1 in the best-of-seven series to a Boston coach Bill Fitch is how to get his Celtics back down in time for Tuesday night's opener of the National Basketball Association championship series against the Houston Rockets.

Two hours after Sunday's dramatic 91-90 victory over Philadelphia in the seventh game of the Eastern Conference final series, thousands of people still were celebrating on Causeway Street outside Boston Garden.

The excitement outside the arena was matched only by the intense feelings that were unleashed inside after the Celtics held Philadelphia without a basket for the final 5:23 and outscored the 76ers 9-1 in that span to win the brutal, physical struggle.

good Philadelphia team. But the Celtics clawed their way back with second-half rallies in each of the last three games, winning them by scores that accurately reflected the tightness of the series: 111-109, 100-98 and finally 91-90.

"This is the highest high I've ever had," Celtics forward Cedric Maxwell said in the tumultuous Boston locker room. "I'm just sorry this wasn't for the NBA championship."

And there's the rub. The Celtics had won the showdown against the only team to match their 62-20 record during the regular season, but they still haven't won the title. In their way are the Houston Rockets, surprise winners of the Western Conference playoffs after compiling only a 40-42 record during the regular season.

"We've won the Eastern Conference championship, but that's only half of it," cautioned Fitch. "Houston has had the opportunity to sit back and rest-that's the equalizer. We know how tough Houston is. We're not going to take anything for granted."

Rockets coach Del Harris makes no apologies about his team's presence in the final series, where Houston will try for the first title in its 14-year history and attempt to become the first team with a sub-.500 record to gain the championship.

Harris says that in order for the Rockets to win they must work the ball inside to NBA's No.2 scorer and No.1 rebounder with averages of 27.8 points and 14.8 rebounds per game during the regular season, while on defense they must concentrate on slowing down Boston's fast break.

"If we can cut off the running game, we feel we can play as good a halfcourt game as anybody in the league," said Harris.

Geronimo's ninth-inning sacrifice fly scored pinch-runner Danny Garcia to move the Kansas City Royals into a 5-5 tie with the Boston Red Sox in a game that was suspended after 10 innings because of the American League's 1 a.m. curfew.

The game's start was delayed two hours and 16 minutes by rain. It will be resumed beginning with the 11th inning prior to Tuesday night's scheduled contest.

Garcia had run for Ken Phelps, who pinchhit a triple to lead off the inning off reliever Bob Stanley.

The Royals jumped on starter John Tudor for three runs in the third inning and a 4-1 lead. After Willie Wilson doubled, U.L. Washington tripled and Hal McRae doubled him home. McRae went to third on a fly ball and scored on a sacrifice fly by Willie Aikens.

Reagan writes response to Brezhnev

U.S. to negotiate with Soviets

ROME (AP) - U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. announced to the Western alliance Monday that the United States intends to start negotiations with the Soviet Union by the end of the year to limit nuclear forces in Europe.

Haig also said at a private meeting of 15 NATO foreign ministers that President Reagan sent a lengthy handwritten letter to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev responding to a letter from Brezhnev in March. No details of Reagan's letter were revealed. Brezhnev's letter described his proposals for improvement of East-West relations.

Conference sources said Haig told the ministers he would have preliminary talks on limitation of medium-range nuclear missiles with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko during the U.N. General Assembly session in September. Lower level talks to establish ground rules might be held earlier, the sources said.

At the start of the meeting of NATO's highest policy-making body, the North Atlantic Council, Haig reiterated the Reagan administration's view that arms talks depend on Soviet conduct and that heightened Soviet pressure on Poland could endanger talks.

He said the success of arms talks would depend also on NATO's determination to abide by a decision to deploy 572 U.S. cruise and Pershing II missiles in five European countries beginning in 1983.

HAIG TOLD the ministers the U.S. decision to negotiate does not signify the administration's acceptance of recent Soviet actions, the sources said. It was an apparent reference to the Soviet Union's continued military intervention in Afghanistan.

Preliminary talks to reduce mediumrange nuclear missiles were held in Geneva last autumn, but without success. NATO has rejected a call by Brezhnev for a moratorium on new medium-range missile deployment.

Delegates greeted the Haig announcement with relief although some said they had hoped the talks could have started

West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Italy have been pressuring the Reagan administration to begin missile reduction talks, which the United States promised to undertake when the alliance agreed in December 1979 to deploy the 572 missiles.

THESE GOVERNMENTS have been under pressure themselves from opposition parties and anti-nuclear demonstrators trying to prevent the basing of the weapons on their soil.

A Belgian Foreign Ministry spokesman said Haig's announcement "was the minimum we expected." A Dutch official, who asked not to be identified, said that while Haig promised talks by the end of the year, the Dutch government faces a strong challenge from missile opponents in an election later this month.

According to the latest estimates circulated at the conference, the Soviet Union has 1,040 nuclear warheads capable of striking Western Europe. They are 750 upto-date SS-20 warheads and 290 older SS-4 and SS-5 warheads, which have not yet been replaced by SS-20s.

U.S. attorney general restricts citizens' access to information

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's new restrictive policy on opening its files to citizens is a further hint the Reagan administration is more inclined than its predecessor to press for broad changes in the Freedom of Information Act.

Attorney General William Smith sent a memo to the heads of all federal agencies Monday rescinding a policy established by the Carter administration's first attorney general, Griffin

Four years ago, Bell told agencies not to use technical exemptions to disclosure in the act and to release requested documents unless that would be "demonstrably harmful" to the

In the new policy, Smith reminded agencies that the guiding principle of the act is to disclose documents but only "subject to the specific exemptions provided by Congress."

Smith also said the Justice Department would develop proposed amendments to remedy what he said were problems with the act, which he said many people are using in ways Congress did not intend.

'As a consequence, informants are more reluctant to share information with enforcement agencies, foreign intelligence services are more reluctant to share information with U.S. intelligence agencies, companies are reluctant to provide reliable information to the government," Smith said.

He said the cost of administering the act has reached almost $45 million a year. At the FBI alone, 300 employees work on Freedom of Information requests at a cost of about $10 million a year, he said.

The Carter administration also was studying possible changes to the act, but did not make any formal proposals before leaving office.

FBI Director William Webster has proposed that a seven-year delay be allowed before his agency must release closed investigative files which now can be released when the cases are closed

The CIA has been seeking a complete exemption from the act. Civiletti had said he was inclined to relax the impact of the law on the CIA, but did not favor a total exemption for the

The law now allows exemptions for criminal investigative material, national security matters, internal agency manuals, pre-decision memoranda, and several other categories of information.

Smith's action appears to signal that the Reagan administration is more inclined than the Carter team was to suggest broad new exemptions to the act.

Venezuelan president meets ordinary people

CARACAS, Venezuela Venezuelans who need help getting a job or running water for their neighborhood or a pardon for a jailed son can go straight to the top-a meeting with President Luis Herrera.

Every Monday afternoon Herrera holds a "collective audience" at the presidential palace with ordinary citizens who have applied to see him.

Generally, they come to ask favors. One young man just wanted "an exchange of philosophical views" with the president. He

Herrera, a 56-year-old Social Christian, says the Monday meetings are the best way "to the people's participation in government."

"The objective is to give people the opportunity to explain to me their communities' problems, to offer me suggestions on the political situation and even describe some of their personal problems," Herrera said after collective audience No. 100 took place recently.

OPPOSITION POLITICIANS say the weekly meetings-which often take the entire afternoon-are demagogic and useless.

"That's not so," counters Olga Rodriguez,

Herrara sees 50 citizens each week the presidential commissioner in charge of scheduling the audiences. "You can ask the people who have come here and got what they wanted. They certainly don't think the program is useless."

Herrera said the program "has helped me greatly in ruling the nation. The audiences give me the opportunity to hear different points of view from those of government officials and COPEI (the government party) leaders."

During Herrera's first 109 weeks in office, he held 100 Monday audiences, attended by 5,430 people.

Fifty applicants are selected every Monday from among "thousands of candidates who request to see the president." They see the president privately.

A FOREIGN correspondent was recently allowed to attend one such meeting, in which a group of sports officials asked the president's help in starting a professional baseball league in western Venezuela.

"What can the government do for you?" Herrera asked.

The sports group asked for a three-year tax exemption to help get the league started, for free broadcast of their games by state television and for free use of a governmentowned stadium.

The president wrote down each request and told the officials the tax exemption request would be studied by the Internal Revenue Service and the television manager would be told to study the broadcast request with "sympathy."

"As for the stadium request, it is granted...as long as you pay maintenance expenses. The government will charge no

THE VISITORS happily accepted.

The next visitors were Dr. Jesus Eslava and Jose Reveron, an engineer, who have developed a device they call a "hemogasodynameter," which they say helps detect certain heart diseases.

They say their equipment is much cheaper than other sophisticated machines being used now. They tried for months, in vain, to interest Health Ministry officials "at least to take a look" at their invention. So they decided to try with the president

Herrera showed interest, phoned the health minister and ordered an immediate study of the matter. The device is now ready to be mass-produced, with government backing, to be used nationwide at state hospitals.

"The president acted quickly. We should have gone to him in the first place," Reveron told a reporter.

Rodriguez said Herrera has granted 37 presidential pardons to prisoners since the Monday meetings began. "Normally, they are the sons of poor mothers who don't have the money to pay a lawyer," she said.

Rodriguez said that in theory, any Venezuelan citizen or foreign resident is entitled to see the president. All they have to do is ask for it. A group of social workers evaluates the cases and makes the decision as to who will be invited. Rodriguez said she tries to keep a regional balance so people from all areas will have roughly the same chance at gaining an audience.

Syria defies Reagan, ignores Israeli 'red line'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Syria defied the SAM-6 missiles removed from eastern the Reagan administration and Israel Monday and refused to withdraw surface-toair missiles from eastern Lebanon, demanding instead that Israel be pressured into halting all military activities in this war-scarred nation, Western diplomatic sources said.

The embattled peaks that overlook the Christian-held Mediterranean coast north of Beirut, and Zahle, 30 miles east of Beirut, were quiet Monday. But there were sporadic exchanges of sniper fire and rocketpropelled grenades along Beirut's Moslem-Christian demarcation line.

The diplomatic sources, who declined to be identified, said U.S. Embassy officials in Damascus have been in daily contact with the Syrian government in an effort to have Lebanon to dispel the threat of a Syrian-Israeli military showdown.

But the Syrians remained adamant, contending that the deployment of the missiles last Tuesday was an act of selfdefense after the shooting down of two Syrian helicopter gunships by Israeli jets near east Lebanon's embattled Christian city of Zahle, the sources said.

President Reagan, in a cable Monday to Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, asked for more time to solve the Syrian-Israeli crisis by diplomatic means.

At the White House, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes confirmed that Reagan had sent a message in which the United States urged all parties "to maintain the restraint, which we welcome, which has been shown in the past week."

Begin told reporters in Jerusalem that Syria has moved three SAM-6 batteries inside Lebanon and a "certain number" of additional SAMs onto the Syrian-Lebanese border.

Western reporters who toured much of east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley spotted one battery of SAM-6s made up of 24 missiles deployed mainly around the Rayak, the main air base for Syria's forces in Lebanon.

Israel contends that by moving the missiles into the Bekaa Valley, Syria has crossed the "red line" the Jewish state set for Syria's military activity in Lebanon five years ago, when 22,000 Syrian troops intervened to end the 1975-76 civil war between Lebanon's Christians and Moslems.

Legislature grants regents authority to spend monies from tuition hike

Despite some late-session attempts in the Kansas Legislature to prevent the Board of Regents from spending the full 22 percent tuition increase, a provision of the omnibus appropriations bill passed Monday night authorizes the regents' institutions to spend the entire amount.

However, the Legislature also decreased the amount of money available to the regents' institutions from the state general fund.

In April, the regents passed the 22 percent tuition increase, which was 7 percent more than the Legislature had appropriated. The additional 7 percent would raise $2.8 million.

In the omnibus bill, the Legislature cut the universities' appropriation from the general fund by $1.4 million.

The money removed from the universities' budgets to the general fund will be used for property tax relief, if the omnibus bill becomes law. The funds will be put into the complicated school finance formula, where they will provide $2 million in tax relief.

AT A PRESS conference Tuesday, Gov. John Carlin indicated he would veto at least parts of the omnibus bill. The tuition provision was one for which he expressed disatisfaction.

The bill also limits the use of funds generated by the 7 percent tuition increase at the institutions, according to Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee. The funds may be used for student wages, and the equipment and library components in the "other operating expenses" category, he said.

The omnibus bill as a whole was "sort of good newsbad news," said Joe McFarland, academic affairs officer for the Board of Regents.

"Generally the omnibus bill releases a significant amount of new monies to the regents' institutions," he said. "System-wide, the bill allows an additional $1.25 million for utility costs: $370,000 for telephone expenses; and about $1.5 million for students wages."

ACCORDING TO provisions in the bill, K-State will receive $77,000 for the purchase of 80 acres formerly leased for the Tribune Experiment Station, more than $128,000 for eight additional maintenance positions and $300,000 in sponsored research overhead money to use for the third floor of Shellenberger Hall, McFarland said.

However, not everyone is pleased with the amounts available to the regents' institutions.

"I am very disappointed that the full increase from 15 percent to 22 percent that was adopted by the Board of Regents will not be fully dedicated to higher education," K-State President Duane Acker said.

"It is irresponsible for students to help meet the state's obligation to property tax relief," said Bob Bingaman, executive director of Associated Students of Kansas (ASK).

STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT Angela Scanlan said she is "thoroughly disgusted" by the bill.

"It is ridiculous for college students to pay for property taxes," Scanlan said. "Students should be really upset about this because they're being ripped off. They should let their legislators know how they

The question of whether to release fees raised by the institutions is not a new issue, Hess said. The regents can determine the amount of fee increases, but the Legislature must authorize how the money is

Rioters rip Northern Ireland

Mourners attend Sands' funeral

BELFAST, Northern Ireland in Grafton Street, a luxury shop- Britain would never grant political Bobby Sands was carried home from the Maze Prison Tuesday in a black hearse that moved slowly through the riot-torn streets of Belfast's Roman Catholic strongholds. Grieving residents draped black flags from their windows to mourn the latest IRA martyr.

Thousands of neighbors and supporters filed past the open coffin Tuesday night. A man standing guard outside the Sands home said, "He looks like an infant, very small and very frail. It's really heartbreaking ... '

Firebomb-hurling rioters clashed with British troops and police in the worst riots in the last two weeks of trouble surrounding Sands' hunger strike for prisoners' rights. At least 22 people were injured, three critically.

BELFAST POLICE said one officer was hit in the shoulder in a volley of high-velocity bullets fired at a police vehicle in a Catholic district of West Belfast, where an army patrol also was also fired on.

In County Tyrone, a supermarket was bombed in Cabra, vehicles were hijacked and set ablaze in nearby Dungannon and police and rioters fought with firebombs and crowd-dispersing plastic bullets in Coalisland.

A quiet rally by about 1,000 Sands supporters in Dublin, capital of the neighboring Irish Republic, ended with youths breaking away to set cars on fire and smash shopfronts the exclusive Royal Hibernian Hotel.

But the level of violence fell short of that predicted by those who said Sands' death bould bring on civil war. At midnight the Royal Ulster Constabulary said, "Things have now quieted down.

THE BODY was taken from the prison hospital by authorities shortly after his death early Tuesday, the 66th day of his fast demanding political status for IRA prisoners. After an autopsy was performed, it was released to Sands' family in the early afternoon.

From the prison, the hearse made its slow, 12-mile journey to Sands' family home in Belfast's Twinbrook district to await an IRA burial Thursday with full military honors-as the IRA guerrilla had requested.

Pallbearers, including Sands' father and brother, draped the wooden coffin with the Irish flag of green, orange and white before carrying it inside. Black flags flew from windows throughout the neighborhood.

Seventy more of the 440 convicted Irish Republican Army prisoners at the prison threatened to join three of Sands' surviving comrades-one of them reported within days of death-in a hunger strike.

IN LONDON, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher declared

(AP) - The body of hunger striker ping area. Rocks were thrown at status to the IRA prisoners, "no matter how much hunger strike there may be."

"Mr. Sands was a convicted criminal. He chose to take his own life. It was a choice his organization did not allow any of their victims," she told a somber House of Commons. Sands was elected to the British Parliament on April 9 during his hunger strike.

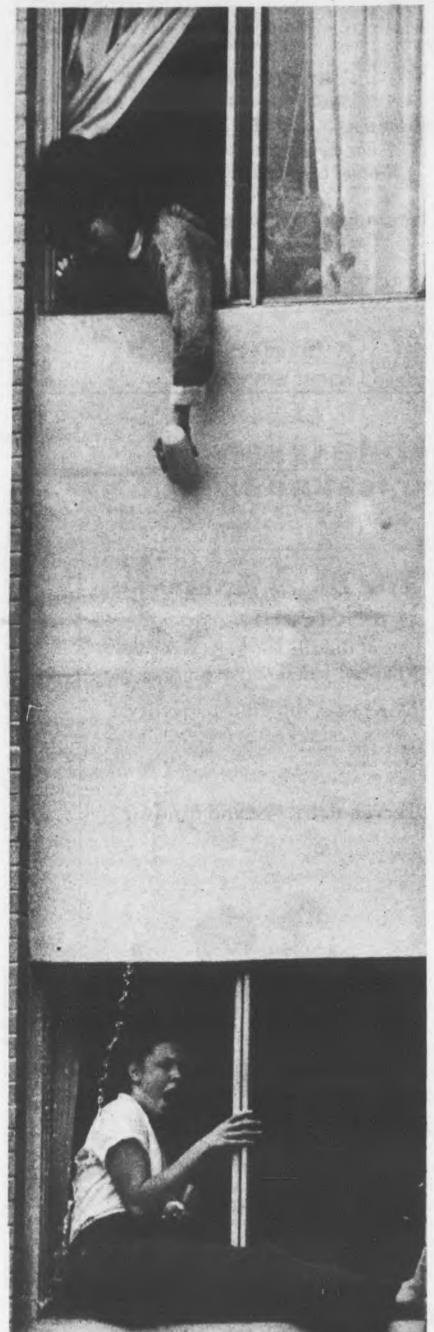

Sands, 27, is the newest martyr to the cause of the IRA and its supporters-unification of the Protestant-dominated British province of Northern Ireland with the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic. His death touched off a wave of rioting, hijacking and burning in Roman Catholic areas of Belfast and Londonderry, the province's second largest city.

HE DIED IN support of demands that convicted Irish nationalist guerrillas wear their own clothes, do no prison work and freely associate-widely regarded as amounting to political status.

Tension in Belfast mounted when Sinn Fein, the political front of the IRA's militant "Provisional" wing, declared "about 70 more prisoners have said they are prepared to join the hunger strike."

Disturbances eased in midafternoon, but tension was high despite dramatic appeals for calm from Catholic and Protestant church leaders, British officials the Legislature has allowed the additional money to be spent "about 50 percent of the time" in the last 10 years, Hess said.

The real problem arises when fee revenue is less than the institutions are budgeted to spend, Hess said.

"If they don't have it, they want the difference from the general fund. If they raise more, they want it all," he said.

THE ISSUE IS what percentage of academic costs students should have to pay, Hess said.

Students will pay about 22 percent of their academic costs in fiscal 1982 with the 22 percent tuition increase, McFarland said. The change in the appropriations will not significantly affect the percentage.

The 22 percent hike in tuition translates into approximately an additional $60 per student each semester. Tuition for in-state undergraduate students at K-State was $260 with another $102 in fees for the 1980-81 school year.

The added funds will mean an additional $406,000 for student salaries and operating expenses at K-State, Michael Johnson, assistant to the president, said. The money will be divided among the departments, Dan Beatty, vice president for business affairs, said.

Uncertainty about the bill's future could hamper departmental planning for the next fiscal year, especially if operating expenses are increased because of another enrollment increase, Johnson said.

and Sands' family. Security forces prepared for more violence.

Cardinal Tomas O Fiaich, Catholic Primate of All Ireland, appealed to the surviving hunger strikers to call off their fast and to Britain "to abandon its inflexible attitude regarding prison dress and work."

ARCHBISHOP JOHN Armstrong, head of the Protestant church throughout Ireland, said: "Carry on your normal lives as best you can and pray, pray as never before for mercy and truth, righteousness and peace."

Armstrong described the circumstances of Sands' fast as "one of the most catalogued pieces of moral blackmail in recent times."

Sinn Fein spokesman Austen said Francis Hughes, 25, the IRA's most wanted gunman until his 1978 capture and conviction on a murder charge, was in grave condition, nearly blind and in severe pain on the 52nd day of his hunger strike. Hughes' family said he probably was within days of death.

IN DUBLIN, hundreds of Sands' supporters carrying Irish flags gathered outside the general post office, where the IRA staged a rebellion against the British at Easter 1916.

Organizers of Sands' support campaign called for a "national day of mourning" and said all shops, offices and workplaces throughout the whole of Ireland should close Thursday.

The rioters were summoned onto the streets as news of Sands' death was spread by women clanging the lids of garbage cans, the signal they have used for years to warn their men when British troops swooped into Catholic districts seeking IRA members.

Women, many clad only in bathrobes and slippers, huddled in doorways as their husbands and sons battled police. Police reported a few arrests, but there was no major drive to grab rioters.

Honesty rewards woman with trip

LOS ANGELES — She's not quite packing her bags, but a trip around the world goes quite a way toward soothing Emily Clark's hurt at returning the $49,500 she was overpaid by a game show.

Ms. Clark, 33, appeared on the nationally televised "Tic-Tac-Dough" in October. She lasted three shows and won $5,500 in cash and $2,800 in prizes.

But she said Tuesday that when her check arrived last Friday it had an extra zero—it was made out for $55,000.

"The first thing that went through my mind is that my eyesight's bad. I'm getting old. I'd better look at this again. I kept looking at it. When those extra zeroes didn't go away, I got like semi-hysterical and started calling my friends."

Ms. Clark said she had "about 35 minutes of being rich and anxiety-ridden. Then I came to my senses and called Barry and Enright and said, 'I think you have grossly overpaid me.' The accountant checked the records and then there was this long pause.

"Then she said, 'Oh my God, how did this happen?' I said, 'How do you think I feel. This is the hardest phone call I've ever had to make."

Dan Enright, one of the show's producers, said he was the last of three people who approved the check. He said the incident, "proves we're vulnerable.'

He offered Ms. Clark a trip around the world for her honesty. She said she hopes to take the trip around the first of the year.

Bank employee leaves desk just in time

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — It might have been Stephen Littauer's best career move when he left his vice president's desk at a downtown bank last week.

On Monday, a car crashed through the bank's huge plate glass window, demolishing the desk and everything around it.

Littauer's job, and the desk, hadn't been filled.

The driver, Frankie Lee Woodall, 55, suffered a small scrape on a finger. He said his car's accelerator stuck as he was leaving a parking lot across the street from the bank.

The car missed the front of Myrna Daniels' desk by only a few feet. Last year, she said, a truck careened off a car in the street and came through the window behind her.

Mrs. Daniels said she was considering asking that her desk be moved.

U.S. auto sales fall, imports rise

DETROIT — April car sales by U.S. automakers fell 1.3 percent from the same month a year ago, with the domestic companies losing ground as imports claimed 28.7 percent of the U.S. market, according to company reports released Tuesday.

The five major domestic manufacturers said they sold 533,724 cars in April, compared with 540,680 in April 1980. Imported makes accounted for 215,309 sales during the month, up 6.6 percent from 201,930 last year. The imports' market share was an April record.

Chrysler Corp. reported a 51 percent sales improvement from last year, selling 71,843 cars in April against 47,470 in the 1980 month. Ford Motor Co. sales also were up to 123,807, 8.9 percent more than the 113,682 sold in the same month last year.

Inmate gets conditional release

SANTA FE, N.M. - Gov. Bruce King has granted a conditional release to a former state prison inmate whose taped conversations with El Paso, Texas, gambler Jimmy Chagra might link Chagra to the unsolved murder of a Texas federal judge, the inmate's attorney said Tuesday.

Santa Fe attorney Don Montoya said in return, his client, Jerry Ray James, is to cooperate with federal authorities in their investigation of the May 29, 1979, killing of U.S. District Judge John Wood.

Wood, known as "Maximum John" for his stiff sentences to drug offenders, was killed by a single bullet from a sniper's rifle as he left his San Antonio townhouse.

King signed an executive order Monday granting the release.

U.S. Attorney R.E. Thompson said Tuesday in Albuquerque that the release will become effective "upon the certification by the United States that James had testified and fulfilled certain conditions in connection with a pending major investigation and contemplated prosecution."

James, serving a life sentence for armed robbery, was transferred to the federal prison at Leavenworth following the Feb. 2-3, 1980, riot at the New Mexico prison in which 33 inmates were killed.

Mystery unfolds

The experiment was a success.

For the first time, cameras were allowed in the Kansas Supreme Court Monday to tape a potentially landmark case in which a woman is suing her husband for damages because of personal injuries received in an accident.

The cameras proved to be an unobtrusive element in the courtroom. There were no blinding camer lights, no grinding camera motors to distract the proceedings.

More importantly, the proceedings did not turn into a three-ring circus with attorneys playing to the cameras. While one attorney admitted he practiced his arguments more because of the cameras, this can only benefit the client.

Although the cameras were allowed Monday the public should keep in mind it was only an experiment and demand the rules barring phot coverage be changed.

The workings of the U.S. court system should not remain a mystery.

Editor,

The 1979 student referendum dealing with student funding of a coliseum has been rejected by our illustrious Student Senate.

Obviously the '79 referendum was archaic in that it did not supply enough of a student financial contribution. Students may now be required to finance up to one-third the cost of a $20 million coliseum, which could mean an increase of fees three times that required by the '79 referendum. Does the thought of pricing ourselves out of an education worry you?

We have created a student governing system worthy of our apathy, a system which is unrepresentational, yet workable in that it can muddle through one meeting after another. The administration has targeted the students in its desire for monetary coliseum support. Obviously our administration is composed of, let's say, competent, intelligent individuals, capable of assessing a critical situation. We now have a Student Governing Association blindly following the dictates of the administration.

Our student body president has frustrations about student input for the coliseum, stating that the average student lacks the information. Senate, elected by approximately 10 percent of the student body, has decided to "reaffirm its commitment to a coliseum. The administration said a coliseum would be good for K-State, the relevance of which leaves questions as students struggle with tuition increases. Economic deprivation of students is fair as long as the University is

We are now in an unusual situation in which we are learning not only the specifics of majors, but the generalities of life and its responsibilities. If our attitudes toward our current government is any indication of our future behavior, we must pity not only the future K-State students, but our own children for the legacy we will leave them.

There is still time for a change. Ask for information. Use it to get involved on any scale you desire. Then, if there is a need, demand a referendum. Place decisions such as funding a coliseum with the people they affect most-yourselves.

SORRY, DEAR ... BUT ACCORDING TO NEW FEDERAL GUIDELINES, YOU JUST DON'T CLASSIFY AS A TRULY NEEDY ...

-Kent Singer

From here to eternity

One day not too long ago I packed underwear, speakers, ski posters. the Tolkien trilogy and other invaluables into my Datsun and puttered into Manhattan. That trek was the beginning of a four-year experience that, for me, will culminate in 12 days.

Graduation day is supposed to be the highlight of a college career. The time when relatives gather to celebrate the acceptance of another of their kin into society. Sorry, but the euphoria hasn't overwhelmed me.

THERE ARE SO many strange feelings associated with leaving this place. I've sampled the whole color chart of available emotions and none of them are really appropriate. The blue melancholy was no good because I'm truly looking forward to a change of venue and attitude. The bubbly red didn't work either because I'll desperately miss the people I have to leave behind. I'm afraid the result has been some shade of lumpy oatmeal.

I have to look back just this once and contemplate what has happened in the course of four years. All those friends, mistakes, tests, regrets, laughs, teachers, sorrows, triumphs. They run together in a panorama of blurred memories. More lumpy oatmeal.

Some items do stand above my memory and scream for attention. They are the highlights, the things upon which careers and lives are built. Like camping at Hackberry Glen before it was closed. Or buying gag gifts at Christmas.

Those are things that aren't included in the catalog.

Nor is the clandestine class that teaches children how to become adults. It isn't listed in the line schedule. You can't enroll in it, get tutored for it, drop it, add it, skip it, or evaluate its teachers. But it's in session every day.

The transformation of juveniles into adults could be the most significant mission accomplished by the University. There should be a recipe: combine a bit of frustration, a pinch of uncertainty. a dash of misplaced pride. Vigorously shake this concoction of foibles, pour it into a chilled glass and swallow hard. Instant maturity.

make skeptics of the most naive young minds. Philosophy professors convince us that man is evil and geology instructors tell us there is no God. Or is it the other way around?

If these things are true, how can we be expected to believe in the Tooth Fairy, the Holy Grail, or Duane Acker?

Perhaps there is a clue here to the most precious tool that can be obtained from the University. The lubricant that can free ideas from the rustiest minds.

It's called independent thought. The opiate of academia. If I leave here with only the ability to think rationally and independently, the time spent will have been worthwhile. I really believe that.

IT'S TIME TO finally get on with it. No more playing around. The real world is waiting. For all of you who have jobs waiting, congratulations. It's time to jump into society.

Just remember that if you want to change something, get off your butt and do it. Don't become complacent in a world that encourages complacency.

For those who have more school FOUR YEARS OF college can ahead, relax. Enjoy the protection of college. It won't last long.

Guidelines exist

The April 29 Collegian article on sexual harrassment quotes me as stating that K-State's affirmative action policy includes no statement on sexual harassment. This is not so. Chapter 7, "Sex Discrimination Guidelines" of the plan includes the following statement:

"It is a violation of Kansas State University policy for supervisors authorized to recommend or take personnel actions affecting employees to make sexual advances toward employees under their supervision, grant, recommend or refuse to take any personnel action on the basis of sexual favors, take or fail to take a personnel action as a reprisal against an employee for reporting a sexual advance.

Administrative personnel who become aware of the existence of sexual harassment, as described above, or employees who believe they are subject to such treatment should discuss the matter with the Affirmative Action Office so that appropriate corrective action may be taken."

Seminar on business analyzes women's management careers

By CONNIE CLOWE Collegian Reporter

The outlook for women in management is one of "unlimited opportunities" in the '80s. That's the opinion of Paula Welch, Customer Services Supervisor for Southwestern Bell in Mission, Kan.

Welch spoke on "Management Careers by Plan-Not Compromise," at a seminar for business women Tuesday at the University Ramada Inn. The seminar, analyzing the role of women in management positions, was sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, College of Business Adminstration, and the Small Business Administration.

Welch's advice for business women of today is to develop a career plan to help them reach realistic goals. The plan should help a woman get to know, improve and believe in herself, she said.

In today's male-dominated society there are many problems and personal difficulties facing women in management, she said.

"There are a lot of stumbling blocks that will come up along the way, and we can't be afraid to take the risks to overcome them," Welch said.

SHE CITED lack of experience and education as two such obstacles. She also noted the strain of having a career and raising a family.

Although Welch is a single parent raising four sons, she said she is still capable of handling her job while facing the challenge of working herself into a higher position in her company.

'Even though it may be hard to balance a career and family, it can be done," she said.

Kansas City viaduct to close for repairs

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) - The westbound lanes of the Lewis and Clark Viaduct, the Interstate 70 route across the Kaw River which links the two Kansas Cities, will be closed at least two years to repair cracks in supporting beams, highway officials said Tuesday.

"I cannot be assured the bridge is safe for continued use," Kansas Department of Transportation Secretary John Kemp said in announcing the May 14 closing. "It's just much too serious an issue to run a risk with."

Traffic will be re-routed until October or November, when repairs are finished on a parallel viaduct that carries eastbound traffic. At that time a divider will be installed to separate the four-lane roadway into two lanes in each direction.

Highway officials said that allowing normal traffic on the viaduct could eventually cause beams to give way, plunging pavement and vehicles about 100 feet to the

Officials reported 109 cracks, some as long as 16 inches, in the westbound viaduct support structure. Two years ago inspectors found only seven or eight.

Kemp said it will cost $5 million to replace 1,100 feet of roadway and support beams in the 1.5 mile viaduct. He said if federal funds cannot be obtained, some state projects might have to be sacrificed.

One key for women to cope with career stress is to remain flexible, develop patience and self-esteem. Women have to make a lot of "hard decisions" in their careers, she said, and "compromising with an ultimate goal in mind is all right."

"I feel that even though you may know the skills that are required of the job, women need to be a little better and work a little harder than men to excel," she said.

SANDY COYNER, director of Women's Studies at K-State, also spoke at the seminar on "Combatting Sexism and Sexual Harassment in Employment."

She agreed with Welch that women must perform their job skills better than men to hold the same positions.

"Business is established in accordance with a male model. Women must understand the system to overcome and fit into it," Coyner said.

According to Coyner, women face difficult situations such as being sexually discriminated against, being stereotyped into a certain role, and having family ties that will hold them back from advancement.

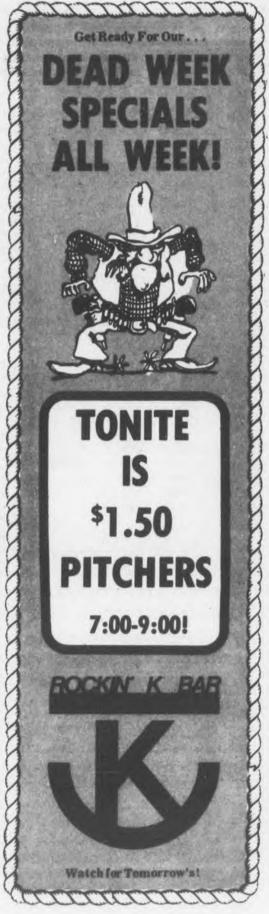

"Women don't need anything special, we are not fundamentally inferior," Coyner said. "If we could somehow get rid of sexism, we wouldn't need any sort of special education."

BOTH COYNER AND WELCH said women need to learn from each other and stop looking negatively at themselves.

Women shouldn't be afraid to be in the spotlight or afraid of success, Coyner said.

According to Welch, a woman must like herself, then decide what level of commitment she has to her career.

"There is a place for you in the business world if you work hard," Welch said. "Many businesses realize the abilities of women and will give us the opportunities we deserve."

Lindamood discusses elderly home options

Collegian Reporter

Looking at all available housing options and making a choice from that selection is important in housing for the elderly, according to Suzanne Lindamood, assistant professor of family economics and Manhattan city commissioner.

"We need to allow people to have the housing of their choice and the community policies, services and transportation should meet their own needs," she said.

In her Tuesday speech, "Housing Options for the Elderly," Lindamood presented four basic policy questions. Her presentation was part of a Center for Aging seminar.

Lindamood's first policy question was: What should be subsidized—housing units or

"We need to have a greater emphasis on those who wish to remain in their own homes in allowing them to do so," she said.

One way to accomplish this is to provide services such as Meals on Wheels and transportation, she said.

"The advantage of the services is that the various levels of need are met. Some don't need much help and the services are able to adapt to these people," Lindamood said.

ANOTHER POINT LINDAMOOD questioned was the amount of elderly household income that is applied toward house or rent payments.

"The elderly renters are worse off than the elderly homeowners because most elderly homeowners have their mortgages paid off or are paying a small, fixed amount," she said. "The renters are much more a victim of inflation."

Another consideration in housing for the elderly is how community policy may in-

By JEAN DILLBECK crease or decrease housing options for them, Lindamood said. Zoning codes often influence housing structures, she said.

"It is very common to have a minimum structure size, which makes it hard to build small housing units," Lindamood said.

Alternatives such as duplexes and townhouses would be desirable, although it is sometimes difficult to introduce these types of housing in small towns, she said.

THE TOPIC OF subsidizing rentals versus subsidizing owning homes was the third basic policy question Lindamood discussed.

"Seventy-five percent of all elderly households are home-owners," she said, "however, the median value of homes is less for the elderly."

In a 1976 survey by the Montgomery Ala., Planning Commission, 69 percent of those surveyed who were 65 years or older preferred owner occupany, however only 64 percent actually owned their homes, she said.

"More elderly prefer to live in their own home than actually do," Lindamood said.

THE FINAL policy question considered types of housing units, and age-integrated housing versus age-segregated housing.

The survey showed that there was much dislike for high-rise units, Lindamood said, and that single families preferred to live close to other single family homes.

"Even if there is a waiting list to get into homes, other options available need to be looked at," Lindamood said. "When there is self selection in homes, you expect to find a certain level of satisfaction in those who pick a certain type of housing because they have checked out all possibilities."

Mayor arrested twice for DWI

JUNCTION CITY (AP) - The mayor of on his own recognizance again and was Junction City, arrested twice Tuesday morning on drunken driving charges, says he has learned the danger of mixing medication and alcohol.

"I've got six medications. It just doesn't do any good to have two or three beers," Mayor Larry Plaggerman, 44, said Tuesday. Plaggerman said he is on medication to relieve back pains that developed after he slipped on wet grass during a golf course dedication last month.

"I feel extremely bad about it, but what

Update

Voth joins Indiana University Libraries

Sally Voth, acting dean of libraries, will become the assistant director for technical services for the Indiana University Libraries, Bloomington, on Sept. 1.

Her new job will include planning administrative activities and technical service policies. She will also coordinate technical services operations among the Bloomington libraries and will direct a staff of 121 employees, including 25 professional librarians.

Voth graduated from K-State in 1962 and has been a library faculty member at the University since 1974.

Scientist receives national award

Erle Bartley, professor of animal science, received a $1,000 award and citation Saturday in New Orleans. He was selected to receive the "National Award for Agricultural Excellence" by the National Agri-Marketing Association.

He is an international authority on cattle nutrition and has pioneered research on growth response to antibiotics. He holds five patents for "Bloatguard," a legume bloat drug; "Starea," a feedlot bloat drug; a synthetic polymer to replace roughae; and two starchurea liquid supplements.

Soils judging team places third

The K-State soils judging team placed third of 17 teams at the 21st national soils judging contest, recently held in Lincoln, Neb.

First place went to the University of Wisconsin-Platteville and Purdue University came in second. Eight regions across the United States were represented in the contest. The K-State team represented Region V after winning the regional contest in October.

The top judger on the team was Doug Packer, senior in agronomy. He placed sixth out of 65 contestants. Other team members were Maryann Samson, senior in agronomy; Daniel Robison, sophomore in natural resource management; and John Dillon, junior in natural resource management. The team was coached by Orville Bidwell, professor of agronomy.

Shepard receives faculty award

The 33rd recipient of K-State's Distinguished Graduate Faculty Award will be James Shepard, professor of plant pathology.

He was selected for the honor by a faculty committee. The judging was based on achievements and on written evaluations by experts in various fields. He will be recognized and presented a $1,000 honorarium at the University's graduate commencement ceremony, May 15.

Shepard is an internationally-known authority on plant tissue culture and genetic engineering. As a result of one of his research projects, it is now possible to clone potatoes to obtain higher-yielding, more disease resistant crops.

Grant funds leaf temperature research

The Department of Agronomy has received a special research grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Science and Education Administration, to study genetic manipulation of leaf temperatures in soybeans.

The research will be supervised by Bill Schapaugh, assistant professor of agronomy, and Edward Kanemasu, professor of agronomy. The grants, totalling $98,606, were issued Friday and will run until Sept. 30, 1985.

The research project will examine the relationships between soybean canopy leaf temperature, seed yield, water-use efficiency and stress tolerance. Environmental stresses are a major problem for soybean producers in the United States.

K-State telefund raises $132,000

The KSU Foundation's second annual spring Telefund during April raised $132,000 in pledges for the Colleges of Business Administration, Home Economics, Architecture and Design, and Education.

Pledges from 9,021 alumni were solicited by about 600 students, faculty members and alumni representing the four colleges. They contacted the alumni through a bank of telephones in the Union throughout the month.

The College of Home Economics was pledged $42,576; Business Aministration, $40,082; Education, $32,084; and Architecture and Design, $15,625.

Commission OKs bonds study; approves improvement district

Collegian Reporter

Among several requests presented to the Manhattan City Commission last night at City Hall, two proposals for improving the downtown were approved.

One of the requests approved at the meeting was a proposal by Downtown Inc. to form a planning committee for the establishment of a business improvement

The business improvement district was made possible through a state law passed during this legislative session, according to Gary Stith, director of community development.

Under the law, businesses are allowed to form a district in which they share expenses such as snow removal, landscaping, and holiday decorations.

"The benefit district would require provisions for beautification, such as benches; public service, such as sanitation; promotions for community events and others," said Larry MacPhee, president of Downtown Inc.

"This is the first step in formation of a planning committee to establish a district, boundaries of the district, and fees to be charged to members in the district. Once these are established we would report back to this governing body," he said. If the benefit district were established, membership would be mandatory.

"The nature of a volunteer organization is that in a specific area of businesses only 10 percent of the business people are active.

By GERI GREENE This would establish that all business people in the district would be members of the district," MacPhee said.

> ANOTHER PROPOSAL for improving downtown was also approved.

The second proposal was by First Securities Company of Wichita for a feasibility study of commercial rehabilitation revenue bonds for a loan program to businesses downtown, not included in the downtown redevelopment proposal, and in Aggieville.

The feasibility study would not cost the city unless the program was not used by merchants, at which time the city would be asked to cover costs of the study up to $4,000, he said.

"The proposal would use tax exempt bonds as loans to lenders, banks, and then the banks would loan money to businesses for rehabilitation purposes," Stith said.

"This would be an incentive for improvements and upgrading of businesses outside the redevelopment area," he said. 'Local financial institutions were very interested in this type of a program."

IN OTHER BUSINESS, the commissioners adopted a resolution to enter into a contract with Union Pacific Railroad for preliminary engineering and cost estimates for relocation of Union Pacific marshalling yards. Relocation is being considered because of the proposed southern arterial which will cross the area where the marshalling yards are now located.

Arts in the Park marks grand opening for gallery

The Mobile Art Gallery, a trailer which travels around Manhattan and stops to display local artists' works, will come to a halt in City Park for "Arts in the Park" this summer, according to Alice Carroll, director of the gallery.

The Mobile Art Gallery, which is coordinated by the Manhattan Recreation Commission and has been traveling since April, will be based in the park on June 5 for Arts in the Park, Carroll said. June 5 will be the "grand, grand opening" for the gallery, she said. The festivities will include folk singer Jimmy Driftwood; representatives from the Kansas Arts Commission; local dignitaries, such as city commissioners; and a special guest speaker, yet to be announced.

The first Arts in the Park showing from June 5-14 will be a professional exhibit of prints, sculptures and ceramics.

The next showing, from June 15-26, will probably be an exhibit of water colors, Carroll said.

The theme of the June 27 through July 17 showing will be "Touch and See." Threedimensional work will be exhibited and the public will be able to touch the sculpture pieces, Carroll said.

Because the Children's Theater is performing a musical during the July 20-27 showing, "Theater Art" will be the theme of the Art Gallery during that time. Theater art such as costume rendering will be on July 27-30, the Mobile Art Gallery will move to CiCo Park for the Riley County Fair. Western Art will be the theme and bronze western sculptures and paintings in the New Mexico style will be exhibited, Carroll said.

After this showing, the gallery will close for three weeks, then re-open downtown during the first week of September.

The gallery will follow the same schedule as it did this spring, moving to Wal-Mart, Blue Hills Shopping Center, Alco and then K-State. The gallery will stay at each location from Saturday through Thursday and will be open from noon to 7 p.m. At K-State, the gallery will be open from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The gallery is funded through contributions, Carroll said, and estimated yearly costs are between $16,000 and $18,000.

Journalism department receives full accreditation after changes

Collegian Reporter

The Department of Journalism and Mass Communications' news-editorial, radio-TV and public relations options were granted full accreditation Saturday by the American Council on Education for Journalism

The news-editorial option, which was already accredited, had been put on probation following a visit last May to the department by an ACEJ accreditation committee.

The radio-TV and public relations options were given provisionary accreditation status after an ACEJ accreditation committee visited the department, said Harry Marsh, head of the journalism department. The curriculums were not fully accredited immediately because the ACEJ said some improvements needed to be made in the program.

FULL ACCREDITATION for all three options was granted after the department submitted a report to ACEJ, describing the measures that had been taken to meet the committee's recommendations, Marsh said. This was the first time the public relations and the radio-TV options had been considered for accreditation.

"What accreditation means is that you have met the minimum requirements of an excellent program," Marsh said. "A substantial number of internships and scholarships are only offered to schools accredited by the ACEJ."

Accreditation will give the public relations curriculum recognition in the professional field, said Harold Shaver, head of the public relations curriculum and associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

"Only about 24 (schools) have been accredited (in public relations)," he said. "So we will be among the elite schools of public relations and the only one in Kansas."

Paul Prince, head of the radio-TV curriculum, and associate professor of journalism and mass communications, said he was "delighted" to hear about receiving full accreditation.

THE ACEJ listed seven improvements the department needed to make before the provisionary and probationary conditions could be changed.

The first consideration dealt with "instruction for all majors dealing with the role, history and functions of the media...giving all majors a similar background," according to recommendations in the letter received from the "Freshmen starting next year in the fall in the department will be required to take Survey of the Mass Media (an introductory course)," Marsh said.

Because the ACEJ believes law has increased in importance to journalists, Law of Mass Communications will also be required for print journalism students, beginning in the fall of 1982. All radio-TV students will be required to take Radio and TV Regulation and Responsibility.

The ACEJ committee also suggested a change in the core requirements of the College of Arts and Sciences. This provision was taken care of under a change in the

By STEVE CULVER college which will require additional courses in humanities, social sciences and international studies for all incoming freshman in the college.

> OTHER AREAS the ACEJ believed the department needed improvement in were advising, "coordination of syllabi in section courses," and an organized system to track alumni of the department.

> "We have made improvements in all of these areas," Marsh said.

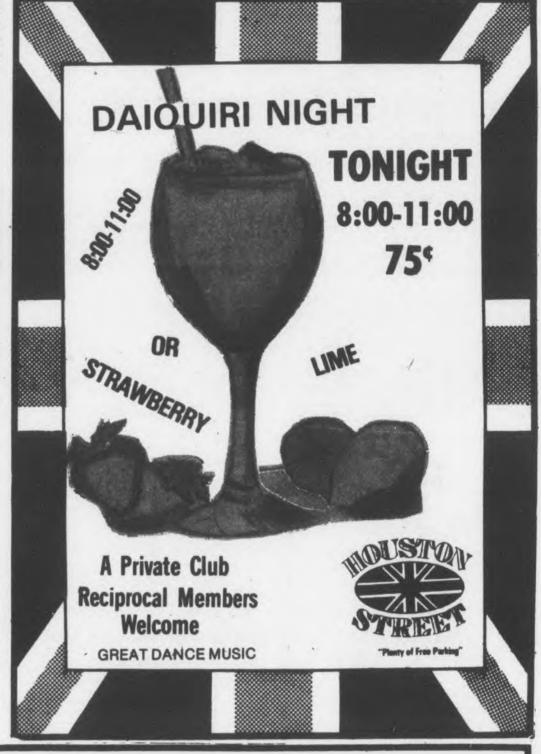

> The final area the ACEJ asked for improvement in was "the relationship between broadcasting and other students in the department.'

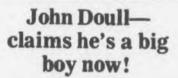

One of the problems has been that the radio-TV sequence is based in McCain Auditorium, while the rest of the journalism department is in Kedzie Hall.

Requiring the survey course for all journalism majors is expected to increase the unity of the program. The department also will establish a student committee of the presidents of the student journalism organizations. Marsh said he hoped the committee would increase communication between the students in the different options and between the students and faculty.

Reagan continues lobbying

House hears vote on budget plan

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan Congress to follow later in the year. The lobbied down to the wire Tuesday, leaving nothing to chance as the House neared a vote on a 1982 budget blueprint likely to wind up much to his liking.

"You know me. I run scared all the time." Reagan said at the White House.

By most counts, however, conservative Democrats stood ready to join with the Republican minority to hand Reagan a stunning victory in the House-a budget plan tailor-made for his deep spending cuts and three-year, 30 percent income tax rate reduction.

Despite pessimism from Democratic leaders fighting the Reagan plan, White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes predicted the final vote, expected Wednesday or Thursday, will be close.

DEMOCRATS MET privately before the House went into session Tuesday, and Speaker Thomas O'Neill, Jr. (D-Mass.), an opponent of the Reagan budget plan, said afterwards, "I only can hope and pray and trust we changed some minds."

At issue is a bill to set guidelines for final decisions on the spending cuts and the precise size and shape of the tax bill won't be known for weeks or months.

The plan Reagan is backing calls for spending $688.8 billion and anticipates a deficit of $31 billion in 1982 and a balanced budget in 1984. It instructs the committees of Congress to slash $36.6 billion in spending for next year.

An alternative backed by the Democratic leadership calls for spending $714.5 billion, including more than Reagan would on social programs, and leaves a deficit of $25.6. It has room for only a one-year tax cut, smaller than the first year of the administration's threeyear plan.

REAGAN, WHO ushered more than two dozen Republicans and Democrats into the Oval Office for soft-sell lobbying in the last week, invited several more as the time neared for the House to begin voting.

Speaking with reporters before a private luncheon, the president declined to acknowledge that he appeard to be on the brink of a victory. "I'm going to wait for the The president's schedule includes "a couple of dozen" congressmen this afternoon, he said, adding that this "indicates we are still concerned about the vote."

No final passage was expected on the House floor until later in the week, but there were several early votes to demonstrate the strong pro-defense feeling in the House and gauge the diminishing strength of Democratic liberals.

Aides predicted passage for an amendment to increase authority for defense spending, a move sanctioned by Democratic leaders trying to pick up votes for their alternative to Reagan's budget.

Horses at school help students find serenity, alleviate pressure and LESLIE FROST Collegian Reporters

The road to Bill McClintock's barn leads away from the pressures of college life to the serenity of the country. In the eight-stall barn, Kevin Dwyer, senior in food science and management, brushes a honey-colored horse with quick strokes. Dim lights barely reveal the contours of the barn's wooden walls. Horses move quietly in their stalls. A hay bale leans against a wall, its end sections falling lazily. Two dogs settle down near a friendly hand, and a cat surveys the land from the back of a pick-up parked outside the barn.

McDermott and Sabie have been companions for 13 years. McDermott is typical students who don't want to leave their horses behind when she came to school.

As she sat on an overturned water bucket in McClintock's barn, she talked about her 13-year relationship with Sabie.

"The main reason I brought school was so I could have her where I could take care of her...and get her out so I could keep up my riding," she said.

AFTER THREE semesters at K-State without her horse, McDermott was able to bring Sabie to school this spring.

McDermott doesn't consider the time she spends with Sabie as interfering with school. "It's more of a good break to get away from the apartment," she said. (See HORSE, p.12)

It was hard to believe a boy like Tom Harper could be so desperately ill. Or that anyone could fight so hard to live. When he was under treatment and so weak he could hardly walk, Tom still came to practice. He'd marked out his own program for survival. To get back in shape and somehow speed the recovery he never lost hope would come.

For Tom it wasn't too late. Something new called combination chemotherapy was just beginning to be used. There are almost 2 million Americans like Tom who've beaten cancer.

But for many patients just as determined and hopeful, the treatments that could save them have not yet been found. That's why the American Cancer Society is asking for your support. Through research, rehabilitation and education, they're making your contributions count.

McDermott spends at least an hour every day at McClintock's. On some days she just cleans Sabie's stall and feeds and brushes the mare. Sabie is fed twice a day

"I'm feeding her at night and buying my own grain (a mixture of sweet feed and oats)," McDermott said.

McClintock supplies brome hay for Sabie and feeds her in the morning.

Most stable owners in the Manhattan area supply part or all of the feed and labor for boarders. They usually charge a base rate for a pen or stall and add the cost of feed and labor.

"It's cheaper for me to keep her (Sabie) here than at home," McDermott said.

THE BOARDING stable where McDermott kept her horse at home in Leavenworth cost her $30 more than McClintock's. The stable was larger and provided all of the labor. At McClintock's, McDermott does most of the work herself.

Feed is the biggest expense in keeping Sabie at school.

"She'll go through 100 pounds of grain in two weeks," McDermott said.

Other costs which were included in boarding bills in Leavenworth that she must now pay for separately are vaccinations and worming expenses.

When McDermott rides, she usually spends about 21/2 hours with her horse.

She rides both English and Western styles and has competed in English classes at horse shows-which can take a lot of preparation and money.

Her preparations to show Sabie include "refreshing" the mare-practicing turns on the forehand and haunches-and gymnastic exercises. Preparations also involve bathing Sabie and braiding her mane and tail before each show.

ONE DISADVANTAGE McDermott has in boarding her horse at school is transportation to the stables. She usually has to get rides with other students who keep their horses at McClintock's.

Kevin Dwyer also boards a horse at McClintock's. But unlike McDermott, Dwyer hasn't owned the same horse for 13 years.

French presidential candidates debate 2 key campaign issues

PARIS (AP) - In a televised debate Tuesday night that could tip the scales in the presidential election, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Socialist Francois Mitterrand struck at two key themes-unemployment and a Communist role in government.

The face-to-face encounter, giving both men their last big chance to reach the voters before Sunday's runoff election, ran 25 minutes over the scheduled 110 minutes. They also debated foreign policy, the economy, nuclear energy and defense.

Giscard d'Estaing, shown by polls to be running slightly behind Mitterrand, turned the first 35 minutes into an argument over how the Socialist challenger would govern with the Communist Party support he would need.

Mitterrand counterattacked on the economic record of the last seven years under Giscard d'Estaing, which has left 1.6 million unemployed.

While the president spoke of his experience with "tough moments" and called Mitterrand a "minister of words," Mitterrand pointed out that he had built the Socialists into the largest single party in the nation over the past decade.

Giscard d'Estaing, 55, hoped the debate would be a turning point in his battle for the votes of 36 million Frenchmen. Mitterrand, 64 and less forceful as a public speaker than the president, was considered the loser in their last debate seven years ago and Giscard d'Estaing went on to win the election.

At Mitterrand's insistence, the debate was supposed to use the same formula as the U.S. presidential debate last fall, with journalists asking questions. Jean Boissanat of L'Expansion, an economic magazine, and Michele Cotta, a political reporter for Radio Television Luxembourg, did guide the discussion and kept track of the time.

But the two candidates often talked past them and spent much of the time in a Frenchstyle face-to-face encounter that Giscard d'Estaing had wanted.

Workers fix water service for Hawiian leprosy colony victims of leprosy living in an isolated colony on a Hawaiian island got their water turned on again Tuesday after four days of strict rationing.

But the patients in the Kalaupapa Leprosy Settlement, which is vulnerable to the quirks of nature, are accustomed to losing their water and sometimes their electricity.

After a landslide last Thursday destroyed a reservoir dam serving the settlement, residents were restricted to five hours of water service a day. One dialysis patient was airlifted to Honolulu, but officials said no one was in danger. Many residents bathed in the sea and hauled salt water for household needs.

A 13-man crew worked for four days, often waist-deep in mud, to connect water pipes linking the colony with a freshwater stream in a nearby valley.

"It's all solved," Dr. Oliver Hasselblad, medical director of the settlement, said Tuesday. He said an engineer from the state Health Department, which administers the settlement, would be arriving to decide on repairs to the dam.

"The settlement is an accident of history, and it's just a dreadful pity that we have to be so vulnerable," he said. "It's not engineering or anything else, it's just geography that makes us vulnerable to

NO INJURIES occurred in the landslide, which took place in Kalawao Valley, about four miles from the well-ordered, tree-lined streets of Kalaupapa.

The town was laid out in the early 1900s by the territory of Hawaii as a home for leprosy patients exiled to the isolated peninsula. A mule trail but no road descends the sheer cliffs from "topside" Molokai, fifth largest island in Hawaii.

Supplies reach the settlement on two barges a year and in daily flights.

The peninsula, bounded on one side by crashing breakers and on the other by the rugged escarpment, was set aside in 1866 by the king of Hawaii as a place of banishment for victims of leprosy, for which neither the cause nor the cure was then known. Leprosy is a chronic infectious disease characterized by nodules, ulcers, white scaly scabs, deformities and wasting away of body parts.

IN THE 1940s, sulfone drugs were discovered to treat the disease successfully, and since 1969 patients have been free to come and go.

But many patients, having spent more than half their lives at the settlement and fearing a lingering public stigma, have chosen to remain residents.

Extension library continues despite federal cutbacks

By SHERRY BROWN Collegian Reporter

The K-State Division of Cooperative Extension library boasts a reserve of 10 million copies of publications. That number is not likely to change significantly, despite an end to the production of federal publications by the Reagan administration, Gary Vacin, associate professor of extension information, said.

"We will either do more (publications) locally, or do without in certain areas," Vacin said. "The decisions will be made at the department level."

The extension service acts as a channel for publications, sending them to county agents, he said. The publications can come either from the federal government, other extension agencies or the K-State extension service, he said.

Only 5 to 10 percent of the publications the extension service stocks are federal publications, Vacin said. The federal publications, which come from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, cover general topics such as "Your Retirement—A Financial Planning Guide" and "Trees for Shade and Beauty-Selection and Care."

LOCAL PUBLICATIONS are more useful because they are geared toward Kansans, he said. Topics on subjects including "Rural Recreation Potential in Kansas" and "Kansas Specialty Breads" are covered in local publications.

"A much higher percentage of publications are printed here," Vacin said. "Most are printed at the duplicating center or the state press or at university publications."

The extension service is trying to print more materials at the duplicating center, which it operates, in order to cut costs, he said. Currently, 43 percent of the publications are printed at the center in Weber Hall, Vacin said.

The extension service is also trying to consolidate publications and encourage county extension agents to make wise use of them, Vacin said.

"We are trying to do a better job. There is always going to be a little waste," he said. "We're taking a hard look at which publications are needed."

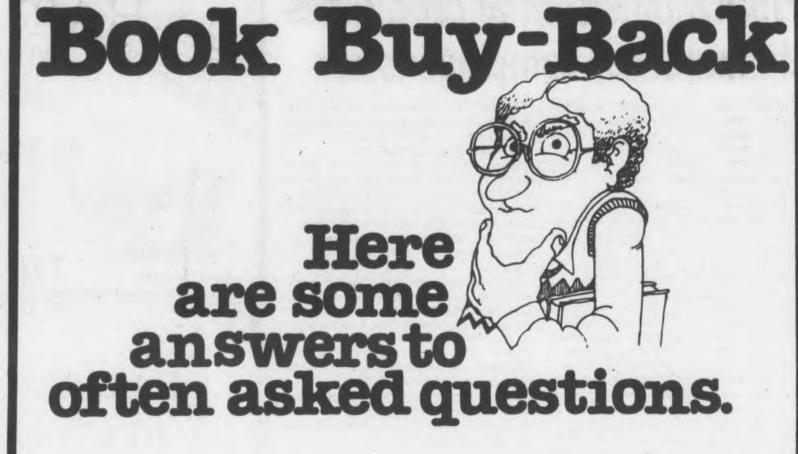

ALTHOUGH THE extension program will lose some federal money, the Reagan administration has treated it favorably, Vacin said. Extension is one of only three departments that is not facing proposed budget cuts, he said.

"The comments we've heard from Secretary of Agriculture John Block are that he's been strong on agricultural extension and agricultural research," Vacin said. "Traditionally, extension programs have done better under Republican administrations than Democratic."

A budget increase of 9.7 percent is predicted for the extension services, he said. The increase will still not be enough to keep up with inflation, Vacin said.

"We're up against inflation," he said. "At best it will break us even, and in the long run we'll be going downhill."

QUESTION: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

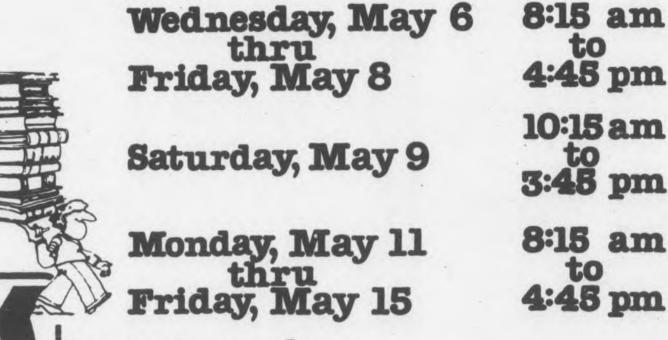

What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Carlin guarantees vetoing parts of omnibus appropriations bill

TOPEKA (AP) — Angered by what he called a "truly disgraceful exhibition" on school funding, Gov. John Carlin said Tuesday he could guarantee the omnibus appropriations bill sent to him when the Legislature adjourned "is not going to go through as is."

Based on legal advice he's received, Carlin said, he believes he can veto items selectively in the bill "to do what needs to be done," although he did not rule out the possibility of vetoing the entire measure.

See related story, p. 16

He declined to speculate about possibly vetoing the bill and calling the Legislature into special session to run a new one, saying, "I'm not going to rule out any option today."

A new bill also could be drafted and passed if the full Legislature returned for sine die adjournment, set for May 29.

THE REPUBLICAN majority, in effect, built a new school finance plan into the omnibus bill, setting a school district budget limitation of 5 percent to 8 percent next year and arranging $8.3 million more in property tax relief.

That action was the focal point of the Democratic governor's wrath at a news conference the day after adjournment. He called it "one of the most chaotic and irresponsible legislative sessions in Kansas history."

"This session was exemplary only in its incoherence," Carlin said. "It was outstanding only in its ultimate failure to address the real problems faced by Kansans. Unfortunately, commitment, determination and fortitude were replaced by fear, political desperation and weakness."

Rather than addressing the need for more revenue forthrightly, he said, "They chose to diminish the quality of education in Kansas in a halfheared and unsuccessful attempt to prevent property tax increases."

ASKED IF WHAT the Legislature did will improve chances of his severance tax proposal passing next year, he replied:

"I certainly think the ingredients are there for more pressure. But it's premature to assume the voices are there to pass it."

Carlin said the Legislature acted irresponsibly in sending him the omnibus bill with an 8 percent budget limitation for school districts which are below the statewide median in per-pupil expenditures, because they will never catch up with the more wealthy districts in support of education.

He also said it was irresponsible to take $1.44 million of the money to be collected by raising university student tuitions next fall and put it into school finance.

"I'm sure all the parents sending students to college this fall are going to be thrilled to know they are going to be paying extra to provide tax relief for others," he said.

CARLIN INDICATED he will try to veto the 8 percent budget limitation and the use of tuition money for property tax relief, but is uncertain how to do it until he receives the printed bill in its final form and can study it.

"The 5 to 8 percent provision was a TOPEKA (AP) — Angered by what he called a "truly disgraceful exhibition" on end to satisfy everyone and satisfying no school funding, Gov. John Carlin said one," he said.

The Legislature went through its fiscal gyrations just to reduce a projected property tax increase next fall from $43.8 million to $35.5 million, Carlin said, adding:

"I have a hard time agreeing with anyone that's great progress. The property tax-payers of this state aren't saying $35 million is great."

Asked why he was so critical of what the lawmakers did, when Republican leaders are proud of their accomplishments, Carlin answered, "They're trying to cover their tracks as best they can. Failure is not to be boasted of, but rather to be lamented."

ON OTHER legislation, Carlin said:

—He plans to sign a bill reducing valuations on powered farm machinery 10 percent a year for eight years to a base of 20 percent and 20 percent a year on non-powered equipment for four years, then initiate a legal test of its constitutionality.

—He has no objection to a legislative plan to audit six yet-to-be selected school districts to see how they spend the money the state sends them, but wants it done to obtain "productive results to evaluate the system," and not to "a negative statement on the quality of education."

Asked at the end of his news conference if he had any wedding plans to announce, the governor only smiled and said, "I told you I'd tell you."

His staff has confirmed he plans to marry a political aide, Karen Hurley, on May 29. It will be the second marriage for both.

Top Kansas legislators discount Carlin veto

TOPEKA (AP) — Top legislative leaders Tuesday discounted the prospect Gov. John Carlin will veto the $12 million omnibus appropriations bill because it limits budgeting authority of poor school districts and takes student tuition money for tax

"I'd be surprised if he vetoed the whole thing," said Senate President Ross Doyen (R-Concordia).

"To veto the bill would be very irresponsible," said House Ways and Means Chairman Mike Hayden (R-Atwood). "He would be, in fact, increasing property taxes by at least $16 million. Also, there are many other items in there crucial to state government."

The day after the Legislature adjourned, five leaders appeared at three news conferences to give assessments of the session—Doyen, Hayden, Speaker Wendell Lady, Senate Majority Leader Robert Talkington and Senate Ways and Means Chairman Paul Hess.

TALKINGTON, Iola Republican, who appeared with Doyen, said he thinks it will be very difficult for Carlin to make line item vetoes in the measure to remove the items the governor has criticized-a reduced budget limitation for some school districts and using student tuition money for tax relief.

Asked what the Legislature's reaction to a line item veto of just the school finance appropriations, Doyen replied: "We'll probably live with what we have now."

Talkington said, "It'd be totally irresponsible to veto an entire omnibus bill. There are too many agencies involved."

The leaders acknowleged the governor, if he vetoes any portion of the bill, a special

Bill rejection may call for special session to again address the issue of school finance.

All except Lady said he was proud the Legislature had reduced Carlin's budget so no new taxes were needed and achieved what they are billing as the first balanced state budget in at least 10 years.

ONLY LADY said he expects the governor's severance tax proposal to come back stronger than ever in 1982.

The leaders said raising more money for highways must be a priority of the 1982 session. Hayden said he wants to lay a bill increasing the gasoline tax on Carlin's desk next year to get the road revenue.

"The reason the Legislature did not pass such legislation this year is because of the governor's intimidation," he said. "He threatened to veto it, and I think next year we ought to lay it at his feet."

Hess (R-Wichita), chairman of the Senate budget committee, agreed with Hayden at their joint media appearance.

"This governor presented an all-or-nothing proposition on taxes," Hess said. "The governor tried for a marriage between the severance tax and property taxes and there is no relation there.'

HAYDEN AND HESS said Carlin tried to convince everybody a tax increase was unavoidable to sell his severance tax

"We had a governor who said the budget couldn't be funded without a tax increase. We proved him wrong," Hayden declared.

Lady, who met newsmen alone, said lack session could be called to force lawmakers of new highway funding was a major disappointment.

"We've got to do something about highways," the speaker said. "Every year we delay, it's costing us money. Deferred maintenance never pays off."

Lady said the severance tax will pass the Legislature in 1982. "Even among those who opposed the severance tax-both in the Senate and the House-there is much more talk about the possibility of a compromise,"

"There is no question it will be back. But it will not be back as the governor proposed it. That was the problem. He proposed 8 percent right off. There is a very, very good chance for a smaller amount."

EVEN HESS told reporters he was not unalterably opposed to the severance tax, "as long as it's not unreasonable."

But Hayden and Doyen maintained their positions no tax increases should be needed

"We haven't had a general tax increase in this state in 16 years and I don't see any need for any in the foreseeable future," Hayden

Rearing back...Louie Trujillo eyes the batter as he prepares to throw during the second game of the doubleheader against Emporia State Tuesday. Trujillo pitched the entire game in the 'Cats 5-0 win.

Pitchers hurl 'Cats to sweep

By RON BROWN
Collegian Reporter
"We made a lot of progress from last year."

Those were the words of K-State baseball coach Dave Baker after his Wildcats swept a doubleheader Tuesday from Emporia State by scores of 2-1 and 5-0.

Just how far they have come since last spring could have been measured by the complete-game pitching performances turned in by Mike Johnson and Louie Trujillo against the Hornets.

In the first game, Johnson raised his record to 5-4 with a three-hitter. His control was equally as fine as he issued only one walk and struck out seven.

Trujillo, who improved his mark to 4-1, went one up on Johnson by throwing a two-hitter

Both pitchers were backed by virtually flawless defensive play as the Wildcats committed only one error—that coming on a smash which handcuffed first baseman Joe Goedert in the fourth inning of the first game.

DESPITE THE LACK of hitting, Baker was impressed with the overall play of everyone in the lineup.

"The big thing that made me feel good today (Tuesday) was we did all the things we needed to do when they had to be done," he said. "We executed well. We just did the things we had to do at the right time."

Baker said it was the defense—not to mention the pitching—which kept K-State out of trouble.

"It (defense) made a big difference in the ball games," he said. "They had men in scoring position in almost every inning. Our defense just kept doing the job."

The lack of defense by the Hornets was costly, especially in the first game when K-State scored two unearned runs.

The Wildcats got their first run in the first inning after Emporia State starter Brent Dobbs, 6-5, issued a leadoff walk to second baseman Craig Danforth. He advanced to second on a single by third baseman Glynn Perry and scored with two outs when Hornet shortstop Gary Zych could not handle a ball hit by Goedert.

PERRY SCORED THE second and deciding run in the fourth inning. He led off with a single and took second when the ball got by center fielder Shawn Smith for the first of three errors in the inning. He crossed the plate when Emporia State catcher Mark Kendall, after picking up a ball hit by Goedert, fired a throw past first baseman

Jim Haynes

Meanwhile, Johnson kept the Hornets at bay until the sixth inning when they scored their only run. Zych led off with a single and raced home when the next batter, right fielder Brad Hill, doubled.

Playing to tie the game, Hornet coach Dave Bingham ordered a sacrifice from the clean-up man, designated hitter Mike Davis. The strategy backfired, however, when K-State catcher Dan Linden pounced on the ball and fired a strike to Perry at third base where the tag was made to end the threat.

defensive prowess again in the second game. After a leadoff single by Davis in the top of the second inning, shortstop Antonio Triplett took a base hit away from Smith when he dove behind second base to snag the ball, rolled over and threw a strike to Goedert while sitting on the ground.

Possibly sparked by the defensive gem, K-State proceeded to take a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the inning after left fielder Don Grause reached base on an error by Haynes. Following consecutive walks by Hornet starter Paul Stucky, 2-7, Grause scored on a squeeze bunt put down by center fielder Rob

The lead became 2-0 in the fourth inning on a two-out, basesloaded single by Danforth which scored Grause. The final three runs crosses the plate in the fifth inning.

Trujillo and company were so much in THE WILDCATS DISPLAYED their command of the situation that only one opposing runner reached third base safely.

The twin victories raised K-State's record to 32-19 and completed the home portion of the spring schedule. Emporia State, 26-26, was just one of several foes who fell prey to the Wildcats at Frank Myers Field where K-State compiled a 30-6 mark.

On the road, the team has only a 2-13 record. That's where it will close out the regular season, traveling to Ames, Iowa, for a four-game series Friday and Saturday against Iowa State with a postseason tournament berth remotely possible.

"They have a good ball club," Baker said. "We're going into it with the idea that we're going to win all four. We know it will be tough up there."

Final quarter surge carries Celtics to win

BOSTON (AP) - Larry Bird, Boston's brilliant second-year forward, scored 18 points, grabbed 21 rebounds and led a fourth-quarter surge that carried the Celtics to a 98-95 victory over the Houston Rockets Tuesday night in the opening game of the National Basketball Association championship series.

The second game of the best-of-seven playoff finals will be played here Thursday night before the series shifts to Houston for games three and four Saturday and Sunday.

The Rockets, making their first appearance in the title series, led for all of the first half and most of the second before Boston scored eight points in a row to take a 96-91 lead with 2:55 to play.

THE CELTICS' ROBERT Parish started the spurt by converting an offensive rebound, Bird hit a jumper from the left corner, M.L. Carr scored on a fast break following a steal by Bird and Cedric Maxwell capped the burst with another fast break basket after a rebound by Bird.

Two baskets by Tom Henderson brought the Rockets within one, 96-95, with 1:29 to go. Three times the Celtics missed shots, but each time they managed to get the rebound and maintain possession until Bird finally sank the clinching layup with 19 seconds

Rudy Tomjanovich missed a three-point try for the Rockets in the closing seconds.

IT WAS THE 14TH straight victory for the Celtics over the Rockets, a streak that dates back to Dec. 12, 1978. The loss dropped Houston's record at Boston Garden to a dismal 3-31.

Parish added 16 points for the Celtics. Robert Reid was high scorer for Houston, which finished the regular season with a losing record at 40-42, with 27 points

Houston's Moses Malone, the All-Star center who almost single-handedly beat the Kansas City Kings in the Western Conference finals, was limited to 13 points and was shut out in the fourth quarter.

Forward was supposed to be Houston's weakness in the matchups against the Celtics, but it was the Rockets' forwards, Billy Paultz and Reid, who scored 10 points apiece as Houston jumped to a 22-8 lead in the opening 8:08.

Could this be the same girl that was at Warner Park Sunday? Hope you had a great B-Day.

The Gang!

THREE-POINT PLAYS by Chris Ford and Carr helped Boston close the gap to 29-24 at the end of the first quarter, and the Celtics twice pulled within two during the second period. But a slam dunk by Malone capped an 11-3 spurt that helped Houston maintain a 57-51 lead at halftime.

Reid had 16 points and Paultz 14 for the Rockets in the first half, while Malone, scoreless in the first period, had eight points and 10 rebounds. Reserve guard Gerald Henderson was Boston's leading scorer at halftime with 11 points, all of them in the second quarter, while Bird had eight points and 11 rebounds.

BOSTON WENT AHEAD for the first time at 3:24 of the third quarter when Maxwell sank two free throws for a 69-68 lead. Three baskets by reserve guard Calvin Murphy, who finished with 16 points, helped Houston take a 81-76 lead into the final period.

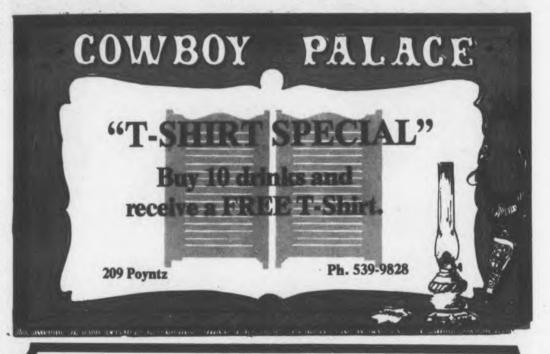

That's when the Celtics defense stiffened. Boston allowed the Rockets just 14 points in the final period and only four in the last 5:16. That was a repeat of the brilliant defense that helped the Celtics defeat the Philadelphia 76ers in a seven-game series for the Eastern Conference title.

The Celtics now have held opponents to less than 100 points 29 times this season, winning all of those games. That included 24 during the regular season and five during the playoffs, including their last three

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - John Wathan the season into the seats in right-center. doubled leading off the seventh inning Tuesday night, went to third on Dave Chalk's sacrifice and scored on Jerry Grote's sacrifice fly to lift the Kansas City Royals to a 2-1 victory over the Boston Red Earlier, Gary Allenson and Glenn Hoffman ripped consecutive doubles in the 12th inning to help power the Red Sox to an 8-7 victory in a game suspended at 5-5 after 10 innings Monday night because of a 1 a.m. American League curfew. The victory snapped Boston's seven-game losing streak.

In the regularly scheduled game, Frank Tanana annd Larry Gura were locked in a 1-1 duel until the seventh. Tanana, 0-4, gave up six hits before giving way to Bill Campbell with one out in the eighth while Gura, 3-2, was touched for four hits.

Dave Schmidt singled leading off the Boston third, took second on a bunt and eventually scored the Red Sox's run on a grounder by Dwight Evans, who reached base in the first game seven consecutive

The Royals came back with a run in the fourth on consecutive doubles by Amos Otis and Willie Aikens.

After Allenson and Hoffman doubled off Dan Quisenberry, 0-2, in the 12th inning of the suspended game, Jerry Remy singled a run home and stole second. He went to third on an infield hit by Evans and scored what turned out to be the decisive run on a single by Carl Yastremski.

Tom Burgmeier, 1-0, was the winner despite yielding a two-run homer to Otis in the bottom of the 12th one out after a single by U.L. Washington. Burgmeier was replaced by Mark Clear after giving up a double to George Brett and Clear recorded his first save by getting the last two outs.

The Royals tied the game in the bottom of the ninth Monday night when Ken Phelps lined a pinch triple for his first major league hit and pinch runner Dan Garcia scored on Cesar Geronimo's sacrifice fly.

Remy had singled Rick Miller home in the eighth to put Boston on top 54 in a game that was delayed at the start by rain for 2 hours, 16 minutes.

Orioles 3, Twins 2

BALTIMORE (AP) - Rich Dauer drove in two runs before being forced from the game with a rib injury as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Minnesota Twins 3-2 Tuesday night.

It was the sixth victory in seven games for the Orioles, who have beaten the Twins eight straight since last July, and Mike Flanagan's ninth consecutive triumph over Minnesota since 1977.

Dauer pulled a muscle in his left rib cage in pre-game batting practice and the injury was aggravated on a slide into second by Minnesota's Gary Ward in the seventh inning.

The blasts by Hendrick and Porter represented two of seven hits off Tommy Boggs, 1-4. Sorensen, 4-0, issued no walks and struck out one.

Prior to Hendrick's fifth home run of the year, the Cards' only hit was Tony Scott's infield single in the first inning.

Hendrick fell behind on an 0-2 count before breaking a scoreless tie with his 390-foot blast into the left field seats. On the next pitch, Porter crashed his second homer of

The victory was St. Louis' 12th in 14 games. The outcome also halted an Atlanta three-game winning streak.

Astros 4, Cubs 3

CHICAGO (AP) - Alan Ashby's pinch two-run double with two out in the top of the ninth inning lifted the Houston Astros to a 4-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs Tuesday.

Jose Cruz opened the ninth with a single. Art Howe beat out a infield single, and Cruz continued to third on shortstop Scott Fletcher's throwing error.

Expos 4, Padres 3

MONTREAL (AP) - Pinch-hitter Willie Montanez singled home Warren Cromartie from third base with two out in the ninth inning to lift the Montreal Expos to a 4-3 triumph over the San Diego Padres Tuesday night.

Cromartie stroked a single to right off starter Steve Mura, 0-4, leading off in the ninth. He advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt by Larry Parrish, took third on Chris Speier's ground out and coasted home as Montanez drilled a pitch from reliever Gary Lucas into the gap in left center field.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Manny Trillo's sacrifice fly scored Pete Rose with the winning run as the Philadelphia Phillies rallied for two runs to defeat the Los Angeles Dodgers 8-7 Tuesday night.

Griffin, 2-2, was replaced in the eighth by reliever Randy Moffitt. Moffitt and another reliever, Fred Breining, were chased in the midst of New York's big rally in the ninth before Greg Minton came in to shut the door.

K-State, Kansas can't find games for Kemper dates

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — K-State and Kansas are having trouble scheduling opponents for basketball games at Kansas City's Kemper Arena in late December and early January, leaving return holiday visits in doubt.

The only college game now scheduled during the holidays in Kemper is one Jan. 2 between Missouri and Notre Dame.

K-State athletic director DeLoss Dodds and his KU counterpart Bob Marcum both said they have had trouble scheduling opponents for games in late December and early January. K-State is holding options at Kemper on two year-end dates and Kansas is holding one.

"I have talked to a lot of people," Dodds said. "But without the right date and the right opponent, it might be taking a chan-

Both teams had success in Kansas City the past holiday season, with K-State drawing 11,757 in a game against Arkansas and Kansas drawing 12,225 against North Carolina.

However, Missouri drew only 4,200 in a Jan. 6 date against LaSalle.

K-State nearly had a Kansas City game lined up with Oregon State and Kansas thought it had an engagement set with DePaul, but both games fell through, officials said.

Fog's withdrawal opens gates for KC soccer team

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City officially joined the Major Indoor Soccer League Tuesday when the owner of the San Francisco Fog announced he was leaving the Bay area for the Midwest.

The club, to be known as the Kansas City Comets, will play 22 home dates at Kemper Arena, beginning in December.

Team officials said the 13-team league may add another club within the next month.

"This is heaven as far as I'm concerned," owner David Schoenstadt said in referring to the media turnout at Tuesday's announcement.

He said it would take about 11,000 persons a game for the team to break even, but he hoped to reduce that figure through corporate sponsors and television and radio revenues.

Tracy Leiweke, team president, called San Francisco "an incredibly smug town" where the people have a history of participating in sports more than watching them. He called Kansas City "a different environment" and said he felt it would take to indoor soccer.

Schoenstadt, who became disenchanted with San Francisco's support for the club, said he was committed to staying in Kansas City until the team takes hold with the public.

The announcement at Kemper Arena was attended by Mayor Richard Berkley and members of the city council.

Snodgrass gets women's position to go with men's Steve Snodgrass, the K-State men's tennis coach the last five years, will also assume the coaching duties for the women's program beginning next year, athletic director DeLoss Dodds announced Tuesday.

Snodgrass will fill the void left by David Hacker, who had coached the women the last three years before stepping down at the conclusion of this year's spring season.

Dodds said Snodgrass will be selecting an assistant coach sometime this summer to assist with the K-State program.

Russian adds flavor to New York wines

HAMMONDSPORT, N.Y. (AP) - His wines have been served at the tables of the queen of England and the president of the United States. He trained at a vineyard once owned by an uncle of Czar Nicholas II of Admired by many, tolerated by some, the name and achievements of Dr. Konstantin Frank are known far and wide.

Now 81, Frank has devoted his life to proving that vinifera grapes-those that produce the great wines of Europe and California, among them whites such as Johannesburg Rieslings, Pinot Chardonnays and Gewurztraminers-can also produce first-class wines in New York state.

It was an idea that was unthinkable when the Russian-born German immigrant arrived in the United States in 1951.

Believing the climate too cold for viniferas, New York growers and winemakers relied on hardier native American hybrids.

TO FRANK, THE idea that viniferas could not be grown here was balderdash. It was not the cold winters that made them easy victims, he said, but the weakening of the plants by insects, fungus and virus

In Russia he had grown viniferas, and "in Russia the climate is cold," he said. "If you spit from here to the floor, you have ice."

Fleeing from the Soviet regime in 1941, Frank came to New York City with his wife, son and two daughters 10 years later.

HE SAID HE didn't head for the already established wine country of California because: "I know that New York need me, because New York have no good wine, and California have good grapes.

In 1924, he was a scientist at the Odessaer Agricultural Institute, two years later becoming technical director of the Tubetskoje Experimental Grape and Wine Station—a 22,000-acre vineyard the Bolsheviks had confiscated from the czar's uncle in 1917.

At the age of 52, and speaking no English, Frank arrived at the New York State Agricultural Experimental Station, expecting to be greeted as a colleague. He was in for a shock.

"They have said to me, 'Go home.' But I could not go home, because I had no home. No money," he said. "They gave me blueberry hoeing-70 cents an hour."

HIS BIG BREAK came two years later, when Charles Fournier, president of the nearby Gold Seal Vineyards, who shared his interest in the potential of viniferas, gave him a job.

Fournier said that before he hired Frank, station experts had discouraged him from growing viniferas, "telling me the winter would kill them."

Today, he said, Gold Seal has 150 acres of viniferas in the ground.

Frank left Gold Seal in 1961-after buying land for what is now his own vineyard and winery, Vinifera Wine Cellars.

Plantings of viniferas have been increasing in New York and elsewhere in the Eroding military power prompts new strategy, Weinburger says

Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Tuesday the Reagan administration is shaping a new strategy on military power designed to meet growing Soviet threats anywhere on the globe with extended conventional war, if Weinberger indicated strongly that the new administration intends to broaden the main focus of U.S. military strategy, which in recent years has focused mainly on defending Western Europe and has been grounded in an assumption that a war with the Soviet Union would be a short, violent conflict there.

"What has changed is our determination to respond realistically to the growing threats wherever they confront our national security," Weinberger said in a speech prepared for a United Press International luncheon in Chicago.

OVER THE PAST 15 years the Soviet Union has multiplied its strategic and conventional military power while greatly extending its reach with what he called "military outposts" in the Middle East, Africa and elsewhere and footholds threatening the Mideast oil fields.

Meanwhile, Weinberger said, the United States has allowed its military power to erode.

The new Reagan administration's proposals for giant increases in U.S. defense spending are designed to correct those imbalances, Weinberger said, and he defended President Reagan as showing "courage and political leadership" in sharply trimming many domestic programs to do so.

"We have to be prepared to launch counter-offensives in other regions and to exploit the aggressor's weaknesses, wherever we may find them," Weinberger said. "We must be prepared for waging a conventional war that may extend to many parts of the globe, if persistent local aggression by superior forces cannot be turned around."

THE NEW DEFENSE secretary in effect called obsolete the idea that all conventional wars will be short.

Weinberger outlined the broad thrust of the new strategy but gave no new specifics, beyond those spelled out in the Reagan administration's budget proposals Congress in March.

However, he has told Congress since the Reagan budget plan went to Capitol Hill, that "at least a couple of hundred thousand" additional troops would be needed in future years to man the expanded and modernized Army, Navy fleet and Air Force warplane flotillas.

Total U.S. personnel in uniform have remained at a level of a little more than million for a number of years. A main pillar of the Reagan defense plan is to build U.S. naval power from a current fleet of about 456 ships to 600 by the end of this decade.

Inflation makes K-State, other Big 8 schools raise health costs

By JILL MATUSZAK Collegian Reporter

High inflation rates and medical expenses are causing K-State and many other Big 8 schools to increase the cost of student health

At K-State the mandatory student fee for Lafene Student Health Center will increase in the fall from $46 to $51.

Lafene, which boasts a no-charge program for visits with a doctor, discount prices on prescriptions, and other "extras," will be increasing the student health fee in order to "keep up with inflation," Roger Birnbaum, administrative assistant of student health, said.

"We don't operate with an annual budget," Birnbaum said. "We use previous years as a basis and add for inflation."

Because Lafene is a non-profit organization it receives no state or federal funding. The mandatory health fee is distributed for salaries, drugs, equipment and contractual services, Birnbaum said.

THE MONEY COLLECTED through student fees provides about 85 percent of the center's income, Birnbaum said. The other 15 percent comes from the charges for extra

Although the center is available for service 24 hours, emergency and outpatient services, and prescriptions have an extra

Prescriptions are sold for approximately 20 percent more than the cost to Lafene, he said. K-State students are not charged for doctor appointments or for their first three appointments with a physical therapist or psychiatrist.

OTHER BIG EIGHT universities are also finding it necessary to increase their student health fees or limit free services.

At the University of Kansas (KU), student health fees will increase from $45 to $51 next fall. The $51 will cover all services, including emergency visits, lab fees (except in cases requiring special equipment), and dietary and nutritional clinics, Dr. Martin Wollman, director of KU's student health facilities, said.

Prescriptions generally cost students about 15 percent more than the cost to the health center, he said.

KU's health fee program is similar to K-State's, Wollman said, except it receives other financing through dividends from an endowment fund set up for the health center.

AT THE UNIVERSITY of Nebraska (NU), students will pay an increased mandatory health fee of $34.70 next fall.

That fee will include "free access to a physician," according to Steve Blom, NU's administrator.

Other health services which are not included in the fee include emergency services and some lab and X-ray costs. The costs for these services will remain about 70 percent of the community rate.

THE UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO (CU) charges about $50 a semester in health fees. That fee comes from semester student activity fees, he said.

Although the health fee will not increase next fall, because of severe cuts in CU's budget, the health center has been forced to institute a "fee for services," a health center spokesman said.

Although clinic visits will still be included in the semester fees, emergency visits, hospital visits, lab tests, X-rays and pharmacy costs will now be cost extra.

At the University of Missouri (MU), students do not have a mandatory health fee, but instead are charged a $2 clinic fee to see a doctor. All services beyond the clinic fee cost extra, according to Dr. Diane Brookhart, director of the MU health center. Student health services at MU also receive general operating fees from the Legislature.

THE UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA

(OU) has a mandatory student health fee of $15 per semester. An additional $15.86 per student goes to the student health center out of the student activity fee, according to the Oklahoma Daily newspaper.

Students receive unlimited clinical visits, as well as lab services, X-rays, hospitalization, mental health services, and physcal therapy with their paid fees. Emergency room fees are extra.

Oklahoma State University (OSU) receives 55 to 60 cents per credit hour from student activity fees as well as a student health fee of $13.50 per student each semester, according to Dr. Donald Cooper, director of health services at OSU. That fee is expected to increase to $18.75 next fall.

The school's activity fee provides about $320,000 to the OSU health center, Cooper

AT IOWA STATE UNIVERSITY (ISU), 60 percent of the funding for the student health services comes from the Board of Regents, while 40 percent comes from a voluntary fee program, according to the director of health services at ISU, Dr. Lila Furman.

In the voluntary fee program a student pays $9 for each quarter of the school year.

The pre-paid amount includes visits with the doctors, emergency services, lab services, and X-rays, Furman said.

Editor's note

his issue of Dimensions is about Kansas. I must confess that when the topic was first suggested I had serious doubts we could string together 16 pages of stories concerning this state that haven't been told before; but, in retrospect, I think we did and I think we did a good job.

The Dimensions staff did not want to put together a magazine that would be a regurgitation of the Kansas history and folklore classes that are taught on campus. But Kansas is a large state, measuring 411 by 208 miles with 2,000,000 people, so there is a lot to be told.

In examining this state we found there are two prevailing attitudes. There are those people—usually natives—who would just as soon live here than any other place in the world. Then there are those—and some are natives—who would just as soon catch the first stage out.

We addressed that issue, I think, in Gayle McGehee's "Why Kansas" article on page 4. Gayle interviewed several out-of-state students and recorded their reasons for coming to this state. She also captured the sentiments of a student who left Kansas.

Tom Glass took a whirlwind tour around the state one weekend, stopping in a few small towns, to see if Kansas offers any real tourist attractions. His observations appear on pages 8 and 9.

And what about the people who inhabit this state? Nancy Kraus talked to a woman who's job it is to record those activities that are passed from generation to generation. That story appears on pages 12 and 13.

Sandwiched inbetween are stories about growing up in small towns and growing up in big towns.

There are stories about the unusual pasttimes Kansans engage in. The background to the admittedly strange cover art can be found within. And to wrap up this issue of Dimensions, Janet Terry took a cue from James Michner and whipped up a geographic history of the Flint Hills. That story appears on pages 14 and 15.

But try as we might to put this state in perspective, it can't really be done—not in 16 pages anyway. Just as the Missouri River wrecks geometric shape of Kansas, the citizenry refuses to be pigeonholed into any one category. To be sure, Kansans are known for their individuality. So, within these pages is simply a slice of Kansas—we hope you enjoy it.

The writers submitting articles for publication come from a variety of backgrounds. Some hail from this state and others moved in. Some are from small towns, others large cities. Some are from eastern Kansas, others from the western half. I think they offer a pretty good mix.

Myself, I am a life-long resident of this state. I grew up in a town of barely 2,000 souls where the horizon spans a full 180 degrees. Where I grew up there are places the land is so flat the farmers are prevented from irrigating because water has trouble draining. The scenery—except along the river banks—is somewhat monotonous. But when I think about that plain plane, I recall what an old lady once said when she was asked about the Colorado scenery after visiting that state. "What scenery," she snorted, "the mountains just get in the way!"

Mythconceptions

By ALYSON LANGENKAMP and SUSAN SCHLICKAU

an sas ('kanzes) n. Flat state plagued with tornadoes and Indian attacks. Frequently windy and dry. Inhabited by Munchkins and cowboys. Synonym: See Oklahoma.

Frank Baum forever cursed Kansas when he penned his classic "The Wizard of Oz." Each year when the television production is rebroadcast, the image of Kansas as a colorless, windy and barren state is further cemented into the minds of people unfamiliar with it. It is easy to stereotype Kansas.

The wind does indeed blow and tumbleweeds do roll across the open prairie until collared by barbed-wire fences.

Many citizens are like Baum's Aunt Em. The midwestern drawl does seems to summarize a slow-paced life-style in a "typical" small town. There are many more small towns than large ones.

Yet, beneath the surface, Kansas is not always what it seems.

In spite what is often perceived as a tranquil state, Kansas has claimed the Dalton Gang, Bonnie and Clyde, Dick Hickock and Perry Smith.

Hickock and Smith. The serene and peaceful image of the farmstead was smashed in 1959 by the pair. The contented citizenry of Holcomb woke on a mid-November day to find their littlee blown apart by news of the Clutter family mass murder. The nation was shocked by the report of the brutal crime. The concept of the wholesome and protective atmosphere of a small town was destroyed by the harsh reality of a family being killed in cold blood. Though many years have passed since the incident, the memory is still deeply implanted in the minds of the natives.

Once, early settlers labeled Kansas as a flat desert, but once tamed, rich and fertile soil was discovered in the rolling Flint Hills region as well as the open plains.

In addition to crop production that has given the state the deserved title "Breadbasket of the World," the "garden" also has proven successful in other areas. Cessna and Beechcraft, based in Wichita, produce private planes which serve many national figures. The Kansas City area spits out automobiles faster than any other region outside Detriot. In southeastern Kansas coal mines dot the landscape. Beneath the wheat fields of western Kansas lie substantial oil fields that investors have tapped. Some productivity for a "Great American Desert!"

The spacious prairies no longer host sod houses and log cabins, but instead display a heritage of development and prosperity. And in eastern Kansas one can find majestic neighborhoods, such as Mission Hills. Though a tradition of rich elegance is seldom equated with Kansas, these old homes, through their history of wealth is in direct contrast to the state's prairie dwelling image. These high-style mansions symbolize a graceful facet of Kansas history which has been preserved with care.

Franklin Roosevelt for the presidency of the U.S. during the 1930s, and though he was soundly defeated, Dwight Eisenhower was asked to do the same two decades later. This time the Kansan assumed the Oval Office. Even today, the Kansas politicians maintain a credible reputation. Robert Dole leads the powerful finance committee in the U.S. Senate and Nancy Kassebaum has excelled as the first woman elected directly to the Senate.

And despite its conservative political reputation, the record shows Kansas to be somewhat progressive. It championed the woman's suffrage issue and elected the first woman mayor.

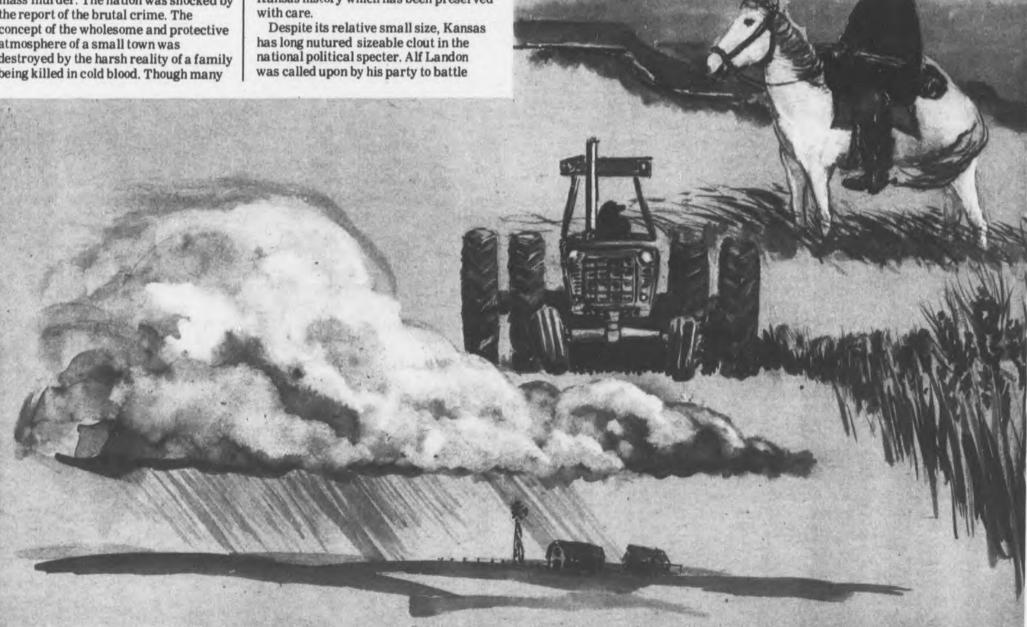

The nation also notes the famous mental health clinc located in Topeka.

Menninger's reputation attracts patients from all corners of the United States.

Another long-standing tradition is the Kansas cowboy. For years the dress of true country boys was a joke among the fashion-minded people. The hats, pointed boots and belts—with their name on the back—were considered out of touch with what was the current fashion trend. Laughter from natives and coastal residents often echoed throughout the state, but the latest trend has created a new fashion note. In paradox it seems the entire nation has found renewed merit in the traditional cowboy style of dress.

Whether in a large city or small dwelling, the jokes, myths and paradoxes continue to circulate. Kansas in many ways seems pleased with the imaged it has concocted and wishes to preserve it. Dodge City has recreated the cattle drive and Matt Dillon era with its Front Street and Boot Hill. In Medicine Lodge, an Indian pageant is staged on a regular basis. Yet in spite of living in a world vexed with tornadoes, and populated with down-home farmers who dot a black-and-white landscape, when confronted with reality, these sterotypic beliefs are quickly dispelled and the natives can proudly state "there's no place like home.'

Why Kansas?

(...or K-State for that matter)

By GAYLE McGEHEE

s a senior anticipating that expensive piece of parchment that spells escape, I have one important goal in mind—to get the heck out of Dodge. Translated, this means I'm itching to leave Kansas.

Now don't get me wrong, I love my home state, but as a Wichita and Manhattan resident for nearly 22 years, I'm ready to move on to bigger and hopefully better places.

OK, so I'm ready to depart, but what about the others. By others, I mean those exploratory people who venture to Kansas from other parts of the country.

Why Kansas?
Is there some hidden reason I haven't been able to unearth, or is there no explanation at all. Exactly what does Kansas have to offer the average out-of-stater at Kansas State University?

Lu Ann Reese, junior in home economics education, has suffered the fate of many out-of-staters. Uprooted from her Long Island, N.Y., home at 16, Reese moved with her family to Overland Park when her father received a job promotion.

"I was raised in a metropolitan bedroom' community where everybody commutes to the city for work. It was hard to adjust to such a different atmosphere," she said.

"One characteristic of Kansas that did help me adjust was the population, it's so small here compared to New York. New York provides a wide variety of ethnic backgrounds, whereas Kansas seems to have a more close-knit variety," Reese added. "I like the international atmosphere of New York, but I also like the simplicity and cleanliness of Kansas. I like Kansas for the college life I'm getting at K-State."

When asked to futher compare the two states, Reese replied: "The difference between the Midwest and the East can only be experienced by actually living in each place—not by vacationing. You can't expect to go to New York, or Kansas, for that matter, for two weeks and expect to know what it's like. You can't go to New York, get caught in the traffic, the smog and the crowds and think that you've experienced New York.

"Likewise, you don't drive through Kansas, look at the wheat fields and think you've seen it all."

Lynn Roosa, senior in pre-dentistry, was originally from Kansas and then moved east. Roosa's family moved to Bernardsville, N.J., from Overland Park about three years ago.

"Overall, I prefer Kansas," Roosa said. "Kansas is friendlier. New Jersey people are in their own little worlds, they're nice but it takes them a long time to open up, whereas Kansas people open up instantly.

"Of course there are classier things to do on the East Coast, New York, Broadway, and all, but it also takes me a long time to get to those places from where I live "she added where I live," she added.

"I felt comfortable in Kansas because my friends are here, to me, where you live is just a matter of where you feel comfortable.

Well, there are two eastern views, but what about the West? How does a California girl like Becky Oliver, junior in journalism and mass communications, feel about Kansas?

Raised in the Los Angeles area, Oliver transferred to K-State as a sophomore. What about the variations between the heartland and the Golden State?

"People here are warmer and I like the cultural differences between Kansas, which is primarily a farming state, and the large metropolitan area where I grew up," Oliver said.

"I like the small-town people especially," she added, "you can learn a lot about yourself through them."

Oliver added: "If you grow up in a certain area, such as Los Angeles, you tend to think you're the only kind of person that exists. You think everyone is like you and your friends. Then you realize that there are a lot of people from backgrounds other than your's.

"Before I came here, I had the idea that Kansas was flat and treeless," Oliver said. "When I rode into Manhattan for the first time, I remember telling the taxi driver right away, 'I can't believe you have trees here."

All in all, differences do affect some out-of-staters. "I will always come back to visit, but I could never live in Kansas. It's too different from where I grew up," Oliver finished.

rom a male prespective, John Barnhart, sophomore in pre-law, moved to Manhattan from Topekasized Fayetteville, N.C.

"I have relatives here so I'd been to Kansas before we moved. A lot of my friends said 'Oh no, Dorothy and Toto land,' but I knew basically what Kansas was going to be like," he said.

"I like the people, they're more straightforward and Kansas doesn't have the racial problems North Carolina had," Barnhart said. "I like Kansas better."

So here I am with four different views featuring various opinions on Kansas living. I should be able to answer the primary question here—Why Kansas? But it's not that easy. I could interview a hundred students, or non-students, for that matter, and come up with the same responses, but no singular, stand-above-the-crowd answer would emerge. Whether it's people, fresh air or open spaces, even the most hardcore out-of-stater can find something positive, even flattering, to say about this state. Maybe that's all that matters.

Sticking with the subject of Kansas, let's dig a little further. For instance; why did we choose this midwestern institute of cowpaths, limestone and limited parking? Why did we come to K-State?

Was it tradition, meaning a mom or dad who wore the Purple?

Was it the great architecture, engineering, home economics, agriculture or veterinary medicine colleges?

Was it the homey atmosphere, the friendly people, the outstanding basketball?

Why not Wichita, Baker, Emporia, Pittsburg, Fort Hays or any of the other numerous Kansas institutions (not to mention the Lawrence alternative)?

Obviously the answers are going to be individually based. There are those who come to this institute of higher learning with a specific goal, a shining reason. Then there are those who need no reason at all.

Pulling up roots

By IVA JOYCE SCHEIDENMANTAL

ast fall Beverly Laskey, a graduate assistant at the center of student development at K-State, pulled up roots in Boston and transplanted herself in Manhattan. She left behind a good job at Harvard, many friends and relatives to fulfill her childhood dream—live out West.

She is one of many people who come to Manhattan because of jobs or schooling. Their decisions to stay or leave, are influenced by their backgrounds, experiences, marital status and ages.

Laskey chose Manhattan for graduate study, because "K-State enjoys a good reputation." She was disenchanted with city living and said, "I wanted to start out on a new path and return to school at the same time." Wearing her gray wool blazer and white blouse with a neatly tied bow at the neck, she looks more like a faculty member than a graduate Laskey also wanted to stop depending on "the automobile"—she speaks precisely—for most of her transportation. Now, she lives within walking distance of campus.

Commuting is a fact of life with city dwellers. They must rise early to face heavy traffic and often spend more time getting to work than they have for lunch breaks. Laskey found commuting one of the most distasteful aspects of living in the city. "I felt like I was throwing very treasured moments of my life right down the drain," Laskey said.

Escape from congested freeways is just one of the reasons Laskey, and others like her, appreciate this area. They don't contend with industrial pollution. When the sun rises on the Flint Hills, the Kansas horizon is not obliterated by smog. Step out the front door, take a deep breath and be assured the air is not laden with carcinogenic particles.

"The wide open spaces" also attract Chuck Prusick, retired army sergeant and senior at K-State. Not the typical spit shined boots, hair cut above the ears type of retired sergeant; Prusic, with curly red hair and beard, head band, denim jeans and jacket, could pass as a retired Hell's Angel.

"I'm not crowded in," said Prusick who is originally from New York City. "In five minutes I can be in desolate country, where I don't hear a car or truck go by. There's complete silence. I only hear birds and my own breathing."

Another veteran and native New Yorker doesn't share Prusick's views. Nevin "Boomer" Markel, a senior in modern language, could be taken for a Jets tight end and speaks fluent Russian.

The fact that there's not "800,000 people running around" doesn't compensate for Manhattan's lack of activities.
"There's nothing here," said Markel, "No international

"There's nothing here," said Markel, "No international trade with the city, no culture and atmosphere, no international flavor, or exchange from different parts of the country, and no seafood—it's a typical midwestern town."

Ashley Peterson, Markels roommate, is a Navy veteran majoring in journalism. He misses the professional sports that his native California has to offer. He also agrees with Markel that there's nothing here.

"Once you've made the rounds of the 37 bars in town, you've done it all," said the prematurely gray Peterson. He admits Manhattan is a nice change from California, because there's not a hectic pace to maintain.

Both Peterson and Markel plan to move on afer completing school. Markel feels there's no incentive, though, for natives to leave, because they've never lived in other places and don't know what it's like.

"If you were born or raised somewhere else," he said.
"You don't want to stay."

oohhee!"
"Sic'em Six! Get him girl."
"Cmon Chap, you worthless...
Git in there."

"Get him Six. Shake the livin' daylights outta him."

"Don't let him head for that creek or we'll be swimmin' in it."

That's us—down off 42 Creek—a whole passel of us.

See, every Thanksgivin', our whole family, the women and kids, too, has a little 'coon hunt to end the day.

'Coon huntin' is just a relaxin' way to escape from civilization. After crammin' for tests and writing papers, goin' 'coon huntin' is a might peaceful. Out in the timber with no sounds 'cept the dogs, I do some thinkin' that I don't normally have time for at school.

It's probably the best—or at least the funniest—hunt of the year. Somebody always gets their feet wet or falls down trapsin' through a plowed field. And then the dogs end up chasin' a bobcat or deer. Ahh, this is life at its best.

Well, anyways we're all supposed to meet at the corner of the highway goin' south outta Admire at the west pasture gate about 6 p.m. Punctuality don't count for much, considerin' Granddad Mack only drives 40 miles per hour. Takes Bruce and Doug a while to get around since they's usually been nappin' after gorgin' on turkey and Aunt Shirley's chocolate cream pie.

Well, me and my sweetie, Jon, got to the meetin' place almost on time. My pa and uncle were the only ones waitin'. Sure enough, Steve and Bob Trendel drove up directly. Just as natural as the wind blowin' in March, Granddad Mack was a might late. And Bruce and Doug was even later.

Finally, the whole

Finally, the whole gang arrived. This year it just happened I was the only girl. It didn't make no matter, I've been huntin' with all them men most a my days.

Six and Chap, both Bluetick
'coonhounds and litter mates, were revved up and ready to go. They was a yelpin' and a howlin' in the back of the truck. We had two car loads and one truck full of hunters. Yep, a regular

We drove on down to 42 Creek and dumped the dogs right there where the timber line runs alongside 42. We all bundled up and sure enough, right off the bat, I got tangled in a barbed-wire fence.

My coat was snagged and the more I tugged and the more I yanked the more stuck I got. With a jerk the material gave way and me and the coat landed on the ground. This started the "women are the weaker sex" stabs. Jon helped me up and the group trampled along listenin' for the dogs to hit a trail.

Didn't take ole Six long to pick up a scent. We hadn't gone 10 shakes before she started barkin'. We all got as excited as jumpin' beans. Hearin' ole Six strike out on a trail was music to my ears. Especially since it was the first outing of the year.

We followed Six's voice, wonderin' if she'd crossed the creek or not. Granddad Mack swore she'd tree in that big hollow oak, sayin' we'd never got a 'coon outta that hole before.

Right directly Six changed from a bellowin' to a barkin' voice. Chap jumped in, addin' his two cents worth to the treein'. By gosh, it was then I knew that rascal 'coon had gone up. Everybody started runnin' through the trees towards Six and Chap. I followed Ray, my pa, since he always finds a safe trail through the timber.

Earlier, I'd learned my lesson about followin' Granddad Mack. See Mack don't take no extra care in goin' through the trees. When followin' Mack, a feller has to be careful lest Mack let a limber tree branch snap back in a feller's face. Smarts a lot gettin' a branch' cross the Well, Granddad Mack is a wise old boy cause sure as hell that 'coon climbed in the hollow oak—just like he said. We all gathered 'round the tree, but didn't spy no 'coon. Ray put the five-cell flashlight to the tree, but tweren't no help. That old rascal had done gone in the hole and weren't nobody goin' to disturb him.

Ray called Six off the tree. She's a might disappointed after trailin' all that way. Chap stuck to that tree like bees to honey. Chap never would leave a tree or come to ya if he thought you were wrong. Mack had to pull him along side for a piece, 'til Chap got the message good and clear to start huntin' for a scent again.

Them dogs took off once more and took 'em quite a time before they hit on 'coon scent again.

All us great white hunters had been standin' still and that cold air was makin' me chilly. After runnin' through the timber when the dogs treed, I'd worked up quite a sweat havin' so many clothes on. And if Ray ever told me one thing, it was if you're sweatin', better peel a layer of clothin' off. He reasonin' stands that sweat will freeze and that makes a feller shiver all night.

lmost 15 minutes went by without even a peep from them dogs. I was gettin' restless when Six finally began howlin' so we began troddin' along followin' her voice.

Bein' brothers, Bruce and Doug carried on foolishly most the night. They filled the time wrasslin' in the plowed fields, trippin' each other in the timber and splashin' water on each other every time we got close to a creek.

We followed behind Six and Chap for a quarter mile before they treed again.
Wouldn't ya know the 'coon crossed the creek? Six and Chap jumped in and swam right behind him.

We had to search for some shallow riffles in order to cross the creek. I followed Ray and he ended up walkin' straight to the closest crossin'. Everybody had rubber boots on—everybody, that is 'cept for me. Before I realize what happened, everybody was on the other side of the bank and there I was—with no way to cross the creek.

I hollered "hey, hey," but nobody paid me no mind. I raised an even bigger ruckus and finally Ray noticed I wasn't taggin' along. He hollered back askin' if the 'coon was on my side. I said nope, but I couldn't get on the other side.

Jon waded back to my side of the creek and I jumped on his back for a piggyback ride. I got hollered at for "bein' just like a woman with no brains." I just hollered back, sayin' "I was ridin', you all waded. Who's got the brains?"

Once I got to the other side, the whole bunch started trottin' up the bank. It was pretty steep and Granddad Mack had to get a little boost to make it to the top.

I ran behind the boys keepin' up best I could. I stayed right with Ray because I knew Six would wait for him, after all, he'd been feedin' her for years and she was a right playful hound, always waggin' her tail and lickin' his hand.

Ray and I was just nearin' the tree when we heard a shot. Now I couldn't figure that out seein's how Ray's the only one who carries an iron. And besides we don't never shoot 'coon. All the fun's in watchin' the 'coon and dogs fight.

I was just plain bewildered. Then I thought the 'coon must of jumped out and was headin 'for a creek gettin' away from the dogs. When I reached the tree, Jon was standin' lookin' down at Bill (my cousin's husband.)

Bill was kneelin' at the tree with his hand to his head. I knew right then somethin' had gone wrong. Most everybody was around by then 'ceptin' for Granddad Mack (I suspect he was takin' his time, seein's how he's been huntin' 'coon for near 60 years.)

Seems old Six had treed in another hollow tree. Only she weren't lettin' this one get away. Why old Six went right up inside that tree. The bottom had pretty well rotted out so she'd just dug it out and gone inside to drag that 'coon out. Now, I never seen a dog so dedicated and full of fight before. Only problem with old Six's goin' up that tree was she never had learned about man and gettin' anxious and what happens when that man gets a might trigger happy.

Now everythin' got quiet, even old Chap hushed. That piece of woods seemed still for eternity. Bill looked up at Ray with a solemn look in his eyes, "I shot your dog."

He was carryin' an iron—a suprise to everyone. I couldn't hardly believe what Bill was tellin' my pa. I stared at him for a long while. Ray felt the same as me, only worse—Six bein' his dog and all.

He was hopin' it weren't true 'cause he just kept sayin', "No, you didn't shoot my dog. You didn't kill Six. You couldn't shoot my dog."

Ya gotta understand what a 'coonhound means to pa. He spends time a huntin' him, feedin' him, pettin' him and lovin' him He don't do much else for himself all year long, but 'coon huntin' is his fun.

I just knew my pa's heart was crushed. He never said anything, but I just knew he hurt real bad. I knew he lost dogs before, but nobody ever shot his dog. 'Specially Six, she's a lovable old hound, right expensive dog, too.

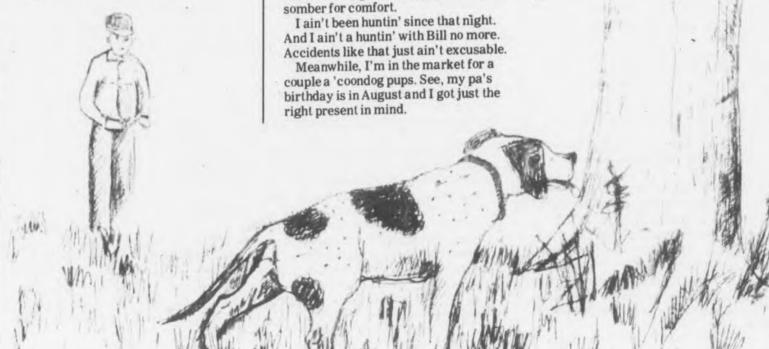

Ray had them boys dig her out so's he could get the collar off her. That's what he said he wanted her out for. But I knew he loved huntin' and I knew he loved that dog. Deep down he's a hopin that bullet just grazed Six.

They dug her out, but no such luck. Bill shot that dog square between the eyes. What's worse, she weren't completely dead. Pa had to shoot her again so she wouldn't suffer more.

Ray took her collar off and we left her lyin' at the base of that tree.

Now the rest of the night weren't worth the trouble. Chap didn't hunt awful good without his litter mate and I'd lost any good feelin's about huntin I'd had.

Granddad Mack left early that night. Instead of a happy trip home retellin' the tales of the night, the ride home was too

Ski Kansas

By LYNDA MINES

ansas has many endearing qualities to provide its residents. There are waving wheat fields, rolling Flint Hills and spectacular sunsets and sunrises. But, in general, it does have a rather flat horizon and when vacation time rolls around, many Kansas look west and head for the rugged scenery of the Rocky Mountains.

During the winter, many adventurous Kansans enjoy the exhilaration of Colorado's ski slopes. Although Kansas can't offer much in the way of mountains, it does claim a number of ski enthusiasts who find ways to copy the sport on the plains.

That enthusiasm was first evidenced about 11 years ago at Lawrence. About seven miles southeast of town stands a stately hill known to local residents as Mount Blue. But according to the Kansas Geological Survey, the hill's correct name is Blue Mound.

A doctor from Topeka developed Blue Mound into a miniature ski slope, according to Martin Owens of the Lawrence Chamber of Commerce. It was equipped with a pole-type ski lift and a small lodge with a ski pro shop and an area for parties. The ski slope was about 200 to 300 yards long.

Combining artificial snow with the real stuff, the ski area was operable about 12 weeks a year.

University of Kansas students and people from Kansas City popularized the area "to get their legs in shape before departing for Colorado," Owens said. "But the facility had mechanical problems with the snow-making equipment and was closed a few years ago.

However, another ski attraction exists in Kansas—a man-made ski slope positioned beneath the football stadium seats at Wichita State University. Dubbed Shocker Mountain, the facility was built in 1978 with funds from the university. Income generated by the incline is used for athletic scholarships, according to Fred Harvey, director of the Shocker Mountain ski school.

"Eighty percent of the people that come here have never been on skis before," Harvey said. "The youngest person we've had was four years old and the oldest was 72. We find that a 12-hour class develops safe skiers."

The program also features a chair-lift training chair where students can practice loading and unloading. Ballet classes are offered for advanced skiers.

Artificial Durasnow covers the manman slope. It forms a plastic surface that resembles a hairbrush and looks like a shag carpet. Even though it doesn't have the bumps and icy spots, it resembles real snow, though skiers tend to move through it a little slower, which makes it conducive to training beginners, according to Harvey. The university also has a portable ski jump used for traveling exhibits. It is 22 feet high and six feet wide.

"When you get to the end of the jump you're about eight feet off the ground and you go up in the air another eight feet before landing on a crash pad similar to a landing pit for pole vaulters," Harvey said.

An aerial ballet will be performed at the Arkansas River Festival later this month in Wichita. Skiers will perform flips from the jump into the Arkansas River.

Another form of skiing in Kansas has aroused the interest of many young folks in the Flint Hills area. Called grass skiing it can be enjoyed almost anywhere, "but be careful—a rock can be quite upsetting," said an employee at Breakaway West Ltd., a Manhattan ski shop.

According to a ski industry source, grass skiing should be left to dedicated pros who want to stay in shape during the

"In order to grass ski, you must a proficient snow skier and know how to use your pole," he said. "With grass skis you get a slower start, but once you get going, it's harder to stop."

Grass skiing was popularized in the United States about five years ago, but it has a limited market.

The ski shop employee said about five percent of the nation's population skis and it's a soft landing when they fall in the snow. Grass skiing is not as safe and requires more athletic skills.

Grass skis resemble army tank treads. They have a belted track that goes completely around the ski with roller bearings on the inside. The bearings are noisy and tend to clatter. It's not possible to carve a turn with the grass skis so it requires a high level of proficiency in order to make a turn. You can't snowplow with grass skis and once you get to the end of your run, you must hike back up the hill to continue.

"Grass skiing is not too poular because the first time a guy went down a hill and busted his head on a rock—it was all over," the ski shop employee said.

Yet another form of skiing available to Kansans during times of snow is cross country skiing. It was popularized in the United States about six years ago.

Cross country skiing is not as glamourous as downhill and it requires a high degree of hand and body coordination. Cross country skiing reportedly has the highest rate of calorie use per hour than any other sport. Advocates tend to be nature lovers.

Although Kansas can never offer the thrill of skiing an awesome slope in the Rocky Mountains, it does offer several opportunities for the enthusiast who wants to exercise his "ski legs" before hitting the slopes.

eing a somewhat flat and generally uninspiring state, Kansas offers little attraction to many of its visitors. The tourists it does manage to attract are people who travel through, en route to points further east or west. These unfortuates must endure countless billboards touting small-town attractions.

Signs, erected on a landscape that warranted only black and white film in the "Wizard of Oz," evoke images of a reincarnated frontier and oddities worthy of more than a passing note. The various chambers of commerce responsble for promoting these tourist attractions promise integrity.

But even in Kansas, heart of the Bible belt, it is almost believable that these organizations are not motivated by the avarice tourists are accustomed to elsewhere.

To test this hypothesis, I set aside a weekend in early March to explore some of these small-town attractions with a friend. We wondered if indeed Kansas had something to offer the passing tourist, or, if the chambers of commerce were simply disguised bucksters

The casual loop around the state included stops in Sedan, Greensburg, LaCrosse and Lucas. Here is what we found:

edan is the boyhood home of the late Emmett Kelly, the world-famous clown. The road north into Sedan is a two-lane highway winding though rolling hills laced with scrub oak and oil wells. Among the signs lining the road are two announcing Kelly's museum. They do not reveal the exact location of the museum, but do promise guideposts in town that provide explicit directions to it.

The highway soon became the main street of Sedan. It was probably the same main street Barnum and Bailey's circus cavorted down before Kelly's wide eyes. Today, instead of circus wagons, latemodel pickups and older cars cruise the length of town.

We anticipated an easy search for the museum. Of course we were wrong. We looked for directions to the museum and didn't see any on the first pass through town. It appeared the museum's location was the best kept secret in town.

Finally we inquired at Corner Drug. A pretty girl with blond hair and blue eyes stood behind the counter. When asked for the location of the museum, she raised a brow and asked, "Why?"

Since I did not have a clear explanation, she went ahead and gave equally unclear directions.

"Turn right at Floyd's Market. You can't miss it," she said, waving her hand behind her head.

Following the hand signal, and watching for Floyd's Market we still missed Kelly's museum on the first try. We turned off the main drag and wandered through Sedan's backstreets. Finally, an old Atchison and Topeka and Santa Fe railroad car in someone's lawn signalled us to the museum we were searching.

Two signs in faded circus lettering tacked to the front of a two-story frame house, confirmed this was Emmett

Kelly's boyhood home. The museum was not open at 10 that Saturday morning and it did not appear to have been open for quite some time. Long weeds filled gravel circle drive. We walked around the old house and peered in a dusty window. The curtains, waterstained and yellowed at the edges, obstructed our view of the interior. Whitewash covering the house had run down and filmed the glass. With nothing to see, I wandered to the railcar and climbed the wooden steps to the platform intended for long tourist lines. A rolleddown blind and a closed sign indicated the beginning and ending of the tour.

I've since learned the museum will be moved to new quarters.

nce back on the highway we opened a couple beers and set our sights west to Medicine Lodge—the old stomping grounds of the biggest party crasher of them all, Carrie Nation, the tea-totting temperance fighter responsible for Kansas' progressive attitudes toward liquor-bythe-drink.

The highway into Medicine Ledge is as dry and barren as Carrie's liquor cabinet. Several signs bearing her axwielding silhouette mark the way to her former home and the present-day museum. Once in town there is no missing the Carrie A. Nation Home and Museum. Adjacent stands the Stockade Museum. There are five signs in the front yard, one of them neon.

A large gravel lot next to the museum provided convenient parking, but the dirt path leading to the front walk was sandwiched between a busy U.S. Highway 160 on one side and a swaybacked picket fence lines the other. Attached to the house was a dog-run, lettered with bones, dusty and picked cleaned. The house itself is an austere clapboard, painted a faded yellow. The whole house leans on the front porch for support, which the porch grudingly supplies with the aid of four paintless pillars and a twisted picket railing.

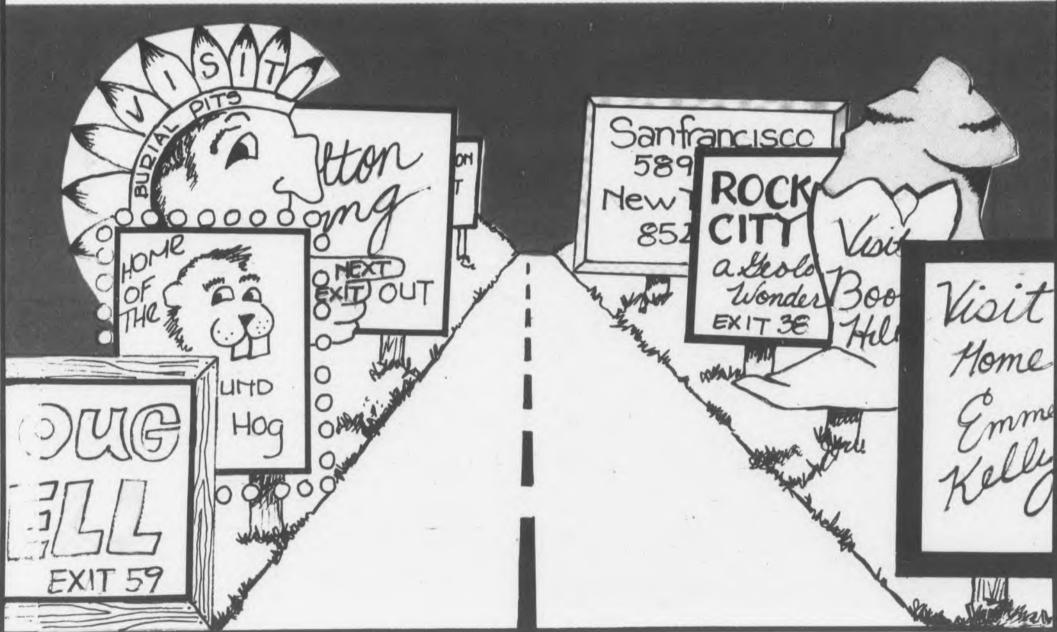

We mounted the steps and rang the. bell. A woman with frizzled, ashencolored hair and a dress to match answered. Remaining behind the screen door she invited us in and asked us to sign the guest register. Looking past the desk, a life-size portrait of Carrie Nation greets visitors with all the force of a double shot whiskey. The portrait displays all five feet of her dressed in black—Bible and hatchet in hand. Her clear blazing eyes seek those reddened by too much liquor, her broadhead hatchet poised to slice out sodden livers and blaspheming tongues.

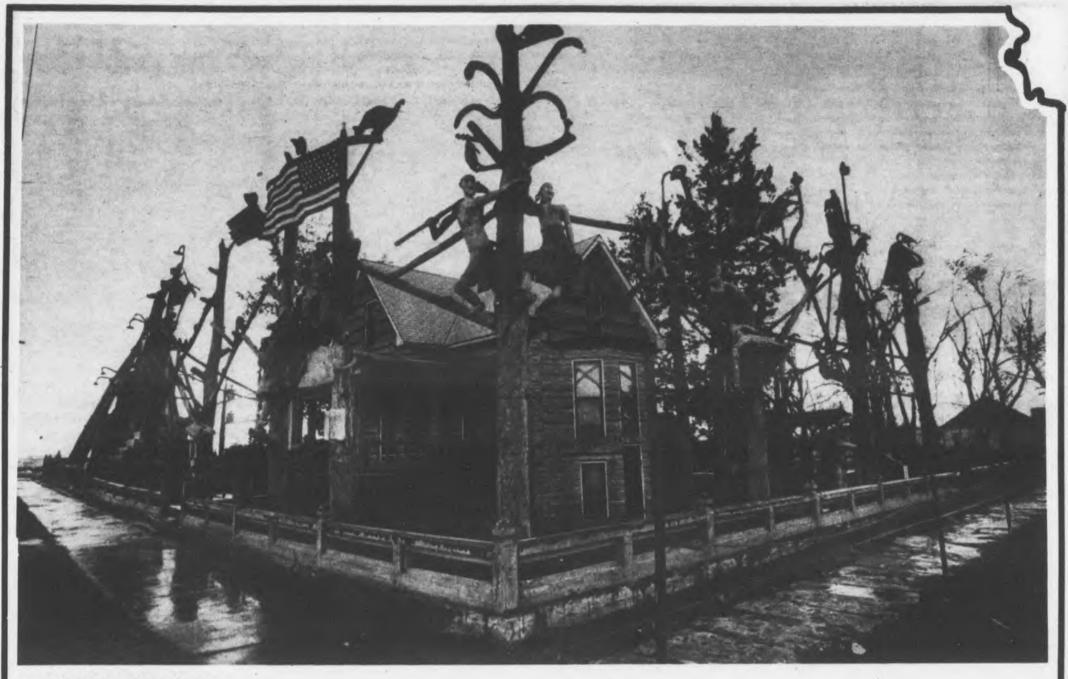

The house smelled like an attic, musty and stagnant from too little air movement and too many old clothes. Our guide led us into Nation's former bedroom. Her bed, armoire, and chest of drawers made up the original pieces from the house while a full-length mirror and several other artifacts had been donated. The mirror was given by a tavern owner who said it was once broken by one of Carrie's bricks.

Then the old lady launched into a litany sounding like a 33 1-3 album, played at 78 rpms. Unknowningly I made the mistake of interrupting her. She answered my question, but lost her place and had to go over the speech in her mind before resuming. The delivery of her talk and fact she wouldn't look either of us in the eye made the tour a bit unsettling.

Leaving the bedroom and crossing into another room, I noticed a small door in the back wall that led into our guide's living quarters. No wonder she was in such a hurry, she wanted to get back to the soap opera.

I began to feel like an uninvited guest. The next room held more funiture of the period, newspaper clippings, brass pitchers rendered useless by an ax, and an old pump organ. The woman finished her speech and left us to read some of the old clippings that covered Nation's career as a keg smasher. They reiterated what our guide had told us moments before. Nation was motivated by a failed first marriage due to an alcoholic husband. What our guide didn't say was that Carrie's second marriage failed also. The second husband, a Methodist minister, was driven away by his wife's crusade.

aving worked up a thirst, we headed for the world's deepest hand-dug well in Greensburg. The Big Well was constructed by the Rock Island and Santa Fe railroads to accomodate steam-powered trains that were to run across the state after completion of the tracks. The railroad company that laid tracks to Greensburg first, won water rights and the bill for the well. Rock Island won, received the water and a $45,000 tab.

U.S. 54 passes through Greensburg, leading into town, it is lined with billbords expounding the Big Well. Every intersection on the main street has a sign, and sure enough, so does the water tower. We found the Big Well beneath the Greensburg has a real tourist attraction and knows it. Not only is there a well, but the world's largest pallasite meteorite also. It's an impressive stop. A gift shop is packed with shelves cluttered with laquered cedar plaques and silk-screened T-Shirts. The celestial museum is in the rear. Inside sits the "space wanderer" as the meteorite is referred to. It's out in the open to be touched and explored. The inside can be seen also.

After mulling through the gift shop we went back to the well. For thirty five cents one can descend a catwalk to water level.

We paid the clerk and signed the guest register which had been signed by 70 other people that day. The door guarding the Big Well had a magnetic lock controlled by a remote switch—similar to ones used in prisons. With a loud clack we were admitted. Thirty two feet in diameter and 109 feet deep, the well is a hole worth $45,000. The contractors built the foundation on a jack that could be lowered into the hole when needed, allowing the limestone walls to be below the water line. That meant the foundation was built at ground level. The catwalk descends to a wooden platform at water level where vistors can get the full effect of the well's size. Two giant goldfish and a bluegill swim in the water adding a little life to the well. I tried feeding the fish chewing gum.

On January 1, 1976, a time capsule was placed in the wall near the base of the well to be opened December 31, 2000.

e headed for LaCrosse; home of the Post Rock Museum, Post Rock State Bank and our motel for the night. The Post Rock Museum is located two blocks off the largest throughfare in LaCrosse. It's a small limestone structure surrounded by a stone post fence. It is also closed. A sign in the window tells us it will be open from April to November. The summers must get very hot in LaCrosse since three signs inform visitors the museum is air condiditoned. The museum offers more than stone posts. There's an old railroad station and water tower carted in from nearby Timken, stone watering troughs, stone souvenirs, stone carving tools, a barbed wire exhibit, and an old wire stretcher.

The best example of stone post craftsmanship, however, is on the highway leading into town—entire wheatfields are enclosed by stone post fences. Each post is handcarved and set in the ground with a patience that comes from a love of the land and a lack of wood.

Impressed with the settlers strength and imagination implemented in taming this forbidding prairie we left LaCrosse and moved on to Lucas and the "Garden of Eden."

hat we found was an overwhelming display of a man's imagination gone wild.

S.P. Dinsmoor's dream was to leave this world with a statement. The Garden of Eden and his Cabin Home are Dinsmoor's idea of the perfect tourist attraction. He, in fact, entertained tourists while still living—reserving the first floor of his home to receive paying

When we pulled up in front of the place we were struck dumb by what appeared to be a concrete jungle. Forty-foot concrete trees with concrete people and animals in their branches loomed about a stone house. Real cedar trees grew in amongst the concrete and the wind sighed through their ragged branches. A flock of starlings added a discordant note to the branches' low moan. A fence with sharp spikes every four or five inches ran around the yard parallel to the sculptures, adding a greater feeling of foreboding.

The statues tell a story, but the concrete men and women stood mute, staring at us. A man appeared and asked if we wanted to take the tour for a buck and a half. At that moment I would have paid ten dollars to find out what motivated Dinsmoor to construct the malevolent monstrocity.

The man let us through the gate, explaining the fee was what it was, because Dinsmoor's will stipulated that no one could see him for less a dollar. Dinsmoor's crypt is part of the tour. Inside the stone house we paid the fee, and bought a book Dinsmoor had written. It contained some hilarious ramblings pertaining to the sculpture.

With the preliminaries out the way, the tour began. The first thing I noticed was the intricate woodwork. There is 3,000 feet of fir and oak woodwork in the house. The two woods were combined into one molding, each strip composed of seven different pieces of wood.

The furniture included a chair made of cattlehorns with a matching cattlehorn sewing table; several tables with game inlaid tops; and a stuffed eagle which, when alive, resided in a cage in the backyard along with some coyotes, badgers and peacocks. Several pictures in intricate wood frames lined the walls. The frames consisted of over a thousand pieces each, all whittled from old cigar boxes.

One of the pictures was of Dinsmoor's econd wife; they married when she was 20 and he was 81.

The railings on the back porch were made of cement beer bottles to spite the prohibitionists. The porch opened on to the backyard and looked over another stone house lacking windows. At the apex of the outbuilding was a concrete angel. It was Dinsmoor's tomb.

Before entering, our guide recounted Dinsmoor's will: "I promise everyone that comes in to see me (they can look through the glass and through the lid of my coffin) that if I see them dropping a dollar in the hands of the flunky, I will give them a smile.'

The guide unlocked the crypt, and we crept in. Light reflecting off the pale blue interior gave a chilling look to the already cold tomb. Dinsmoor's casket, visable through the plateglass window was flanked by tombstones belonging to he and his first wife. Blue painted glass blocked Dinsmoor's corpse from direct view, but looking at a 45 degree angle, his moldy, shriveled face, beard intact, smiled slightly back. No toothy grin, but then, no sum of money was going to get a wholesome smile out of him.

Once outside, a large sculpture of a man being crucified cast a long shadow over the tomb. The 40-foot concrete cross held five men with titles beneath their faces: A lawyer, doctor, banker and preacher. The foursome crucifying Labor represented Dinsmoor's testimony to unionization and social injustice. This was just one of the giant sculptures surrounding the yard.

Another on the south side of the house depicted Dinsmoor's concrete interpretation of the Garden of Eden as described by Moses. An enormous eye and a Satanic figure watch over a man and woman sharing an apple with a snake. Our guide explained the eye and devil represented God and Satan respectively; with man, woman, and snake—Adam and Eve and original sin.

West of this were three concrete trees. The first held two men, one holding a ram, the other a pumpkin—Cain and Abel making offerings to God. The next had Cain standing over a prostrate Abel. Abel's face bore a large gash in the center, and Cain held a broken hoe—the aftermath of Cain's jealousy toward Abel for being favored by God.

The final tree depicted Cain and a woman running and looking over their shoulders—Cain and his wife fleeing to the Land of Nod.

The entire sculpture takes up some thirty yards and is 40 feet high. After 60 years of exposure to Kansas weather, the concrete remains uncracked. In Dismoor's book the questionable credibility of his sculptures message states: "Now that is all scripture, because when I was building this they accused me of being bughouse on religion. I am bughouse good and proper, but not on religion."

To balance the religious nature of the south-side sculptures, Dinsmoor created one dedicated to equality for all. A large pole with the Mother of Justice standing atop, scales in one hand, spear in the other, upon which an octopus was impaled. Halfway down the pole a man and woman point to Justice in addition to a black and an Indian who are standing on the ground.

The guide told us Dinsmoor intended for the people pointing to the Mother of Justice were to represent the vote for all people and the octopus represented government and chartered rights for monopolies.

The sculptures standing in a small town on the prairie look out of place, and their arrangement reflect a mind obsessed with a mission.

I drove away from the Garden of Eden trying to put the weekend in perspective. On one hand Kansas has little to offer people in the way of a real tourist attraction. Natural wonders are few in Kansas, and there is only one Broadway. All Kansas has is people and their accomplishments to boast about, That is enough for Kansas.

ontrary to popular belief, they're not so straight out in Oakley, according to Lonnie Heinrich, sophomore in business administration and a native of that west Kansas town.

"I can't run down Oakley either," says Andy Hambleton, senior in journalism and mass communications from Overland Park, "because some of the wildest parties I've ever been to have been in Oakley. There're a lot of crazy people out there.'

So much for the notion that nothing exciting ever happens in small towns. Stereotyping often occurs at K-State between the "goat ropers" and the "city slickers." Each group believes the other group is as different as day is from night. But really, are the city folks so different from their country cousins? If so, is the difference so acute that polarization occurs and neither group can socialize with the other?

The size of town and size of high school a person hails from used to be important factors in sizing up an fellow student. Sometimes they still are, but such stereotypes are outdated. People are pretty much the same whether the call Oakley or Overland Park home. Each school has its class clown, the decorated football player, the quiet type and its honor roll students.

High school kids are universally ornery. Each student in his own manner finds some way to rebell or make fun of the drab routine involving algebra equations and English compositions. High school pranks have long existed in any school.

Try to figure out which of these pranks happened at a small-town high school and which in a large-city institution:

-"We used to put eggs in the microwave ovens and blow them up, or set the timers on the ovens for the same time so they'd all go off in class."

-"Toward the end of the school year, some guys decided they'd test the domino theory and push over the book stacks inthe school library.'

-"I can remember my brother once put a skunk in someone's locker.

-"We had a Fred Glick award and to get the award, you had to prove yourself to be a real jerk at one time or another. Anyone who took the award seriously deserved to get it."

-"We had bomb threats. One time the school was evacuated."

"I was the only person who pulled the fire alarm that year. Ha, and I never got

"During homecoming, some seniors ripped off some Astro Turf from a golf course to put on their senior float. They thought they would win for sure. Well, they got disqualified and our class won. That was the last year we had homecoming floats."

Sound familiar? Now, which prank originated in the small school and which came from large one? Read on for the prank location and the type attention the school officials gave the prankster.

-Pam Steele, from St. Marys-population 2,700, was kept after school for trying to bake unshelled eggs in the microwave.

-The students who called in the bomb threats at Wyandotte High School in Kansas City escaped all punishment. "They didn't get caught," said Linda Palacios, a sophomore in political science.

-Heinrich's brother in Oakley spent three school days in a small room doing class asignments for which he received no credit when he decided to odorize a classmate's locker with the skunk. "The only time he could leave the room was to go to the bathroom," Heinrich said.

The cost was a little more expensive for the instigators of the domino theory at the Wichita Southeast High School library. They spent the following summer sorting books and paying back $2,000 to cover the court and sorting costs.

—And the Wichita seniors who stole the $2,500 worth of golf course turf received more attention than they knew what to do with. From their peers, the faculty and their lawyers.

Looking at these pranks, the size of school does make a difference. "Pranks at larger schools have to be on a larger scale to get the same amount of attention to equal that of a small high school," said Tracy Holt, junior in child psychology from Wichita Southeast, a high school of 3,000 students.

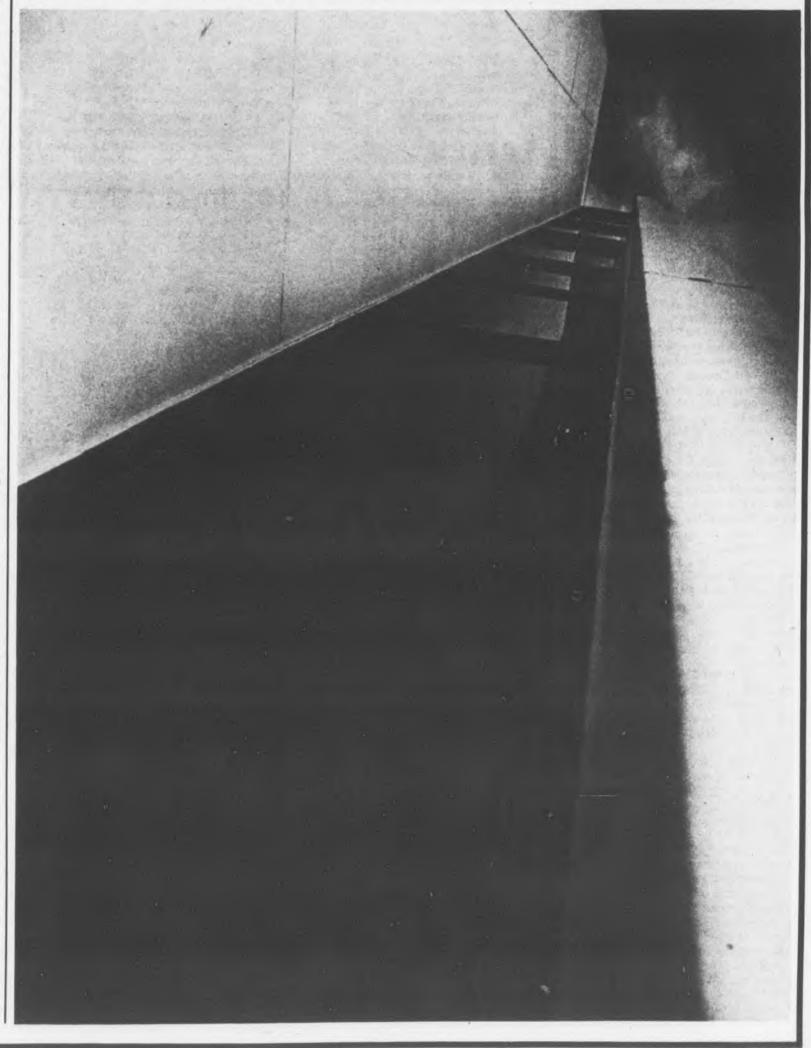

In a small town the prankster doesn't have to try hard to gain recognition and attention because everyone knows what everyone else is doing-all of the time. Naturally, this can be a disadvantage.

There are just some things a person doesn't want publicly known. Anonymity in a small town is virtually impossible.

This could be the reason so many individuals from rural Kansas were unwilling to be interviewed for this story. Students from small towns showed little desire to have their names in print, much less information concerning their lives at

On the other hand, students from Kansas City or Wichita seemed to enjoy the opportunity to open up.

Again, this could be attributed to the fact names are not as recognizable in a large town. Urban Kansans have always experienced the pleasures of pure privacy and anonymity. This, of course, can also be a disadvantage. There is a kind of facelessness in being only another number in a seven-pound telephone directory.

... same perspective

And there is another difference.
Whether it is a disadvantage or advantage depends on the point of view.
This deals with the amount of personal attention and interest the school administration directs toward their students.

"At St. Marys, they didn't suspend you for missing class," said Steele, junior in art education. "They'd try to work out a school class schedule so you'd be in classes you enjoyed, like art or shop, hoping it would get you back in school."

Holt said that in Wichita, "after 30 or 40 absences, the attendance office would send a letter home."

In Wichita after a student turns 16 it is up to him whether he attends school or drops out. If a student doesn't want to attend school, the student doesn't have to, although occasionally a faculty member will go beyond his duties and try to help the student stay in school.

"The care for the students well being by the faculty seems to diminsh proportionately with the volume of students," Holt said.

Realizing the diminished attention received from faculty, a large-city student knows he must begin to take responsibility for his own future at the age of 16. This responsibility can bring streetwiseness because he must be aware of the "real world" that awaits him should he decide to drop out of high school.

The small town life, on the other hand, is often said to be simpler.

Many K-State students come from that simpler life, yet many are "streetwise." Does this validate the stereotypes?

Think about life in high school beyond the faculty and school administration. Think about life beyond the world of farm and house chores or of work. What remains is the one experience that all of us have had to bear-growing up.

That pubescent experience incorporates many similar incidents regardless of the size of the town. It begins to happen when girl eyeballs boy and boy eyeballs girl. It occurs when the sixteenth birthday rolls around and the keys to the car acquire another owner. High school life really begins when the student crawls behind te wheel of the automobile.

Remember those memorable nights spent in the front (or back) seat of the old bomb, cruising the town, dragging up and down Main?

"One night, we were driving around in one of those little pickups and dragging Main, drinking a few beers and getting crazy," Bruce Ost, a freshman in business administration from Glen Elder, said. "We then decided to make a comotion. That little pickup would just fit on the sidewalks. We drove up down the sidewalks in town. It got worse the more we drank. Boy, did we raise some hell!"

Nearly every high school student has his personal crazy dragging stunt tucked away in his memory.

The automobile. The first slap of independence from the homestead.

Persons between the age of 12 and 18 watch less television than any other age group, according to the text "Television and Human Behavior." "It is attributable to the fact that persons of this age group desire to leave the parents and experience life on their own and not from the television."

For many, the automobile acted as the foundation for all experimentation or took one to the planting grounds of new adventure in alcohol, drugs and sex—not the television.

While the automobile led many to experimentation, for many simply learning to drive the beast was an experience that drew a category all its own.

Did the car zoom off or did it go "umph" and die after lurching forward as if to eat the pavement.

"Oh yea, let off the clutch sssloowly," you tell yourself and hope nobody in the car will say a word, for if a word was muttered you'd melt in embarassment through the vinyl seat. You try again, the car jerks pathetically forward, then gains its composure and so do you. After about thirty minutes of repeated tries, you soon get the hang of it and soon an air of confidence builds when you turn off to Main Street, or pull into the high school parking lot for the football game.

Football games, another segment of the life of the high school student, small or large it didn't matter when school spirit was the subject.

Were you in the band, out on the field or in the stands screaming your vocal chords into paralyzation?

It doesn't really matter whether you were city or town, if a person grew up and went through high school, they've kissed and been kissed, learned to drive an automobile, dragged Main, probably experimented with alcohol or drugs, pulled off a few high school pranks, and accepted a high school diploma. And now, here we are in Manhattan, Kan., attending K-State, working on another diploma just like the other students living around you.

These common experiences dissolve the country-city stereotypes. As one student said: "It really doesn't matter where anyone is from, because we're all people and are all about he same."

Beliefs, customs, stories

By NANCY KRAUS

t was May 1980, and Jennie Chinn was heading for western Kansas—not an unusal occurence to many Kansans, but for Chinn it was a new experience. She was born and reared in Los Angeles near the ocean. Her assignment was to cover the western half of Kansas, documenting and photographing information on Kansas folklore and folk arts for Manhattan's University for Man (UFM).

"I was doing graduate work in folklore at UCLA, when I saw a description of this job and I sent in a resume," she said. She received the job and has made about seven trips to western Kansas.

Chinn said a folk art can be anything from dancing to weaving to limestone fence post cutting. Folklore and folk arts are passed from generation to generation.

"Everyone practices their own folklore or folk arts," she said, "It could be a college professor, a farmer in Colby or a college student. We all have our own beliefs and rituals; but many times we're just not aware of them or we're not aware that it's folklore."

Most people she interviewed believe there's a renewed interest in the traditional arts for they provide low-cost entertainment close to home.

For example, Chinn found a woman who dabbled with herbs and their folk meanings. "This woman could tell you what herb to put under your pillow so your lover won't leave you," she laughed.

Her first tour of western Kansas, on that May morning, led her to Dodge City. She was to attend an arts and crafts fair which provided an opportunity to make contacts with traditional artists.

As she approached Dodge, she noticed several decorative rural mailboxes lining the highway—an unusal item to someone from Los Angeles.

"I'm basically urban, so I was really amazed at the creativity and thought that goes into rural mailboxes. Outside of Dodge City, I remember pulling my car over and taking photos of a sculptered iron cowboy riding the mailbox," Chinn said

At Dodge City she found both a strong Mexican-American and "cowboy" population. "It was more cowboy than anything I'd ever seen," she observed.

"I had heard that western Kansas was nothing but long drives, but I guess that people who would say that had never traveled anything but Interstate 70."

From Dodge City, Chinn headed north and drove through Jetmore. There, she took special note of the buildings constructed of native limestone. Situated on a tiny main street she believed they were the county courthouse and city office buildings.

"I was impressed with the beauty of the native stone. It produces some handsome structures."

From Jetmore, Chinn traveled east to Larned where she checked out the Fort Larned Regional Museum at the Santa Fe Trail Center. Near the museum was a rebuilt sod house. The "folk artist" who helped rebuild the house was an older man who learned the process of making sod bricks as a child.

I use the word artist in a very loose sense," Chinn explained. "Because it includes folk architects who built sod houses and cut stone fence posts."

The stone fence posts could be studied at LaCrosse where Chinn visited the Post Rock Museum. She was fascinated by the beauty of the limestone with its fossils and with the ingenuity employed by the homesteaders who couldn't find timber and used the stone to fence their land.

"The people of that area should be proud," she remarked. "It shows that "I had heard Kansas was nothing but long drives, but I guess that people who would say that had never traveled anything but Interstate 70" man can cope under all kinds of conditions,"

"I was happy and impressed to see so many of the stone posts still used on the farms and ranches. I thought they might have disappeared."

Ithough she found many people who still knew how to cut the stone fence posts, she found only one man who cuts limestone for a living. This man, from Beloit, can cut the rock as his father did, but has invented machinery that makes the cutting easier than by hand. The cut limestone is used for fence posts, fireplaces and buildings.

"He gave me a stone fence post split in half with many fossils, I was amazed—that stuff is heavy," she said.

On another tour of western Kansas, Chinn visited the Hays area where she found a strong influence from the Volga German or German-Russian people that settled the area around the turn of the century. She also encountered the legend of Elizabeth Polly.

Near the old Fort Hays Museum, Chinn visited the grave of Polly's and heard the local tale that has passed through several generations.

"She is sometimes called the Blue Light Lady and it is said that her ghost still appears at local festivals.

"Polly was a nurse who would care for soldiers stricken with cholera. She married a lieutenant, but died soon afterwards of the cholera she had contracted from the soldiers.

"She loved this hill near the fort and used to take long walks up there. She wanted to be buried up there but it was too rocky so they buried her part way up the hill. Since then, her grave has been moved to the top of the hill," Chinn said.

The Volga German people of the Hays area also provided Chinn with some examples of local folk arts. These people had migrated from Germany to Russia during the rule of Catherine the Great. Though they did not intermarry, they were influenced by Russian customs.

Many of them migrated to the United States and the midwest about 1878. They were mostly Catholic and Lutheran and brought many decorative iron crosses to the cemeteries around the Hays area.

They also believed in celebrating weddings and the large polka-wedding dances are still popular in the area. German-Russian ethnic foods are also popular in Hays and may be sampled at festivals such as the Ocktoberfest. Kuchen, bratwurst, bierocks, pigs in the blanket (cabbage rolls), beer and many other ethnic food and drink are available.

directed to a pay phone on the highway, but a local man, who was in the post office at the time, invited me to his house around the corner to use his phone. After my call, I sat with him and his wife and drank coffee for an hour or so. This was amazing for someone from Los Angeles."

During her trip to northwest Kansas, Chinn found that near St. Francis, the land changes from an area called the breaks to a badlands area.

"Here, the outlaws used to hide in canyons called cat steps. Near St. Francis, someone showed me a bluff where the last wild buffalo in Kansas was supposed to have been shot."

Near Atwood, Oberlin and Norton she found many people who were rich in their American "conguentos," to the bluegrass, jazz, gospel and polka fiddling of other Kansas performers.

Another art found in Kansas which has declined in popularity, but was observed at the Topeka festival was body tattooing. Tattoo artists used to travel the country with carnivals, but their art which was once very traditional has almost died out in some areas.

Yet Chinn noted this art is still prevalent in areas where sailors are found. The sponsors of the Topeka festival were "horrified" that a free tattoo was offered by this exhibit, she commented.

Another folk art Chinn observed at the Topeka festival was the unusual hobby of weaving human-hair flowers. She found a woman from Kiowa who learned the art from her grandmother.

"Most of the small museums in Kansas have the woven human-hair flowers, but the only person I found here in Kansas that still practices the art was this woman from Kiowa. The human hair is woven on a wire and it then looks kind of like a pipe cleaner. She has made generational wreathes that contain hair from as many as five generations," Chinn said.

Although it may be impossible to document all of the historical folklore and folk arts of Kansas since it was first settled, Chinn has begun to document this information for use by future generations of Kansans.

"During the national bicentennial of 1976, we realized that we didn't know a lot about ourselves. Since then, there has been a renewed interest in the folk arts and folklore of the United States.

"Because many of these people who know the folk arts are growing older, we realized that unless we record this information now, its's going to be gone forever.

"But folk life won't die. It is something that continues changing and adapts itself over time. It will always be with us into the new ages.

"The assumption that folklore is old and dying out is not true," she said. "It just takes on different forms." "...we realized we didn't know a lot about ourselves..."

"The land and space are so overwhelming that it makes you reevaluate your importance to the world."

Another of Chinn's favorite trips was to northwest Kansas where she was awed by the massive flat prairie.

"I found the prairie to be very peaceful, because it's so minimal. To me, it has the same relaxing quality as the ocean does for people that grew up on the coastline. The colors, from the ground, to the crops to the sky are really striking and rich. The sunsets in western Kansas are better than I thought possible—having grown up in the city. They are spectacular.

"Also, I was impressed with the people as a whole. They appeared very knowledgeable about their history and the importance the environment plays in their life.

"There was a fascination of the people I talked with in the native American culture of their past. Many Indian archeological sites exist and the people are keenly aware of the native American past in their area.

"I know it sounds trite, but the land and space is so overwhelming that it makes you reevaluate your importance to the world. It gave me a very free and relaxed feeling," Chinn said.

he considers each town to be a new physical and spiritual adventure. "The local cafes are often the central meeting place for local people. I would go into a cafe and get the feeling that I was among family. Everyone knew each other and the people care about each other's lives. They are also curious as to why I am there, but they are always very cooperative."

Chinn encountered an example of this friendliness in Pawnee Rock.

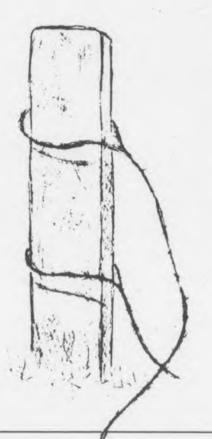

"Pawnee Rock is not thriving economically and is kind of quiet. I was looking for a public telephone and stopped at the post office where I was knowledge of the traditional arts.

At Atwood, Chinn inteviewed a man who was a local, ex-rodeo star. He was a fine leather worker, played the fiddle and could still do his roping tricks for interested bystanders.

There were also several people in the area who make use of scrap material and things they find, she said. Near St. Francis there was a man who uses old metal to make sophisticated sculptures.

Last September, Chinn visited the Kansas Folklife Fessival in Topeka, sponsored by the state historical society. There she observed musicians performing a wide range of music—from the traditional music of the Mexican-year ago, Manhattan's University For Man (UFM) began to document and record traditional folk arts and folklore associated with Kansas. The first phase was funded by the National Endowments for the Arts, the Kansas Arts Commission and UFM.

"Our goal was to come up with the basis for a folklife archive that would be housed at the state historical library in Topeka," said Jennie Chinn, a UFM employee.

For phase one, UFM assigned two workers to the state, one for the eastern half, another for the west.

Phase two is currently underway. It involves completing the field work started so that all 105 Kansas counties are covered. That portion of the program is 75 percent complete. When finished it will be marked by a publication of some type so that Kansans will be aware the collection exists and how they can use it.

Phase three of the project has not yet been funded. If finished, it would provide a traveling exhibit of Kansas folklore and folk arts through the outreach programs of free universities.

"In phase three, we would set up artist-in-residency programs that would allow local artists to pass on to others the knowledge of their traditional arts, Chinn said.

The Hills

By JANET TERRY

(With apolgies to James Michner.)

wo hundred million years ago, in a time length where Man exists only as a speck of dust on the coffeetable of life, Dame Earth heaved, took a deep breath, and raised the pre-historic Flint Hills above the embryonic comfort of the sea.

Sucking in her breath, she returned all but the highest peaks for a final renewal of animal-lime deposits and carbonous mud beneath the sea.

Another breath, thirty million years later, gave life not only to the present-day Flint Hills, but to the majestic Rocky Mountains.

Offering a gift to their smaller cousins, the youthful Rockies showered gravel and chert across the plains to the Flint Hills. Laying this gift on a bed of water-containing florence flint created the rocky soil foundation of the grasslands.

So that the Hills would not forget their origin, the Rockies delivered them water the mountains could not use. Occassional glacial visits to the plains gouged paths for the run-off for the run-off.

One gouged path, the Kaw, was swiftflowing in its youth and cut its path into the Hills. Grinding and flowing, it blended the rocky gifts to create sand and a fine silt. As the river aged, it cut a wider path. In the casualness of maturity, it slowed in flow and meandered through the plains and hills.

At least until spring.

With the rains, the river makes a senile return to youth. Leaving the confinements of its banks, the Kaw swiftly wanders the valleys and crevices of the Hills. Its exploring complete, the river returns to acting its age and, in apology, leaves a gift of rich silt and sand.

The constant blender-action of the river, the annual run-off, the rocky gift and the aging elements produced the present-day Flint Hills.

Taking root in the rocky soil were the tall bluestem, switch and Indian grasses. Reputed to grow tall enough in some lower valleys to hide a man on horseback, the grasses took tenacious hold in the soil. With a root system several feet deep, the grasses weren't domesticated by Man until the development of the steel plow.

Thirsty hackberry, elm, willow, cottonwood and oak trees found natural root by rivers and streams.

The seasons of the Flint Hills vibrate with their own personal color, in April a jade green covers the Hills as they wake up from a long winter nap. The redbud vies with the white plum to dominate the bluffs, while the blue-green of the new willow below loses itself in the diaphanous mist rising from the river. The advent of summer heat turns the Hills a pale green developing in August to a seared brown. September colors of flaming sumac, russet oak, brown elm, hackberry and golden cottonwood contrast against a background of rockcrowned hills. With the grasses turning a rose color, the Hills enter the gray dead of winter in a final struggle of life.

The abundance of grass and availability of water attract a variety of browsing animals, who, in turn, attract predators: Wolf, cougar and coyote.

The bison bull shook his shaggy head belligerently. His low ponderous head slowly turned to survey the nearby herd of cows and calves. Keeping his eye on the lookout for predators, he makes a cautious check of the young bulls who might challenge his status as dominant bull in the herd.

He gives little attention to the young bulls or to the superannuated bulls who remained on the outside of the herd.

The herd spent the winter on the south plains. It became restless as the weather warmed. One cow began making her way among the other cows and butting the old bulls. Informing them it was time to move to summer pastures, the cow moved north with the rest of the herd following.

Traveling for several days, she led them slowly and seemingly aimlessly to the edge of a river. Testing the water at several points, she chose the safest and led the herd across.

Icy cold from melting snow, the river received the powerful beasts. The cows kept their calves upstream and the bulls fell in behind the cows. The dominant bull was last. Reaching the other side, the bull shook, creating a small rainstorm with his furious shakes.

Reaching the summer grassland, the lead cow stopped, sniffed the ground and signaled her approval by beginning to graze. The important job of moving the herd was complete, she turned the leadership back to the black male.

Warm weather, plenty of grass and water, springtime also brought the annual physical urgings of renewal. The lead leader joined the rest of the bulls in venting his frustrations on trees and rolling in his urine on sandy prairie dog hills.

re-occupied with the traditions of spring, the bulls failed to notice the presence of a new enemy. Silent showers of flint death rained on the herd. As the members began to falter, bellowing in pain, and fall, kicking to the ground, the remainder stampeded.

At the first sound of distress, the lead bull galloped to rejoin the herd. As he neared the fleeing mass, a sharp pain struck his shoulder. Faltering slightly, he turned to meet his attacker and protect the herd's flank.

Speeding toward him was an unfamiliar creature mounted on a longlegged galloping animal. Bronze-skinned, with straight black hair, the new creature leaned toward the bull, aiming a long lance. Startled by the strange sight, the bull snorted and turned to join his panicked herd.

The leader sensed the horse and rider beside him. The terror increased. A deep sharp pain stabbed his side. He fell to his knees, the momentum somersaulted his heavy body. Bellowing in pain, he kicked in frustration and connected only the air. Tiring in pain, he sucked deep breaths. The bull spasmodically jerked. The last thing heard was the thunder of receding hooves.

he Kansas woman was heavy with child. Despite this, she was striking her home and packing for the journey to the tribe's hunting grounds.

Dressed in moccasins, leggings and a coarse cloth that was belted at her waist and loosely attached over her shoulder, the woman was not pretty by white standards. Her gente was the Earth People of the People of the South Wind. As a member of this gente, she had the right, after consulting the Buffalo and Deer People, to announce the moving of camp. When they reached the new destination they also had the right to the choicest camp spots. But she was not allowed to eat the roasted maize until all other gentes had taken their fill.

Moving north with the rest of her people, the woman began to feel the pangs of birth. Continuing moving until the pains could be resisted no longer, the woman moved out of the path of the moving Indians to give birth to her child. Unloading the bundle she carried on her head, she laid down and unceremoniously gave birth to a son.

Without time to clean either herself or her son, she wrapped the red-faced, black-haired baby in a piece of buffalo skin. Without hestitation, she picked up the bundle and the baby and returned to the moving group of Indians. Stopping for the evening by a small creek, she quickly washed herself and the baby and hurried to help her Earth People to select camp.

The buffalo were located and the Kansa men left for the hunt. With the herd stampeding in the distance and the men returning to camp to discuss their daring exploits, the women proceeded to skin and dress the day's kill.

This hunting trip had been uneventful, the woman thought to herself as they returned to their permanent home where the Big Blue and Kaw met. There had been times when they had encountered Pawnee and Osage hunters and arrows flew between the tribes. The encroachment of the Kansa on traditional Osage and Pawnee hunting grounds was resented. The Kansa had migrated from the north Ohio river valley and possibly from as far north as the East Coast.

This time they returned to the village after the semi-annual hunt for months. A measure of economic security emerged as the tribe began to trade with the white trading posts near their village.

At the village, the Kansa woman concentrated on raising her son and cultivating the principal crops of beans, pumpkins, prairie potatoes, melon and especially corn.

Two hunting seasons passed. The woman had another child—a girl this time. Willfully obstinate and demanding, the older child grew as other boys did in the tribe. He was not disciplined—his headstrong character being nurtured as essential to his eventual status as hunter and warrior. Reaching adolesence, the boy was counciled about manhood by his father. As instructed, the boy sought an isolated spot. Denying himself food or water, he waited for the vision of his manhood. By the end of the third day, weak and cramped by hunger, he was haunted by strange dreams. He woke from a fitful sleep the fourth day. Lightheaded from sacrifice, he began to imagine himself running across the valley that stretched in front of him.

Faster and faster he ran until no longer was he running on two legs, but four. In the image of a gray horse, he raced across the length of the valley.

Satisfied that his strength was in the gray horse of his imagination, the boy returned to the village. His vision allowed him to participate in hunts and raids alongside the other men of the tribe.

everal years after his vision, the young man observed, with passing interest, a 14-year-old girl being paraded about the village by her mother. The mother announced the ornately-dressed young girl's marriage elgibility.

The young man's parents took more than a passing interest in the elgibility rite. Exchanging gifts with the girl's family several times, the parents publically announced the marriage arrangement. The girl appeared again in parade, dressed in her finest. An official crier announced the upcoming marriage. When the prospective bride arrived at the young man's parents' home, she was stripped and dressed in the finest clothes available. She was returned to her parents with the new clothes, and gifts of horses and trinkets.

In the matrimonial ceremony at the bride's family lodge, the father of the bride delivered his customary ranting speech complaining about his son-in-law's eventual assumption of his lodge.

With the ceremony over, the young man had firmly established himself as a part of the warrior class in his tribe. By now he had developed into a mature member of the People of the South Wind. Standing six feet, two inches, large and muscular, the young man's coppery skin glistened with the reflection of a Kansa man in his prime. His straight black hair had been carefully plucked from his scalp, leaving only a traditional narrow strip on the top and back. He streaked his hair with vermillion and at the end tied braided tail hairs of a gray horse. All other hair on his face and arms was also meticulously plucked.

In the spring of his 19th year, the young man joined a group of his friends to raid a Pawnee camp for horses. Dressed in his blue breechcloth and securing it with a girdle, he added leggings and moccasins of dressed deerskins. Armed with his lance, bow and arrows he joined his companions to travel west.

After several days the group happened upon a group of white buffalo hunters. The young man set his attentions on a gray stallion that was picketed some distance from the camp. At an opportune moment, the Kansa attacked the hunters and the young man directed his attention to the gray stallion.

Grabbing the rope of the gray, he yipped with success and started to make off with his prize. Suddenly, a searing pain struck his chest and spread to encompass his body. He did not feel the ground as he fell...

eth cursed as he struck his thumb with the hammer. "That's what I get for being in such a hurry," he muttered to himself.

It was late and he wanted to finish the windmill platform by sunset. Driving the last nail into a leg, Seth sighed in relief and leaned against the windmill brace.

"Put the fan up tomorrow, and I won't have to worry about water for my cattle during the dry season," he thought.

Facing west, Seth soaked in the beauty of the Kansas sun going to bed. For five years he watched it disappear behind the Flint Hills. He believed the daily beauty was his private reward for the work he put in the land.

As the fire went out in the sun, Seth climbed down the windmill and started homeward to Sarah and his two children.

The wagon ride had been rough. Sarah felt as though every bone in her body was personally counting the rocks on the trail. But twenty years old, she felt she had aged another ten the five days they spent on the trail.

The early part of the trip wasn't too tough. They had taken a train to Chicago and at St. Louis, boarded the steamer "Katy Swinney" and made it to Kansas City by March 9.

The steamer was the lighter part of the trip. The glee club the settlers organized kept them entertained and busy.

When they reached Kansas City, the head of the expedition, Isaac Goodnow, met with Samuel Pomeroy. Working out the details of their destination, Goodnow took a small group to the selected site at the junction of the Blue and Kaw rivers. Speed was essential. Goodnow's benefactors, the New England Aid Society, was primarily interested in establishing the settlement in the cause of free-statehood. Territorial elections were to be held March 30 and the townsite had to be laid out and recorded.

Goodnow managed to consolidate Canton and Polistra already situated at the site. Naming the consolidation "Boston," Goodnow welcomed the remaining settlers to the new site, Seth and Sarah included. Others from the original group had become discouraged early, still others left as the Kansas elements took their toll.

Sarah watched as a steamship chugged its way up the Kaw. It was a particularly windy day of a particularly windy Spring. It was April 26. Originally heading for the Smoky Hill-Republican junction, the Hartford went aground on the wind-piled sandbar. The group of passengers from Ohio disembarked and was convinced to stay by a promise of half the town sections. "Boston" was rechristened "Manhattan."

Sarah was still skeptical about this adventure. The first year wasn't too bad. The winter had been mild, dry and windy. Although it didn't snow much, what snow that did fall was carried by the menacing Kansas wind into every nook and crevice of their sod and log home. Sarah tried her best to keep it out, but on a night it would fall, the family would wake with a blanket of snow on them.

They almost gave up after the winter of 1856. The temperature averaged eight degrees below zero and it hit a bottom mark of 31 degrees below zero one night. Three feet of snow fell Feb. 9, making it difficult to reach the green cottonwood for fuel—much less burn it. Sarah at least was thankful Seth had insisted on building a sod and log house instead of a "shake" structure that had little resistance to the cold.

Sarah stirred the stew in the fireplace. Five years of difficulties and they were finally starting to do more than just survive. Surviving tornado threats, drought, floods, insect plagues, grass fires, inconsistent weather, they were bound to the land. They had too much invested to pull out now. Seth was even talking about constructing a stone house with a real wood floor soon.

Seth would be home soon. He always returned after the sun set. From the first day, Seth made a habit of putting the sun to bed before he returned home to put his two children to sleep.

Student Senate studies alternatives

Survey may replace referendum

By JIM LAURENCIG Collegian Reporter

A new referendum is not necessary in order to increase student fees for construction of a new coliseum, but the possibility has not been ruled out while alternative measures are being

"It's an option that we still have, but it's not mandatory," said Doug Dodds, Student Senate chairman.

If a referendum is held, Dodds said, it would probably be held independent of general elections in order to conform to the tentative timetable for construction of the coliseum.

However, a referendum has been criticized as an inaccurate indicator of student opinion, Dodds said. It is possible only organized living group people would turn out to vote, giving a biased judgment, he said.

ALTHOUGH THE original 1979 referendum was passed by a 3-1 margin and the voter turnout was the biggest for any K-State election, the number of voters may not have been representative of the entire student body. There were 5,578 votes cast in the coliseum referendum, with 4,246 in favor of the new coliseum and 1,332 opposed. The referendum vote was held in conjunction with a student government election.

The referendum was voided last week by senate. At the same meeting. senate adopted a resolution which "reaffirms its (Student Senate's) commitment to a new coliseum at K-State and wishes to seek additional student input to determine the appropriate level of finanacial commitment or other support that might be made by students."

INSTEAD OF a referendum, one alternative would be a statistical study to determine students' opinions on the issue, Dodds said.

This study would be conducted by Don Hoyt, director of educational research for the Department of Educational Resources.

The survey would consist of a form containing a series of questions that would be presented to students selected by a random process and balanced for sexes, classes and colleges, Hoyt said. The survey would be accurate to plus or minus 5 percent, he said.

"We expect to draw a sample that will accurately reflect student opinion," Hoyt said. "We'll have an accurate view of the entire student body rather than just those who would show up to vote."

Missing U.S. priest returns to Embassy

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) - An American Roman Catholic priest who was missing and feared dead for 10 days walked into the U.S. Embassy here Wednesday afternoon, embassy spokesman Howard Lane reported.

The Rev. Roy Bourgeois, a 42-year-old Maryknoll priest based in Chicago, vanished April 26 after he left the Camino Real Hotel, reportedly to buy some medicine. Lane said he entered the embassy at about 4:45 p.m. and appeared in good health.

A letter allegedly written by the priest and made available here Wednesday evening said, "after much reflection and prayer I have decided to join the poor of El Salvador in their struggle for justice and peace. While I recognize that the armed struggle of the Salvadoran people is justified I personally cannot and will not bear

The letter also said: "It hurts me deeply to know that my country, the United States, is supplying military advisers and arms to a repressive dictatorship at war with its own people."

The civil war in El Salvador involving leftist guerrillas trying to overthrow the civilian-military junta, and rightist elements opposed to reform, has taken an estimated 22,000 lives in the past 11/2

The Rev. Paul Newpower, a spokesman for the Maryknoll Order in Maryknoll, N.Y., said he knew nothing beyond the information reported by the embassy and could not explain why Bourgeois had disappeared or where he had been.

Britain anticipates trouble, sends 600 troops to burial

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - Britain airlifted 600 troops of the crack Royal Welsh battalion to Northern Ireland on Wednesday to strengthen security in case violence escalates in the troubled province when hunger striker Bobby Sands is buried.

Thousands of Roman Catholics were expected to turn out Thursday for the funeral Mass and Irish Republican Army (IRA) burial of Sands, 27, who died early Tuesday on the 66th day of a hunger strike aimed at forcing Britain to grant political status to Snipers killed a policeman and wounded a policewoman Wednesday night in a Catholic neighborhood of Belfast. A richocheting bullet injured a 9year-old boy playing nearby. Two British soldiers were wounded in an exchange of gunfire in County Armagh.

Sands' body was carried from his family's home to the nearby Church of St. Luke's on Wednesday night, led by an IRA honor guard wearing woolen masks, combat jackets and black berets.

Sands' father and brother were among the pallbearers. His mother and sister wept as they marched behind. More than 1,000 sympathizers followed in the procession. Mourners filed into the church in drizzling rain for a 20-minute memorial service, at which the Rev. Sean Rogan appealed, "Lord hear our prayers and be merciful to your son

Sands' imprisoned comrades vowed to follow him to their deaths if necessary in the war of wills with the British government, according to a statement issued by Sinn Fein, the political front of the mainly Catholic IRA.

A Defense Ministry spokesman in London said the troop reinforcements called for by Ulster army commander Gen. Sir Richard Lawson, were "a precautionary measure" to back up the 11,100 British soldiers already in the province.

It was the first time Britain sent reinforcements to the province since the summer of 1978, following a wave of bombings on British army barracks in the province during a widespread surge of violence.

Except for scattered stonethrowing in Catholic areas of Belfast, police reported the city relatively calm after an eruption of gasoline-bomb throwing overnight. There also was rioting overnight in Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second major city, and Dublin, capital of the neighboring Republic of Ireland.

However, near Crossmaglen in County Armagh, a foot patrol of British troopers came under automatic weapons fire and two were injured, army headquarters reported. It said 20 rounds from automatic weapons were fired at the patrol, which returned the fire. No hits were claimed by the army. One soldier was hit in the thigh, the other in the shoulder. Both injuries were described as "not

Police said 38 people had been arrested in violence sparked by the death of Sands, who had been convicted of a gun possession charge and recently elected to the British Parliament. Twenty-four people have been injured.

Security forces fear new violence following a threeday IRA mourning period and Sands' funeral.

Sinn Fein said on Tuesday that 70 more of the 440 jailed IRA men in the Maze had volunteered to join the hunger strike. So far none have done so.

Teamsters union president dies

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons, a high school dropout who ruled the nation's biggest union for the last 14 years, died Wednesday, several weeks after he was hospitalized for lung cancer. He was 73 and a month away from the end of his Reports of Fitzsimmons' death came as the executive board of the 2-million-member union was meeting in Washington to consider a successor. Union sources said Roy Williams, head of the Central Conference of Teamsters in Kansas, is the front-runner. Fitzsimmons had been hospitalized since Easter at the Scripps Clinic near here. He died about 9:10 a.m. PDT. Funeral arrangements are pending and will be private, said a spokewoman for

During Fitzsimmons' leadership, the federal government brought a civil suit against him and other former trustees of the Central States Pension Fund, alleging mismanagement of retirement money. That suit was Fitzsimmons died a month filed by then-Labor Secretary Ray Marshall in February 1978.

At the union's convention in Miami in 1965, Hoffa was reelected. But delegates, at Hoffa's behest, created the office of general vice president, to which Fitzsimmons was elected. The post was created to fill the presidency if a vacancy occurred.

Hoffa was pardoned Dec. 23, 1971, by President Richard Nixon with the stipulation he not be involved in union polities for 10 years. Fitzsimmons subsequently was elected in his place.

Court protects prince's private calls

LONDON — A British court on Wednesday granted Prince Charles an injunction blocking publication of purported transcripts of telephone conversations between the prince and his fiancee, Lady Diana Spencer.

The ruling orders free-lance journalist Simon Regan not to distribute the transcripts he has been trying to sell to the highest bidder. A West German magazine confirmed it was considering taking him up on the deal.

Regan claims he was allowed to transcribe tape-recorded conservations between Charles and Diana after meeting some Australians who had tapped the prince's phone line while he visited that country last month.

Regan and others who claim to have read the transcripts say they contain unflattering comments by Charles about Australia and its leaders and intimate conversation between the Prince and Diana.

Military jet explodes, 21 die

WALKERSVILLE, Md. — A military jet exploded into a "ball of fire" over a farm Wednesday, killing all 21 crew members and scattering bodies, debris and classified documents over a wide area, authorities said.

Air Force Major William Campbell confirmed all those aboard the sophisticated missile-and-satellite tracking aircraft were killed, but he said authorities had recovered 20 bodies by late Wednesday. One of the victims was identified as Staff Sgt. Michael Wayne Darling, of Salina.

Mail vote defeats 'Frisco proposal

SAN DIEGO — The nation's largest election by mail ended with the defeat Wednesday of a proposed downtown convention complex which San Diego officials had authorized without a public vote.

After the two-week election, an official said "we're overwhelmed" by the turnout-61.7 percent of registered voters or twice that of previous special elections in the nation's eighth-largest city.

The unofficial vote was 56.6 percent to 43.4 percent against issuing $224 million in lease-revenue bonds. The proposal was a key link in efforts to rebuild San Diego's decaying inner core.

Pete Meyer, president of the California County Clerks Association, said it was a step toward making polls and ballot boxes obsolete.

Jail gets bars after prisoner escapes

TALOGA, Okla. - The Dewey County Jail, closing the barn door after the horse has escaped, has decided to put bars on its windows.

A 19-year-old burglary suspect, Ronald Lee Poulter, managed to remove the glass from the 7-inch-by-14-inch window in his cell and squeeze through to freedom Sunday, Deputy Sheriff Carolyn Evans said.

"We're putting bars up on the outside," she said Tuesday. "They should be here by tomorrow."

When the new $400,000 jail was completed here a year ago, replacing a 54-year-old building, its narrow cell windows were covered with thick bulletproof glass.

"We thought we had maximum security," the deputy said. "It doesn't look like you could get through there...but I guess you can."

Legislator raps omnibus bull

TOPEKA - Rep. James Lowther, chairman of the House Education Committee, and Jim Lewis, president of Kansas-National Education Association, sharply criticized Wednesday the action of the 1981 Legislature in the area of school finance.

"Changes the Legislature adopted in the omnibus bill Monday represents 'statutory rape' as far as our schools and college students are concerned," said Lowther in a statement. Lewis said "the GOP-controlled 1981 Kansas Legislature has sacrificed Kansas education and the property taxpayers on the altar of maintaining a so-called 'balanced budget' and an unjustifiably large 'rainy day' state treasury balance." House Speaker Wendell Lady, R-Overland Park, joined in the word war, accusing Democratic Gov. John Carlin of "doubletalking" and "partisan politics" on the school finance Lowther said he was deeply concerned the Legislature would take $1.5 million in student tuition fee increases and pump the money out for property tax relief.

"I would urge the Board of Regents to reduce their proposed tuition hike from 22 percent to 18.5 percent and so prevent this from happening," Lowther said.

Stormy session ends

The 1981 session of the Kansas Legislature came to a merciful close Monday night after a pitched battle over the proper way to fund elementary and secondary school budgets.

Legislators spent the waning hours of this session bartering for a compromise that would satisfy members of both chambers.

This last-minute fussing and feuding has become a trademark of the Legislature. The result is often a hodgepodge of legislation hammered out by tired representatives who really only want to get the whole thing over with.

This year, school financing and property taxes were considered the key issues for the Legislature. The final package that was decided upon now awaits final consideration by Gov. John Carlin. It appears likely that he will veto some sections of it.

School financing is an issue that deserves closer attention and long-range planning. That attention cannot be given in the chaotic conclusion of the legislative session.

Dental care in Lafene

At a recent meeting of the Riley County Dental Society, Dr. Tom Barth, president of the society, reported a favorable response when he proposed the idea of providing dental staff at Lafene Student Health Center.

The addition of a dental care staff in Lafene could present more problems than benefits.

Although a student survey taken last November indicated that dental care is desired, the added load could only slow other medical services at Lafene. Dentists would only be available on a limited basis, and it might prove difficult to allocate their services fairly.

Funding for the dental care remodeling and equipment is to come from the Conrad J.K. Ericksen and Dorotha Ericksen Fund. Those funds could be better used to improve the quality of the existing medical staff and facilities at Lafene rather than implementing a new and costly program.

Coalition comments

Editor,

I would like to offer a few observations on the question of whether the Student Senate decision not to fund the Coalition for Human Rights was a stand in favor of all things good and American or a representation of narrow-minded insensitivity to the world's problems.

I am disheartened by several currents of opinion I find among some students on the campus: a fear of anything "controversial," a dislike for new information that might force re-evaluation of old ideas, and a belief that no organization has the right to exist unless it mirrors their own views. To these people the coalition presents a triple threat. It need not if time is taken to reflect on a few thoughts.

The coalition was founded specifically to increase community awareness of human rights issues pertaining to the developing world. Thus, the Soviet Union and Europe are not our turf.

The coalition members agree that we are most useful if we target our limited resources toward educational programs about those countries in which the United science States has the power to influence policy. Thus we choose to discuss Central America and South Africa rather than those states in which the Soviet Union has primary influence.

The American role in the developing world is not an unblemished one. Do not we, who have the responsibility to vote for those who make our foreign policy, have the need to understand the bad being done in our names as well as the good?

The presence of the coalition does not preclude the presence on campus of other groups publicizing Soviet human rights violations. Those who formed the coalition have worked long hours to assemble our programs. Let those with a different agenda do the same, and then let them try to do it well without University funding.

The Coalition for Human Rights will be around in September, and that isn't much to fear unless one is truly afraid of pluralism, free speech, and informed citizenship. That fear is the most serious threat that can confront any university.

Joys of criticism

My first observation came more than five years ago as a reader, not a contributor.

After moving into one of the glaring cinderblock palaces known as residence halls, still a kid struggling to grow facial hair, I was startled to see a paper magically delivered to our floor.

Living next to two career students, I was briefed through spontaneous comments about the character of this new literary dimension.

DISCUSSION USUALLY contained some lines like:

"If they printed it, it's sure to be wrong."

"Anybody seen a rag lying around? I got to find out who's got any specials tonight in the 'Ville."

"Yeah, I left one in the john." "Nobody in their right mind would read this thing."

"Well they really butchered this one up."

"I heard from a friend that some dude he knows said some bartender he ran into had heard she was misquoted."

"Yeah, you could probably tell them you're a reporter from the Collegian and find something out quicker.'

"Shit, they'd laugh in my face." And the list continues.

I remember making some of these remarks and others in the unavoidable. The many hours similar context sometimes as a reader. But something always intrigued me. Despite the negative comments usually thrust at the Collegian, the people doing the complaining could often be found reading the paper as soon as they got out of bed or came on to campus.

EVERYONE WHO works in the newsroom remembers what they've heard. At times it hacks us off and we blow off a little steam ourselves, but it also helps to force the crew in Kedzie 116 to push a little harder-for newsworthiness, accuracy, appealing layout, varying content and objectivity.

We tend to laugh at our mistakes. If we didn't chuckle, the pressure of the newsroom would cause us to do no better and feel much worse. At the same time, we still learn from these mistakes and try not to do it again.

Serving a vocal university community is not easy, especially when expectations from this campus for a strong newspaper are quite evident.

But those expectations help motivate the Collegian staff to strive to become better.

IN THE NEWSROOM, the difamong us are spent looking at the same faces and listening to the same bitches wears on us all. Most of us become employees devoted to the Collegian, not students devoted to school.

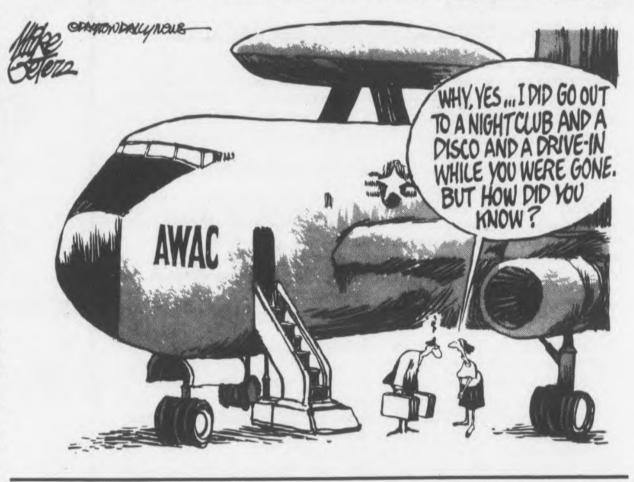

Moving forward anticipating the future, it's difficult to imagine our time is gone. Yet while pausing to remember the issues and reflect on past stories, the hours spent putting out a paper were extremely

Although the memories contain agonizing thoughts of lengthy involvement, they also provide satisfaction in knowing I've worked with some brilliant people who all have individual talents greater than my own.

It's also rewarding to know the paper will continue to serve this University and anyone who remains from this staff will be able to pass on knowledge to others.

From these relations in the newsroom, it's possible to develop a full look at the criticism remember hearing the first time I gazed at the Collegian.

Whether it's constructive or simply passive off-the-wall barbs such as those which first provided me with insight to the paper, I only hope the criticism will never end. If it does, the Collegian will not be serving its purpose because this is your paper. We learn from you.

Stereo Factory promotion prompts investigation

Advertisement boasts false prices

By DAVE COOK Contributing Writer

An advertisement for the Stereo Factory, 1126 Moro, which appeared last week in the Collegian and The Manhattan Mercury, is under investigation by the Riley County attorney's office.

The two-page advertisement, for the store's "Expo '81" promotion appeared in the Collegian on April 29. A one-page advertisement with identical information appeared in the Mercury last week.

The advertisement included manufacturers' list prices for many items which, when checked with the manufacturers, proved to be too high.

Under the deceptive acts and practices section of the Kansas Consumer Protection Act, a person cannot make "false or misleading representations, knowingly or with reason to know, of fact concerning the reason for, existence of or amounts of price reductions...."

THE PRESENTATION of the manufacturers' list prices were used in connection with the sale prices and may have communicated an unrealistic savings to consumers. The use of false manufacturer's list prices were numerous, including:

—An Electrovoice Introvoice 3 speaker with an advertised manufacturer's list price of $300 and a sale price of $230. Although prices change almost monthly, the actual manufacturer's list price should have been $249.95, said Donna Burks, customer service representative for Electrovoice, Buchanan, Mich.

—An Akai AAR-21 tuner with a list price of $399 in the ad and a sale price of $289.95. The actual manufacturer's list price should be $349.95, said Bob Perkins, audio administrator for Akai, Compton, Calif.

—An Akai AT VO4 tuner was shown with an advertised manufacturer's list price of $399.95 and a sale price of $299.95. Perkins said the correct manufacturer's list price should be $329.95.

UNDER THE CONSUMER Protection Act, a suit can be filed seeking the greater of either actual damages or a $2,000 civil penalty for each count, according to Pat Caffey, assistant Riley County attorney.

"We would like to ask anyone who has made purchases of those items (appearing with inaccurate manufacturer's list prices) to write our office," Caffey said.

Darrell Lister, owner of the Stereo Factory, acknowledged there was an error in the ad.

"We made an error in our last ad," he said. "Our obvious error was that we used the words 'manufacturer's list' price," he said

"I was the manager of another stereo store in this town. We used the ad that we had previously used in this other store. In the process of making up the other ad, we inadvertently used the (words) 'manufacturer's list' price," Lister said.

According to Lister, the sale was the most

According to Lister, the sale was the most successful the store has ever run.

"This last promotion was obviously our biggest and our best. We had over 3,000 customers in our store in one day," Lister said.

The K-State Consumer Relations Board (CRB) has not received any complaints on the ad, said Sam Kilpatrick, CRB member and sophomore in family and child development.

"It was just in last Wednesday's Collegian, so maybe there's not been enough time for feedback on it yet," Kilpatrick said.

Newton doctor gets probation in federal case involving fraud

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A Newton physician has been sentenced to two years probation and ordered to repay $8,102 in Social Security benefits he collected for two years after his mother's death.

Vernon Vogt pleaded guilty to continuing to accept the payments meant for his mother for about two years after she died. He faced a possible maximum $10,000 fine and 10 years in prison.

The doctor's attorney said Vogt was indicted only after he approached Social Security officials and offered to repay the money. He already had repaid some of the $10,717 when he was charged in January.

Sexual harassment survey results will be released despite complaints

By SHERRY BROWN Collegian Reporter

The results of a faculty-staff questionnaire on sexual harassment will probably be released to the public despite some complaints about the fairness of the survey, Provost Owen Koeppe said.

The questionnaire, designed by the Commission on the Status of Women, was distributed March 17 to all classified and unclassified K-State employees. The surveys were collected and analyzed April 24 by the Office of Educational Research.

"A half-dozen people complained about the questionnaire or gave ridiculous responses that indicated they were not taking it seriously," Koeppe said.

The complaints stemmed from the way in which the survey was designed, he said.

"A few people said they felt that it was biased," Koeppe said. "They felt it was weighted toward men harassing women."

The complaints of bias will not, however, determine whether or not the survey results will be released to the public, he said.

"My personal feeling is that it will not be decided on the basis of some people's view of the quality of the survey," he said.

The survey results are not being released immediately because that is not the purpose of the report, said Mary Harris, chairman of the Commission on the Status of Women and acting head of the Department of Curriculum and Instruction.

"The reason for the results not being released (immediately) is that the information and its purpose is to collect data to make recommendations to the president," Harris said.

However, she said the commission hopes to release the results in a fall press conference. The results of a student sexual harassment survey may also be released at that time, she said. The student survey was also designed by the commission and is being disributed through Holtz Hall.

Koeppe called the faculty-staff questionnaire "a very emotional thing."

"Some people feel that you are creating a problem where a problem doesn't exist," he said. "I would hope that we would create an awareness."

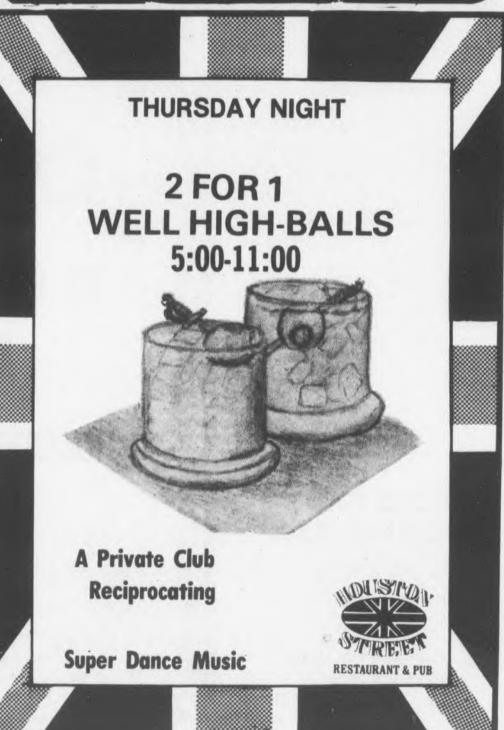

Although the survey was funded by the University, the final decision on whether the results will be released rests with President Duane Acker, Koeppe said.

Koeppe said he will discuss releasing the survey results with Harris after the commission makes a recommendation to the president.

"I would go by the comission's recommendaion largely," he said. "Our goal is to be of the most help to the University community."

Noordsy blames high expenses for veterinary enrollment deficit

By STEPHANIE MOWRY Collegian Reporter

Traditionally, K-State has hundreds of students submit applications each year in hopes of being accepted to the College of Veterinary Medicine. This spring, however, the number of applicants was down by at least 50 applications.

"There was a slight reduction in applications this year," John Noordsy, assistant dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said.

Last year, there were between 400 and 450 applications. This year there were between 350 and 400 applications, Noordsy said.

The College of Veterinary Medicine is limited to 105 students who are selected on academic achievement and through an interview with the admissions committee.

This year, 250 of the 350-400 applicants were interviewed by the admissions committee, Noordsy said.

Stephan alleges depreciation bill unconstitutional

TOPEKA (AP) — Attorney General Robert Stephan warned the governor Wednesday that a bill passed by the 1981 Legislature which permits depreciation of farm machinery for tax purposes appeared to be unconstitutional.

"I regret that in attempting to alleviate economic hardship being experienced by farmers, the Legislature has again passed a constitutionally flawed bill," Stephan said in a letter to Gov. John Carlin, who has said he will sign the bill into law.

The measure, Stephan noted, is similar to one passed by the 1979 Legislature and vetoed by Carlin on constitutional grounds.

Generally, it would lower property taxes on used farm equipment and was welcome legislation for farmers.

Carlin said Tuesday that he plans to sign the measure into law and then initiate a court test of its constitutionality.

Stephan's warning to Carlin has no official power of law, but merely represents his legal opinion.

The attorney general reminded the Democratic governor of his earlier veto of such legislation, and he cited the veto message Carlin delivered to legislators in 1979. Stephan also noted that the Kansas Supreme Court had ruled on a similar topic last year.

"In reviewing this bill we both must remain mindful of our official oaths to uphold the constitution of this state," Stephan said in the letter delivered to Carlin on Wednesday.

The bill passed in the final days of the 1981 session, and calls for straight-line depreciation of farm machinery and equipment to be used in its appraisal for property tax purposes.

The legal question is whether the bill would violate the constitutional requirement that property be appraised uniformly and equally at its fair market value.

In his 1979 veto message, Carlin stated:

"It is obvious that sound and fair appraisal judgment must consider both appreciation as well as depreciation. Because of the inflated costs of replacement machinery, it is not uncommon that the current market vale of used machinery and equipment may equal or exceed its original price."

WE'RE FIGHTING FOR YOUR LIFE

ALTHOUGH THERE has been a reduction in applications to vet school, "We are not to the point where we are searching for applicants. There's still enough applicants that the competition is acute and the quality of the students is high," Noordsy said.

Nationwide, the number of applications to veterinary schools have decreased by 23 percent, according to the 1977 Supplementary Edition of the America Schools and Colleges of Veterinary Medicine.

Noordsy said the trend has continued in recent years.

"All the medical areas (of study) across the nation have had a decrease in enrollment," Noordsy said. "When students start looking at eight-plus years of schooling and the cost of a medical education, some don't apply."

The average cost to the student may be from $5,000 a year upward, according to a pamphlet of career opportunities published by the College of Veterinary Medicine. That figure varies from student to student, depending on housing and individual need, according to the pamphlet.

THE REDUCTION in applications may also be attributed to the opening of new veterinary schools across the nation, Noordsy said. Students who would apply to K-State may be applying to in their own state, he said.

Applicants have also decreased because the College of Veterinary Medicine increased the number of hours required for admission from from 64 to 71 for the next year, Noordsy said.

The requirement was raised "because of the increased amount of information that people need to know and the increased data available."

Noordsy said he didn't expect the enrollment in the College of Veterinary Medicine to decrease in the future.

"I'd say right now the future of vet med is excellent. I see no reason to predict a drop in enrollment at the present time. It could happen, but I don't see it," Noordsy said.

Last Sneak-a-Peek contest features winners

By JILL MATUSZAK

Collegian Reporter Mother's Worry, which bills a male dance contest as part of its Ladies' Night Sneak-a-Peek promotion will sponsor its last contest tonight, with some previous contest winners in encore performances.

The idea for Sneak-a-Peek was "an idea that's been going around for awhile," said Fred Lechner, owner of Mother's Worry in Aggieville. Lechner said he began the contests because "someone else would do it if we didn't."

The first few Sneak-a-Peek shows, which began in late April, were standing-roomonly shows, Lechner said, but now he considers his Thursday nights "standard good Sneak-a-Peek at Mother's Worry has been every Thursday night, billing an average of four male dancers each night. Each dancer is given 10 minutes for his performance with an intermission between each dancer.

POTENTIAL DANCERS audition for Lechner or a manager. Physical appearance, ability to dance, and creativity of the act are criteria they use to judge the applicants, Lechner said.

"We do a parts survey," Lechner said. "We've found that a hairy chest is the number one asset.'

Despite the fact that girls in the audience have gone "out of control" two times, Lechner said Sneak-a-Peek is always kept on the right side of the law.

"There are no city ordinances that deal directly with that type of activity," Bill Frost, city attorney, said.

There have been no problems or concerns with the Mother's Worry Sneak-a-Peek show, according to Riley County Attorney Robert Socolofsky. The law would be enforced if there was some concern they were being broken, he said.

If there were problems, there would be two types of charges involved, he said. One would be for general obscenity, and the other would be if the dancers were "lude, and were exposing the sex organ with the intent to arouse the crowd," Socolofsky said.

LECHNER ASKS each dancer to sign a contract "to limit what they do in their appearances," because the plexiglass dance floor was broken during one act. Also, dancers are asked to remain on the dance floor and not go into the crowd. Dancing for Mother's Worry competitors is also prohibited in the contract, Lechner said.

"We try to keep it classy," he said. "It's kind of a silly thing."

The final Sneak-a-Peek of the semester will be tonight and will feature the winners from previous shows. Curiosity and "a night out with the girls" are the main reasons for Sneak-a-Peek attendance, Lechner said.

"There's more laughing and giggling than heavy breathing," he said.

Greg Letcher, sophomore in general usiness administration has performed three times for Sneak-a-Peek.

"I won twice, and tied for first the other time," Letcher said.

DESPITE HIS abilities as a dancer, Letcher said he had to audition twice for the chance to dance. The auditions took place in front of Lechner and two other men, Letcher said.

"It's hard to dance in front of guys," Letcher said. "They have you audition in shorts or a Speedo swimsuit, play music, and tell you to show variety."

The incentive for auditioning for Sneak-a-Peek came after "a lot of girls told me I was a good dancer," he said.

All the dancers for Sneak-a-Peek have a stage name, Letcher said. He was dubbed the "Midnight Cowboy."

As the Midnight Cowboy, Letcher was dressed-at the start of his performance-in boots, Levi jeans, shirt, tie, corduroy blazer and a cowboy hat. Underneath, he wore a black swimsuit.

"At the beginning of it, I dance out to the middle of the floor, and survey the crowd," Letcher said. "The first thing I take off is my hat, then my jacket."

Letcher said the crowd is always a great motivation to continue.

"I undid my cuffs, they scream," he said. Letcher is scheduled to dance at the final Sneak-a-Peek. There are many reasons he is participating.

"It's a lot of fun, money is an incentive, you meet a lot of girls, and you do it for the enjoyment," he said. "I guess you could say for the personal satisfaction."

JOE WEBER, senior in finance and pre-law, danced as the "Sun God." His gimmick was dancing to music entitled "Shake Your Pants" and "Take It To The Top," while rubbing suntan lotion on himself. He also had three or four leis around his neck, and would put them on women in the crowd and kiss them.

"That night I got $12 in tips," Weber said, as well as taking a $70 first prize.

Weber said he first thought of doing Sneak-a-Peek "for the money." He told Lechner he had experience as a dancer from the time he "popped out of a cake at a bachelorette party," so he didn't have to NEVERTHELESS, WEBER said he was nervous for his first performance. But, like Letcher, Weber will be dancing at the final Sneak-a-Peek.

Weber said the money was a great incentive, and that he didn't mind it at all. Since he will be entering law school in the fall, Weber said he is now interested in dancing at more bachelorette parties, as a

Halls still have room for 850 fall students

Collegian Reporter

There is still room available in the residence halls for next fall, according to Thomas Frith, director of Housing.

Frith reported Wednesday to the Housing Council that Housing plans to accept about 850 more contract applications before the halls will be considered full.

Residence hall applications are coming in at a steady pace and if they continue at the current rate, the halls will be full by mid-June, Frith said. Students who have previously lived in a residence hall are being give top priority in filling the rooms.

Housing has received about 100 more applications this year than at this time last year, Chet Peters, vice president of student affairs, said.

A MOTION was passed which will keep graduate housing the same as in the past.

Twenty apartments are now reserved for single graduate students in Evan's Apartments. Edwards Hall is also designated for graduate student housing. Any single graduate student may also live in a residence hall.

A housing committee studied possibilities for expanding graduate student housing and had recommended to the council that part of Jardine Terrace be used to house single graduate students and part of Edwards Halls be used for overflow students.

The committee was formed after graduate students complained about the

By CONNIE CLOWE inflexibility of the residence hall meal program and poor study conditions.

> THE COUNCIL members decided not to follow the committee's recommendations because they would have only provided additional housing for eight to 16 students, and would resulted in further crowding of the residence halls.

> "We have sympathy toward the needs of the graduate students, but we also un-derstand what kind of problems this situation could present," Chet Peters, vice president of Student Affairs, said.

> Peters added that the council will keep in mind ways to meet graduate student's housing needs that are consistent with the housing needs of all students.

Frith also reported on plans to reorganize the administrative structure of Housing at the beginning of July.

The four coordinator positions will be condensed into three assistant director of Housing positions. The responsibilities of the assistant directors will be divided among the large halls, the small halls, and a combination of Jardine Terrace and summer school housing.

Housing will reapportion its operationing budget to increase the amount of money allocated to the assistant directors for special programs. The increase will go to the social and educational fund, which is used to pay for programs such as movies. speakers, functions and educational films in the residence halls.

fared well at his first performance. Even though dancing in front of the crowd at Mother's Worry is exciting to Letcher, he said he convinced his mother and sister not to come to see him dance.

"I would have been embarassed," he said. Letcher said other people enjoy asking him questions about dancing at Sneak-a-Peek. Because males can't attend because of a "Ladies Only" policy during the dancing part of the evening, they ask Letcher what it is like.

"A lot of people are really surprised that quiet and conservative Greg would do that,"

Both Letcher and Weber agree that Sneaka-Peek is a fun night for dancers and observers alike. However, neither dancer wants people to think they are dancing for any reasons besides fun and money.

"I have high standards," Letcher said. As for himself, Weber said, "It's crazy. Hell, why not?"

Administration expels all Libyan diplomats

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Reagan administration Wednesday ordered the expulsion of all Libyan diplomats in Washington, alleging a wide range of provocations and misconduct, including support for international terrorism.

State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said the administration was concerned by a "general pattern of unacceptable conduct" by the Libyan People's Bureau in Washington.

Last year, eight Libyan expatriates were murdered in Britain, Italy and Greece, and a Libyan dissident student was wounded by gunfire in Colorado.

Union arcade provides daily fix for University's video junkies

By GORDON DOWELL Collegian Reporter

He is a junkie and he could use a fix.

Class is over and with some spare time, he ambles carelessly into the Union Recreation

His fingers tense, his pulse quickens and his palms become moist.

These reactions are sparked by the dazzling lights, cosmic sounds and challenging voices emitted by the Union's 13 video game machines.

He jams his hand into his pocket, raking the car keys aside, frantically groping for a

Finally, clutching the coin between his thumb and index finger, he methodically begins the journey to his promised land—the arcade. Once there, he blindly plods toward an unused game.

WITH HIS eyes glued to the screen and his reflexes razor-sharp, he unconsiously locates the coin slot and feeds the machine.

He instantly becomes the captain of his own space aircraft for as long as he and his fleet of ships can survive the enemy's relentless attacks.

He is the contemporary pinball wizard of today. This scenario depicts a video-game

The Union received its first video game five years ago, according to Terri Eddy, recreation manager. While the emergence of video games has put a squeeze in pinball and other vending games, video hasn't eliminated its competition. "You still have your die hards as far as pinball is concerned," Eddy said.

VIDEO GAMES, however, are moving into the forefront as money-makers.

"They like the way it moves so fast and its high scores and it's a little bit more challenging," she said. "That's the trend all over the country. The videos are bringing in more money than pinball, but you have a to have a combination of both.

"The videos average higher income per machine, probably three to one. You always have more pinball machines than video, so (revenue) probably ends up around 50-50,"

The surge in popularity of video machines has taken revenue away from other games, said Lou Ptacek, president of Manhattan's Bird Music Distributors, Inc. Pinball may have suffered the largest losses.

"Pinball has been here for 40 years," Ptacek said. "It isn't new. It has had its ups and downs, but it has never been completely out."

Bird Music maintains the vending machines in the Union and elsewhere around Manhattan. Ptacek said the Manhattan office operates 1,500 vending machines within a 50-mile radius of the city.

VIDEO-GAME USERS have told Eddy playing is their way of releasing tension and frustration.

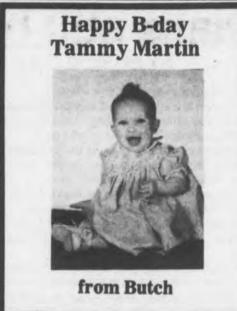

"It's just like some bowlers will come down if they've had a hard day or something like that, and they'll throw a ball at a bunch of pins and these other guys will go back and blow up ships," she said.

She said that people also play for the "challenge to see if they can beat the machine."

Between 75 and 100 customers visit the Union arcade daily, Eddy said. There are many regular guests, but few women.

"Women are an untapped market in video games and pinball and they (industry experts) really don't know why," she said.
Outerspace confrontation is the backbone of a majority of today's video games. More often than not, the game's operator is battling an enemy, fighting for his video life.

"It does appear to us that it is necessary to have some kind of war, some kind of competition between space people," Ptacek

"I think it's really just a carry-over from television. In the space programs they have, like Star Trek, they always had an enemy somewhere. It might have just been an asteroid, but they always had something they had to guard against, something they had to destroy in order to stay afloat," Ptacek said.

THE VIDEO GAMES, and the newest of the pinball games, have a common trait.

"The games are interesting. They're a challenge, but not too tough," Ptacek said.

While pinball rewards a talented player with free games, video games offer extra time, Ptacek said. The game remains operational until the oppostion is able to eliminate the player.

The idea of competition, the belief that "I can beat this machine," seems to keep players coming back to the games.

"You're working to get a better score and the thing that keeps you playing it and putting more quarters in is because you're not satisfied with the score you just got," said Vince Kearney, junior in bussiness administration.

KEARNEY'S OBSESSION with the games reached its peak last summer in Overland Park.

"I would actually look for places close to my house where I could go play the games," he said. "I feel it's an addiction sometimes, and I laugh about it."

The asteroid machine, Kearney said, opened his eyes to the limitless possibilities of video games over pinball machines.

"In pinball, the ball just goes up and comes down through the slots but in these games you can control how fast you are going, your rocket ship and where you are on the screen," he said.

Before his acquaintance with the asteroid machine, Kearney spent no time in game arcades and he didn't play pinball. He, as well as his video playing cohorts, have become part of what he calls the "space craze," initiated with the movie "Star Wars".

Odd book loans amuse librarian

LINDSBORG (AP) - A couple of recent library requests at tiny Bethany College still have librarian Divie Lanning chuckling One, from the Lenin State Library in Moscow, is for a book titled "The Atomic Age." The other, from the CIA, was for an article on Islamic education.

The unusual requests came through interlibrary loan systems to the small Kansas campus. The Lenin library's volume contains no A-bomb plans or other secrets, but is a book about art and design in the 1950s. What does it contain?

"Oh, pictures of Howard Johnson's restaurants, things like that," Lanning said. "It's not a very large or sophisticated book. I'm afraid they may be disappointed."

The book was sent airmail to Moscow, and the library absorbed the $4.20 postage cost as its contribution to international relations. The Soviets get to peruse the book for four weeks before it is due.

The CIA's request included an article on Islamic education, which seemed odd to Lanning in view of recent world events. "It seems like it's a little late for them to be just getting around to that," she said.

The 3 Sweet Girls in 101

KERNEY SAID one of video's main selling attractions is its ability to satisfy a dream-world fantasy.

"It's the idea of putting a person in something he's always dreamed about," he

"You're the commander of your own little space ship for as long as the quarter lasts."

Dave Fionda, freshman in electrical engineering, cites another reason for feeding the machines. "It's relaxing," Fionda said. "I play before tests because it gets my mind off from the worries I have. Before he became hooked on video games, Fionda played pinball. "I hardly play (pinball) anymore," he said. "I don't find it to be fun anymore, compared to this." More talent is involved with the highspeed video games, Fionda said.

"Pinball is a lot of luck," he said. "The more you play (video games) the better you get and the more fun you get out of it because you're better at it."

"They (the manufacturers) are changing the design of the games," Kearney said. "They are making it harder for you to obtain a higher score and the higher score you get, the harder it is for you to get any points.

"It's a competition where you can't win.

All you can do is get better."

Escapee gets grant of probation after deciding to turn himself in walked out of the Clay County jail Tuesday feeling "a little shakey," and one step short of freedom.

But the smiling 37-year-old jail escapee said his fate rests "ultimately with God, and not a judge."

Film chronicles mysterious picnic

Editor's note: "Picnic at Hanging Rock" will be shown at 3:30 today in the Little Theatre and at 7 tonight in the Forum Hall.

By JIM MELIZA Collegian Reviewer

On Feburary 14, 1900, some girls from Appleyard College in Austrailia went on a picnic to Hanging Rock. Four of the girls went to explore the geologic formation. Only two returned. That same day a teacher also disappeared.

Peter Weir's "Picnic at Hanging Rock" chronicles the events up to and following that fateful day. In doing so, however, Weir never tries to state what happened on the rock. Instead he coaxes us into suspense by teasing us with the same possibilities that were considered in 1900.

Collegian review

From the opening frame the film suggests beauty, comparable to a Monet painting. The true beauty of the film is that it holds as much mystery as seductive qualities.

Weir uses not only the exquisite landscape but the innocence of the college girls to hint at some type of occult atmosphere. The girls, especially Miranda (Anne Lambert), seem to understand the unknown. Described as a "Botticelli Angel," Miranda is forever making some obscure statement about her future disappearance.

An occasional problem is that the metaphysical dialogue threatens to act as a shroud that buries the movie in ambiguous loose ends. It is only the masterful direction that keeps the whole project from unraveling.

Another problem is that Weir, like Stanley Kubrick, is not known for drawing strong preformances from his actors. Basically it is the established actresses who give the most convincing roles. Rachel Roberts is more than commendable as the strict headmistress who is facing adversity from

Finally, the film never really rises above the mystery. It is this enigmatic atmosphere that might lead to confusion. Even with that, the overall effect is an intelligent film to add to the outstanding list of Australian films recently released.

Carlin will wed; speculation ends

TOPEKA (AP) — Ending months of speculation and rumor, Gov. John Carlin officially announced on Wednesday that he and Karen Hurley, the director of his political organization, will be married in a private ceremony on May 29.

The 40-year-old governor and his fiancee, 32, will hold the wedding at the First Lutheran Church in northwest Topeka with the Rev. Dale Gregoriew officiating. It will at 7 p.m. with about 50 people attending, Carlin said during a news conference in his statehouse office.

Hurley, who was divorced last December, stood alongside the governor behind his desk as they made the annoucement.

"The purpose of this little gathering is to make something official," Carlin said. "Karen and I would like to announce today that on May the 29th we will get married."

Throughout the news conference, lasting about a half hour, Carlin and Hurley answered questions, often joking with reporters.

The couple will entertain guests at a reception at Cedar Crest, the executive mansion, following the wedding ceremony.

Hurley's two young children, and the governor's two teen-age children will attend the wedding.

It will be the second marriage for each. Carlin was also divorced late last year.

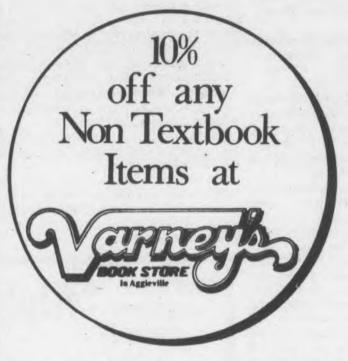

"There will be a small private ceremony, with a few relatives and a few guests," Carlin said. "Thereafter, we will take a short trip to an undisclosed location. On our return, her two children will join myself and Lisa in residing at Cedar Crest."

Lisa, Carlin's 16-year-old daughter, attends high school in Topeka. His 18-year-old son, David, is a student at K-State.

Patrick, Hurley's son, will be 12 years old Saturday. Her daughter, Marci, is 9 years old.

Hurley, who directs a fund-raising campaign group called Kansans for Carlin, said she would leave her political position next Monday.

Students still contend with theft of bikes despite all precautions

By CINDY WILSON Collegian Reporter

Spring is an ideal time for people to ride their bicycles—if they still have them.

Twenty-five bicycles were reported stolen from campus property between Jan. 1 and May 1, Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic, said. Only nine bikes were reported stolen in the same period a year ago, he said.

One reason there appears to be an increased number of bikes being stolen this year is that more people are reporting thefts. Stone said this can be partly attributed to the fact that more people seem interested in collecting their insurance money.

If a bike is insured it's generally covered under home-owner's insurance, said Kent Peters, owner of Kent Peters Agency and independent contractor for American Family Insurance. If a student's parents insure their home, their coverage usually extends to the student's belongings.

BIKE OWNERS and officers can take measures to ensure bikes will not be stolen, Stone said.

There are only two preventive measures Security and Traffic officers can undertake: patrolling campus and putting bike racks in heavily-travelled areas, close to buildings, he said.

Bike owners, too, can help prevent their bikes from being stolen, Stone said.

He suggests buying a "heavy link" chain.
"Stay away from the thin, quarter-inch cable," he said. "They look for the chains and locks that are extremely easy to cut."

However, "I don't know of any foolproof way of securing a bicycle," he said.

THE SERIAL NUMBER and a description of the bike should be registered with Security and Traffic, Stone said. If there is a record of the bike's serial number, it is easier to match a recovered bicycle to the owner.

He also suggested using an electric pencil to engrave some sort of identification that's "not removable" onto the bike.

Some people believe keeping a bike in a building is the only way to ensure its safety. However, bicycles are not allowed in campus buildings. If a Security and Traffic officer finds a bike in a building, he will "impound the bike and they (the owner) will have to retrieve it," Stone said. There is a $7.50 fine to get the bike back, he said.

There are currently 35 to 40 unclaimed bikes at the Security and Traffic office. After a bike is held for six months, it is eligible to be sold at an auction, Stone said.

THE SECURITY AND TRAFFIC department has an auction whenever its storage room fills up, he said. The money received from the auction goes into a fund for buying more bike racks, Stone said.

Although the auction money buys some campus bike racks, the majority of the racks are purchased through University

Facilities, Stone said

There are several kinds of bicycle racks on campus: portable racks by the Union; chains stretched between posts by Holton Hall; and permanent concrete racks outside Cardwell Hall, he said.

Anker Lerret, system programmer at the Computing Center, said he used to keep his bike in Cardwell Hall while he worked at night. However, after he got caught a few times he started locking it to the bike rack outside. About a month ago, his 2-year-old, $170 Viscount bicycle was stolen.

"If they are going to make an outside rule, they'd better get some protection for these bikes," he said.

ROSS OSTENBURG, junior in chemical engineering, said he also believes the only way to protect his bike is to move it inside.

His bike was stolen when it was locked to a post between Haymaker Hall and Ford. Hallwith a half-inch steel cable.

"Someone just snapped the cable," he said. "It was worthless."

He said he keeps his new bike inside to protect it from another theft.

"Just about any good bike...is pretty hot stuff now, because the demand is high," Ostenburg said. There has been an increase in thefts because bike prices have "skyrocketed," he said.

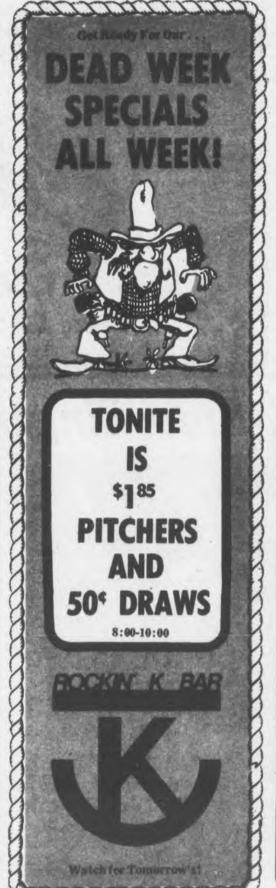

Quinton Kidd, junior in social work, was an owner of one of the 19 bikes reported stolen in April. It was a $550 Austro-Daimler Inter-10.

Kidd said he had locked his bike "very securely" around a tree outside Waters Hall while he was in a night class.

"I came back after class and it was gone," he said. The cable had been "sawed through."

Kidd said he believes there is only one way to prevent a bike from being stolen on campus.

"Don't bring it on campus," he said. "I don't think they have very good bike racks."

Camels 'brand image' may harm Allagash

Maine residents resent cigarette connection

PORTLAND, Maine — A full-page ad for families are a familiar sight along the Camel cigarettes showing a virile young waterway. man paddling a canoe through the frothy rapids of northern Maine's Allagash Wilderness Waterway has Down Easters

Some Maine residents familiar with the 92-mile chain of lakes and rivers, a favorite haunt of whitewater canoeists, resent the connection with cigarettes. Others say the ads give a false image of the waterway. Still others fear the ad campaign could bring droves of tourists to the remote region.

"The Allagash was created as a protection against the encroachments of commercialism and Madison Avenue and everything that represents," said Herbert Hartman, director of the Maine Bureau of Parks and Recreation, which administers the waterway.

A SERIES OF "Camel Expeditions" advertisements in a $1 million campaign aimed at enhancing the masculine image of Camel cigarettes is starting to appear in some of the better known men's magazines, such as Playboy, Esquire, Sports Illustrated, Signature, Money and Sports

The Allagash ad carries the heading "Camel Expeditions—Where a man belongs," followed by a graphic description of the Allagash experience:

"No man alive should miss it.

"For here you can prove just what kind of man you are.

"Here on the wild and awesome and profoundly majestic Allagash."

Even the Maine Publicity Bureau, which applauds the promotional tie-in with one of the state's major outdoor attractions, acknowledges the ad portrays the Allagash canoe trip as being a lot tougher than it

"It makes it appear that it's just a brutal, macho thing to do," Bruce Taylor, a bureau spokesman, said. He said the ad seems to put the Allagash experience on a par with the kind of rugged adventure portrayed in the novel and film, "Deliverance." "To try to turn it into something it really isn't is perhaps a disservice to the Allagash and also a disservice to us," Taylor said, noting that women, children and entire

THE MARKETING campaign, launched this spring, involves R.J. Reynolds, the nation's largest cigarette manufacturer; Thomas Cook Travel, the world's largest travel agency; and Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, one of the premier ad agencies on Madison Avenue.

The purpose, according to Reynolds spokeswoman Betsy Annese in Winston-Salem, N.C., is to enhance "brand image." In the case of Camels, she said, the appeal is to men between the ages of 21 and 35. "These are men who are young, adventurous, very independent-someone who wants a very masculine lifestyle."

To appeal to that lifestyle, Reynolds teamed up with Thomas Cook to create "Camel Expeditions"—vacations that provide particular adventures. Besides the Allagash trip, the trips include a windjammer cruise in the West Indies and a trek through the steaming jungles of Ecuador.

THE 10-DAY Allagash trip costs $798 per person. It is booked through Thomas Cook and conducted by Maine Wilderness Paddlers Inc. of Mount Desert, owned by Bob Mensink.

The state publicity bureau sees the ad as a legitimate tool for promoting Maine tourism. Taylor equates it with a recent television commercial for Miller beer featuring a Down East lobsterman.

"I don't think people make a direct con-nection between Maine and cigarette smoking," Taylor said. "Any time we can have a legitimate tie-in with a commercial interest, I'm certainly not going to kick it out the door."

Others disagree.

"What bothers me most is the smoking connection," said Rob Gardiner, executive director of the Natural Resources Council of Maine, the state's largest environmental organization. The NRC played a key role in the establishment of the Allagash Wilderness Waterway two decades ago.

"I find the association of smoking with the wilderness experience to be totally incongruous," Gardiner said, who expressed concern that the waterway and its campsites are already operating near capacity and cannot withstand any tourism boom resulting from the ads.

THE TRIPS are scheduled to run through 1981 and 1982, but the promotional campaign is too new to gauge the initial public

"I think the great outdoors and health are the very antithesis of smoking," said Hartman of the Bureau of Parks and Recreation, a former Maine guide who still does the Allagash two or three times a year.

"And I don't like the sexist stuff. The fact is that the Allagash is used and enjoyed by hundreds, even thousands of women and children each year," he said. While acknowledging that the ad may not be worded most advantageously, Mensink said he believes the campaign still represents a valid way to attract tourist dollars to Maine.

"I think it's going to bring people up here. I don't see how it's going to hurt anything,"

Investigators fail to establish Hinckley's plot

WASHINGTON (AP) — Investigators have "no hard evidence" that accused presidential assailant John Hinckley Jr. had been stalking Ronald Reagan or other political figures, federal law enforcement sources said Wednesday.

These sources, who declined to be identified, said that federal investigators have established that Hinckley was in three cities last October at roughly the same time as President Carter, and that he had visited Washington three times in the months before his arrest March 30 on charges of attempting to assassinate President Reagan.

The sources said that Hinckley had been in Nashville, Chicago and Dayton, Ohio, at times that Carter was there during the presidential campaign last fall, and that he had visited Washington, D.C., in late September, mid-October and early February.

But "There is no hard evidence that he planned a deliberate strategy of stalking any public figure," one source said. "The evidence at this time fits a theory that those instances were coincidental."

The sources noted that during the Chicago visit President Carter simply landed and took off without making a campaign tour of the city. Nevertheless, the sources said the possibility of stalking has not been ruled out entirely. They said investigators had found nothing relating to Hinckley's visits to Washington "to indicate any plan at that time to carry out an assassination."

According to these sources, the investigative findings thus far are contained in a roughly 1,200-page summary of the probe. The sources said that the summary, based on an investigation conducted by the FBI, Secret Service and the District of Columbia police, was forwarded last Friday to Attorney General William French Smith, FBI Director William Webster and the U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, Charles F.C. Ruff, the prosecutor in the case.

The sources said Ruff has begun presenting the evidence to a federal grand jury here.

The investigation, which has already entailed more than 1,000 interviews, is still continuing in an effort to avoid the kinds of after-the-fact questions and conspiracy theories which have arisen in other assassination attempts in the United States, the sources said.

They said the summary contains forensic science data, the analysis of the crime scene outside the Washington Hilton Hotel where Reagan and three others were wounded, information on Hinckley's travels, funding and character, and data about the weapons allegedly used in the attack.

Investigators have been frustrated by their inability to question Hinckley other than for a few hours immediately after his Hinckley is at the federal correctional institution in Butner, N.C., where he is undergoing 90 days of psychiatric testing by experts for the government and his defense attorneys.

The sources stressed that at this point, in the words of one source, "there is no evidence at all to show any association by other people in the assassination attempt."

Staten Island ferry-freighter collision in fog injures 65

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Staten Island ferry collided with a freighter in New York harbor and two freighters collided off Virginia on Wednesday morning, as dense fog cloaked the East Coast. More than 60 people were injured, none seriously, and all four ships were damaged.

In New York, the ferryboat American Legion, carrying 2,500 rush-hour commuters, was near the Statue of Liberty when it collided with the freighter Heogh Orchid at about 7:20 a.m. EDT, injuring 65 people, officials said.

"It looked like a large gray shadow coming out of the fog," said ferry passenger Matthew Bendix, 17.

Two of the 65 people injured were admitted in satisfactory condition, and the others were treated and released, hospital officials said.

A GREEK CARGO VESSEL was taking on water and leaving a trail of diesel fuel as it limped toward Norfolk, Va., after it collided with another ship at about 7:20 a.m. EDT, said spokesmen for the 5th Coast Guard District headquarters at Portsmouth,

The Greek ship's crewmen huddled in lifeboats for more than two hours before being rescued, Coast Guard officials said.

The 469-foot Hellenic Carrier, with a 35-foot wide gash on its starboard side below the waterline, had about 5 feet of water in the engine room, said Petty Officer Fred Maldonado.

About 8,000 gallons of diesel fuel had spilled into the Atlantic, Maldonado said. But he added, "We're not considering that oil as a major pollution problem."

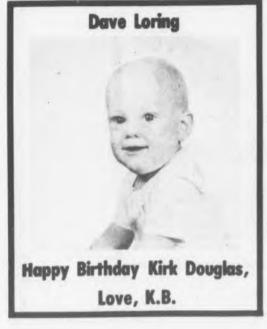

FOG ALLOWING ONLY 200 yards visibility covered the area, and the seas had 6-foot to 7-foot swells.

The 820-foot Lash Atlantico, a U.S. cargo ship with a 6-foot-high, 40-foot-long gash on one side and a 25-foot gash on the other, also headed back to Norfolk.

Coast Guard Petty Officer Bruce Pimental said 28 Hellenic Carrier crewmen were picked up from lifeboats lashed to the ship shortly before 11 a.m. by the bulk carrier Eastern Saga, out of Hong Kong. No one was reported injured.

The Coast Guard said the Hellenic Carrier was loaded with general cargo, such as lumber and chicken feed, when the collision occurred 25 miles southeast of Cape Henry. Agents for the ships would not give out other information immediately.

The American Legion returned to Staten Island under its own power with a large dent punched into its side. It can carry 3,400 people.

The 515-foot Heogh Orchid made its way to a pier in Brooklyn with a two-to-three foot dent in its bow about five feet above the water line, the Coast Guard said. There was no immediate word of any injury among the 28 crewmen aboard.

House nears final vote on Reagan's budget

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House worked on virtually futile liberal attempts to boost spending on social programs Wednesday as it neared a final vote on President Reagan's austere budget outline for 1982.

"Only the Lord himself could save this one," said Speaker Thomas O'Neill (D-Mass.), the leading opponent of the administration's spending blueprint. He said the final tally was likely Thursday.

"I'm not predicting defeat, but the Republicans may be unlucky enough to win this one," said O'Neill. He asserted that enactment of Reagan's economic program could send inflation "through the roof" and push interest rates "into the high 20s."

Any lingering doubt about whether Reagan would prevail appeared to dissipate when nine Republicans who said last week they were wavering released a statement pledging their votes to the president. But the nine also said they would work later to take money from defense and give it to social Reagan, meanwhile, continued his personal lobbying at the White House, inviting fewer than a dozen House members to the Oval Office for a series of private talks.

Before voting on the Reagan plan, the House turned to two proposals drafted to appeal to liberals.

One, the version sponsored by the 18-

Liberals attempt to boost social programs member Congressional Black Caucus, calls for $29.4 billion less in defense spending than Reagan wants, and $37.5 billion more in social programs such as public service jobs, food stamps, health care and student assistance.

It would reject the administration's tax cut plan in favor of a different reduction providing more relief to low and middleincome workers and would leave the government with a surplus next year of $7.8

The second liberal alternative—sponsored by Rep. David Obey (D-Wis.) would balance the budget by deferring any income tax cut until 1983.

It recommends spending $900 million more than the president asked on defense, and would hike spending on social programs and energy development by more than $8

Neither of the liberal proposals was given any chance of passage in the House, where the main focus was on Reagan's budget and an alternative put together by the Democratic leadership.

The administration is backing a plan to accommodate huge cuts in social programs and an accelerated defense budget as well as a three-year, acrossthe-board income tax reduction of 30 percent.

The president's $688.8 billion spending plan would leave a deficit of $31 billion next year and balance the budget in 1984.

The Democratic leadership is pushing its own alternative, calling for spending of $714.5 billion and a deficit of $25.6 billion. It gives Reagan what he wants on defense spending, but calls for several billion dollars more in spending on social programs than the administration wants.

The plan junks the president's three-year tax-cut plan in favor of a one-year tax cut of about $38 billion.

Medical schools employ too few women on faculty, report says

BOSTON (AP) - About a quarter of the young doctors setting up practice in the United States these days are women, but female doctors are still having trouble landing the prestigious top jobs at the nation's medical schools, a study shows.

The review documents a remarkable surge in the numbers of women being admitted to this once largely all-male profession. But it asserts, "Medical schools should consciously take the lead in promoting women, as they did in admitting women to medical school."

The study was conducted at the University of Arizona College of Medicine by Judith Braslow and Dr. Marilyn Heins. It was published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The great increase in the number of women entering medicine occurred early in the last decade. In 1970, women accounted for 11 percent of the students starting medicine school. By 1979, that number had grown to 28 percent.

However, the study said, there has been only a small increase in the number of women on medical school faculties during the past decade, and few women hold administrative positions. No medical school is headed by a female dean.

The researchers said medical schools hould recruit young female graduates.

"Until female students, residents and faculty begin to see more women in the positions that count in academic medicine. there will continue to be issues of concern to women in medicine," they wrote.

An accompanying editorial, written by the New England Journal's deputy editor, Dr. Marcia Angell, said: "The heart of the dilemma for the woman physician lies in her responsibility to oversee the development of her children.'

"It looked like a large gray shadow coming out of the fog," said ferry passenger Matthew Bendix, 17.

Two of the 65 people injured were admitted in satisfactory condition, and the others were treated and released, hospital officials said.

A GREEK CARGO VESSEL was taking on water and leaving a trail of diesel fuel as it limped toward Norfolk, Va., after it collided with another ship at about 7:20 a.m. EDT, said spokesmen for the 5th Coast Guard District headquarters at Portsmouth,

The Greek ship's crewmen huddled in lifeboats for more than two hours before being rescued, Coast Guard officials said.

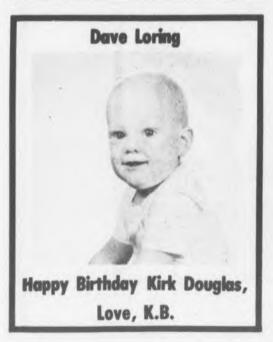

The 469-foot Hellenic Carrier, with a 35foot wide gash on its starboard side below the waterline, had about 5 feet of water in the engine room, said Petty Officer Fred Maldonado.

About 8,000 gallons of diesel fuel had spilled into the Atlantic, Maldonado said. But he added, "We're not considering that oil as a major pollution problem."

FOG ALLOWING ONLY 200 yards visibility covered the area, and the seas had 6-foot to 7-foot swells.

The 820-foot Lash Atlantico, a U.S. cargo ship with a 6-foot-high, 40-foot-long gash on one side and a 25-foot gash on the other, also headed back to Norfolk.

Coast Guard Petty Officer Bruce Pimental said 28 Hellenic Carrier crewmen were picked up from lifeboats lashed to the ship shortly before 11 a.m. by the bulk carrier Eastern Saga, out of Hong Kong. No one was reported injured.

The Coast Guard said the Hellenic Carrier was loaded with general cargo, such as lumber and chicken feed, when the collision occurred 25 miles southeast of Cape Henry. Agents for the ships would not give out other information immediately.

The American Legion returned to Staten Island under its own power with a large dent punched into its side. It can carry 3,400

The 515-foot Heogh Orchid made its way to a pier in Brooklyn with a two-to-three foot dent in its bow about five feet above the water line, the Coast Guard said. There was no immediate word of any injury among the 28 crewmen aboard.

Dad's death, Rockets shock Houston owner

BOSTON (AP) - The past six months in shock upon shock, one as unexpected as the other. But one has been considerably easier

First, his father George was stricken by a heart attack and died last Nov. 29 at the age

The elder Maloof left his business empire to his family. At 24, Gavin took over as president of a not wildly successful part of that empire, the Houston Rockets.

The second shock wasn't long in coming. After compiling a mediocre regular season record of 40-42, the Rockets launched themselves into the National Basketball Association stratosphere with playoff conquests of defending champion Los Angeles, San Antonio and Kansas City.

NOW THE ROCKETS, who have never won an NBA championship, find themselves challenging the Boston Celtics, who have won 13 of them, in the finals of the NBA playoffs. Boston won Tuesday night's first game by the score of 98-95. Game two is tonight.

"I never thought that we'd be where we are today, in the world championship finals," the young owner said Wednesday. "Last year I talked to (Los Angeles) coach (Paul) Westhead after he won the NBA finals and he said, 'It's fantastic,' and I always wished I could experience that."

Maloof said he felt the Rockets had talent the young life of Gavin Maloof have brought and that it was just a matter of time before they achieved considerable success.

But, he said, "we never expected it this soon. I didn't expect it for five years, who knows when. A lot of teams never make it."

HE REGRETS his father can't savor the

"We were at his bedside and his last words were, 'How many points did Moses Malone score?' This is the kind of love he had for the team," Gavin Maloof said.

"He lived and died with every game like we (other family members) do. I like to think he's watching from upstairs and maybe he's been instrumental in helping us get this far.

"He was a diabetic and heart disorders and diabetes go hand in hand. My dad was in good shape. He swam twice a day and never had a history of heart trouble. It was a shock to us."

The family, based in Albuquerque, N.M., owns eight hotels, liquor and beer distributorships and a trucking company. It purchased the Rockets in May 1979, the month after Gavin Maloof graduated from Trinity College in Texas, where he was a defensive back and wide receiver on the football team. He started working for his father at 10 as a warehouseman, sweeping floors and riding beer trucks.

Success in playoffs puts Kings in black

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Attendance at Kansas City Kings basketball games dropped by nearly 39,000 this season, but revenues from the team's surpising success in the playoffs kept the club profitable.

"We did come back after a horrendous start," said Kings president Paul Rosenberg, acknowledging that the team finished the season in the black, but declining to give specific numbers. "The playoffs did it for

The home team receives 45 percent of the gate at playoffs games, with the rest going to the NBA. Receipts from any odd games played in a series are split between the home team and the visitors.

Attendance at the 41 home games at Kemper Arena this season was 336,569—38,818 less than last season, when most nome games were played in the smaller Municipal Auditorium while storm damage to the Kemper was repaired.

The Kings played seven playoffs games this season at Kemper, drawing an average of 13,433 spectators per game. They also shared receipts from games with Houston, Portland and Phoenix.

Rosenberg said much of this year's slow start was because of the Kansas City Royals' American League baseball pennant and World Series appearance last year.

"On the last day of the World Series, we didn't sell a ticket. We had a difficult year until spring," he said.

Kings general manager Jeff Cohen said he hopes to see attendance average 10,000 per game next season. "I feel you have to be around 10,000 a game with the present structure, the way salaries are going up,"

The Kings were eliminated in the finals of the Western Conference playoffs by the Houston Rockets.

George Welsh-Head Coach, USNA Football

It was hard to believe a boy like Tom Harper could be so desperately ill. Or that anyone could fight so hard to live. When he was under treatment and so weak he could hardly walk, Tom still came to practice. He'd marked out his own program for survival. To get back in shape and somehow speed the recovery he never lost hope would come.

For Tom it wasn't too late. Something new called combination chemotherapy was just beginning to be used. There are almost 2 million Americans like Tom who've beaten cancer.

But for many patients just as determined and hopeful, the treatments that could save them have not yet been found. That's why the American Cancer Society is asking for your support. Through research, rehabilitation and education, they're making your contributions count.

Manager Wills fired by Seattle

SEATTLE (AP) — Maury Wills, the baserobbing king of the 1960s who couldn't beg, borrow or steal enough victories as a manager in the '80s, was fired Wednesday as skipper of the Seattle Mariners.

At an afternoon news conference, the American League team's majority owner, George Argyros, announced that minor league manager Rene Lachemann would become interim manager.

Lachemann, who managed the Mariners' AAA Spokane farm club, will become the youngest manager in the major leagues. He turned 36 Monday. Tony LaRussa of the Chicago White Sox had been the youngest manager at 36 years, five months.

Dan O'Brien, Mariner president, said, "This is not something new to 'Lach' and I, because we've talked about his desire to become a major league manager on a number of occasions. I don't know of anyone who has worked harder and deserves the opportunity more."

Lachemann becomes the third manager in the Mariners' five years as an American League club. Darrell Johnson ran the club from its first season in 1977 until he was fired last August. Wills, former base-stealing whiz of the Los Angeles Dodgers, was named Mariners manager Aug. 4. Ironically, Lachemann began his association with professional baseball as a Dodger batboy in 1959, the year Wills came up to the majors.

Wills, who met an Associated Press reporter and photographer Wednesday in the gym of his Bellevue apartment, said he didn't want to talk.

The Mariners had a 6-18 record under Wills this season, their worst start ever. Wills was 20-38 last season after replacing Johnson.

Evans, Eckersley lead Boston to 3-1 victory over Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Dwight Evans blasted a towering two-run home run in the eighth inning Wednesday night, and Dennis Eckersley tossed a four-hitter to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 3-1 victory over the skidding Kansas City Royals.

Eckersley, 3-2, and Dennis Leonard, 2-4, were locked in a pitcher's duel throughout the cool, breezy evening, with the Royals clinging to a 1-0 lead on George Brett's first-inning, run-scoring single.

Willie Wilson led off the game with a single, moved to second on a ground out and scored on Brett's hit.

Glenn Hoffman singled leading off the eighth, the sixth hit Leonard surrendered. After Rick Miller sacrificed him to second, Jerry Remy singled, but Hoffman was out at the plate on a strong throw from center fielder Amos Otis.

Evans then slammed Leonard's next pitch deep into the left field bleachers for his fifth homer and only Boston's second victory in 10 games.

The Red Sox added a run in the ninth when Carney Lansford doubled, went to third on a ground out and, one out later, scored on Miller's single.

Orioles 5, Twins 4

BALTIMORE (AP) — Al Bumbry scored the winning run for Baltimore as Minnesota botched a potential inning-ending rundown in the ninth, giving the Orioles a 5-4 victory over the Twins Wednesday night.

A walk to Rick Dempsey and singles by Lenn Sakata and Bumbry scored the first run of the inning off reliever Jack O'Connor, 0-1, and relief ace Doug Corbett was called from the bullpen.

Mark Belanger grounded to third baseman John Castino, and Sakata was tagged out in a rundown. But when Belanger was trapped between first and second, second baseman Rob Wilfong dropped the ball as he attempted a tag, allowing Bumbry to score from first.

Indians 4, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO (AP) — Cleveland righthander Bert Blyleven pitched eight innings of no-hit ball, winding up with a two-hitter, as the Indians defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 4-1 Wednesday night.

Lloyd Moseby stroked Blyleven's first pitch of the ninth to left field for a double. The curving liner got by Larry Littleton, who replaced Joe Charboneau in the ninth, and the Blue Jays got their only run when pinch hitter George Bell followed with a single.

Blyleven threw the American League's last no-hitter Sept. 22, 1977 against California.

All Cleveland's runs were unearned. In the third, a Rick Manning single sent Duane Kuiper to third. Toronto right fielder Barry Bonnell's throw to the plate got by catcher Ernie Whitt, allowing Kuiper to score. Mike Hargrove grounded to Danny Ainge at third who threw wildly and Vereyzer and Manning scored.

Rangers 4, White Sox 2

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Bump Wills had two hits and scored two runs as the Texas Rangers scrambled to a 4-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox Wednesday night

The Rangers cracked a 2-2 tie in the seventh. Jim Sundberg singled, went to third on a single by Wills and scored on a single by Bill Stein. Wills, who took third on Stein's hit, scored on Al Oliver's fielder's choice grounder.

Chicago had tied the game with two runs in the top of the seventh. Carlton Fisk, Greg Luzinski and Lamar Johnson rapped consecutive singles for one run. Pinch-hitter Bobby Molinaro then singled to left, driving in Rusty Kuntz, who ran for Luzinski.

Perry checks Cards on 6 hits as Braves cruise to 10-2 win

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Chris Chambliss drove in five runs, three of them on a ninth-inning homer, leading the Atlanta Braves and Gaylord Perry to a 10-2 romp over the St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday night.

The 42-year-old Perry, major leagues' oldest player, checked St. Louis on six hits. One of the blows off the Atlanta right-hander, 3-2, was Tony Scott's two-run homer, his second of the year.

Scott's shot came in the first inning after Garry Templeton opened with a single. But then Perry shut the Cardinals out the rest of th way, coasting to his 292nd lifetime triumph.

In the second inning, the Braves cut the St. Louis lead to 2-1 on Glenn Hubbard's triple following a two-out walk to Biff Pocoroba.

In the sixth, leadoff hitter Ed Miller was hit by a pitch by Bob Forsch, 2-2. Claudell Washington followed with a single, finishing Forsch. Miller then scored the tying run on Chambliss' force play grounder. Then Dale Murphy singled and Pocoroba followed with an RBI single against St. Louis reliever Joe Edelen, who yielded the final run of the inning on a wild pitch.

Following Scott's homer in the St. Louis first, Perry restricted the Cards to four singles. Atlanta added two runs in the seventh on singles by Miller and Chambliss sandwiching a triple by Washington.

Chambliss' three-run ninth inning homer and an RBI single by Hubbard wrapped up the victory.

Dodgers 2, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Ron Cey's fourth-inning home run carried the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 2-1 victory over Philadelphia Wednesday night.

Right-hander Burt Hooton, 4-0, checked the Phillies on five hits, striking out four and walking none.

The Dodgers took a 1-0 lead off loser Nino Espinosa, 1-2, in the second when Steve Garvey opened with a single, reached second on a walk to Cey, and scored on Pedro Guerrero's single to left field. In the fourth, Cey slammed one over the left field wall to make it 2-0.

The Phillies scored a run in the seventh when Gary Matthews lashed a triple and scored on a sacrifice fly by Manny Trillo.

Reds 9, Pirates 8

CINCINNATI (AP) — Johnny Bench delivered a bases loaded single to knock in the winning run as the Cincinnati Reds rallied for a 9-8 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Wednesday night.

The Pirates led 8-7 going to the bottom of the ninth, but Dave Collins walked and when Phil Garner threw wild on Ken Griffey's bunt, both runners were safe. Dave Concepcion followed with a base hit, driving in Griffey with the tying run.

George Foster, who had homered earlier, was walked intentionally, loading the bases before Bench delivered the winning hit against reliever Kent Tekulve.

Tome Hume, 2-2, got the victory; Grant Jackson, 1-2, the loss.

Padres used a 19-hit attack to rout the Montreal Expos 13-5 Wednesday night.

The Padres' outburst enabled starter Juan Eichelberger, 2-1, to gain the victory despite yielding consecutive run-scoring triples to Mike Gates, Tim Raines and Tim Wallach in the ninth. Eichelberger needed relief help from Dan Boone, who retired the final three batters.

San Diego jumped to a 4-0 lead in the first as Terry Kennedy singled home a run after a walk to Jones and Gene Richards' single. Perkins then unloaded off loser Ray Burris, 2-2.

Larry Parrish socked a home run in the second inning to cut the lead to 4-1, but the Padres added to their lead with three runs in the fifth and four more in the sixth, all off reliever Steve Ratzer.

Cubs 2, Astros 1

CHICAGO (AP) — Ken Reitz hit a two-out RBI single in the 11th inning Wednesday to lift the Chicago Cubs to a 2-1 win over the Houston Astros.

The Cubs began the 11th against Frank LaCorte, 1-1, with a walk by Steve Dillard. Tim Blackwell sacrificed Dillard to second, and Reitz delivered the game-winning hit to Lee Smith, 1-2, the fourth Chicago pitcher, was the winner.

The Cubs broke a scoreless deadlock in the fourth. Bill Buckner beat out an infield hit and moved to second when Astros starter Nolan Ryan threw wildly to first on a pickoff attempt. Buckner took third when Steve Henderson flied to right field, and Leon Durham singled to right, scoring Buckner.

Giants 6, Mets 4

NEW YORK (AP) — Jack Clark tripled and scored in the third inning and then singled home another run in a three-run sixth, leading the San Francisco Giants to a 6-4 victory over the New York Mets Wednesday night.

K-State women's softball team to play lowa in Region 6 game

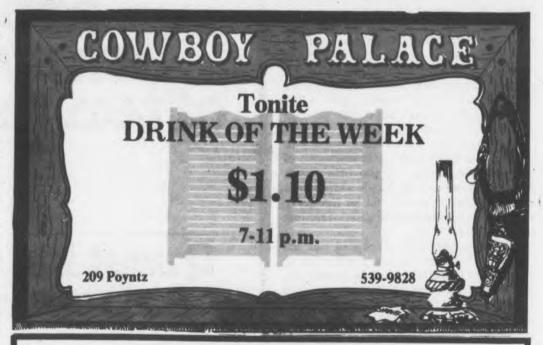

Returning from a weekend road trip that produced one win in six games, the K-State softball team will try to bounce back today when the Region VI championships begin at Lawrence.

The double-elimination, 12-team tournament will run today, Friday and Saturday, with finals scheduled for Saturday.

The ninth-seeded Wildcats will meet eighth-seeded Iowa at 9 a.m. today. K-State coach Charlotte Michal will start Janel Anderson, 10-12 with a 1.29 earned run average.

If the women can get past Iowa, they will face top-seeded Creighton at 1 p.m. today. A loss against Iowa will put the Wildcats in the losers bracket where they will play at 9 a.m. Friday. Michal said she will pitch Cindy Farris, 8-8 with a 2.27 ERA, in the second game.

"This is pressure time," said Michal, whose team comes into the tournament with a 22-25 record. "We have to bounce back. This has been a great season, but the teams will be tough at regionals."

Fibak eliminates No. 5 Amritraj

NEW YORK (AP) - Fifth-seeded Wojtek Fibak of Poland dropped the opening set, then took the next two to oust Vijay Amritraj of India from the $592,000 Tournament of Champions at Forest Hills. The score was 4-

Earlier, 11th-seeded Victor Pecci of Paraguay upset sixth-seeded Brian Teacher 6-4, 7-5; ninth-seeded Balazs Taroczy of Hungary stopped Larry Stefanki 6-3, 6-4; Heinz Gunthardt of Switzerland defeated Sammy Giammalva 6-3, 6-2; Mario Martinez of Bolivia downed Ricardo Cano of Argentina 6-3, 6-1 and seventh-seeded Johan Kriek of South Africa eliminated Dominique Bedel of France 6-1, 7-5.

Amritraj won the opening set, breaking Fibak in the sixth and 10th games, despite a rash of backhand errors. The 27-year-old Amritraj, who upset Jimmy Connors here a year ago, continued to have troubles with his backhand as Fibak, ranked 28th in the world, romped through the middle set with breaks in the first and fifth games.

Then came the crucial third set. Fibak broke in the third game, starting a run of nine straight points. In the fifth game, Amritraj, down love-30, finally snapped the string, pulling to deuce. But he lost serve when Fibak rifled a backhand down the line at game point.

The 28-year-old Pole then ran out the string to advance to the quarter-finals. Pecci roard back from 0-5 in the second set, winning seven straight games to upset Teacher. In the final four games, Teacher won only two points.

Taroczy, quietly moving through the competition on the outside courts at the West Side Tennis Club, had a much easier time of it Wednesday. In his first outing, a second-round match Tuesday against unheralded Eric Fromm, Taroczy had to battle back from match point to capture the three-setter.

Kriek, who lost the championship match to John McEnroe in the World Championship Tennis Finals in Dallas on Sunday, broke Bedel in the fourth and sixth games to breeze to a first-set victory. The second set was more difficult.

Minnesota can advance tonight

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) - The Minnesota North Stars, who have reached the National Hockey League Stanley Cup semifinals four times but never beyond, are a game away from the championship round.

"We're so close now, we can taste it," said North Stars defenseman Brad Maxwell, whose team holds a 3-1 cushion in the bestof-seven semifinal series against the Calgary Flames.

Minnesota defeated Calgary 7-4 Tuesday night in Bloomington, Minn. and faces the Flames at Calgary's Stampede Corral in Game five Thursday.

The winner of the series meets defending Stanley Cup champion New York Islanders, who swept the New York Rangers in four games.

Minnesota's Bobby Smith, who has had three goals and five assists in the last two games, cautioned against too much early "With eight seconds left in the game," he recalled, "I said to Al MacAdams on the bench, 'We can't celebrate yet. We've still got to beat them once more and it's not going to be easy. The Flames are a long way back now, but they're going to be psyched up'."

Minnesota was ninth in the NHL regularseason standings. Last season, they were eliminated in the semis by Philadelphia.

The Flames, in Atlanta until last May, never had advanced past the preliminary round. They still believe that there's hope.

"It's not over by any stretch," said Calgary coach Al MacNeil. "I don't feel we are on the ropes. We'll win at Calgary and be back in Minnesota."

Should Calgary win Thursday night, a sixth game would be played at the Met Center in Bloomington Saturday. The seventh game, if one is necessary, is scheduled for next Tuesday in Calgary.

"We don't want to give them a chance to get back into it," Smith said. "We want to end it as soon as possible and that would be Thursday."

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Answer:

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

for textbooks around the country?

Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question:

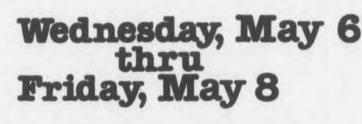

What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

DUESTION of the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase? will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

U.S. intensifies efforts to sell grain abroad

WASHINGTON (AP) - Agriculture 36.7 bushels of wheat. Secretary John Block announced Wednesday an "intensified campaign" to sell more U.S. grain to five countries which experts believe represent a growing market Block said the countries being targeted for the push are Algeria, Brazil, Chile, China and Morocco. He said the campaign will be extended to other countries "when plans are

Asked about a report that the USDA is preparing to sell surplus butter to the Soviet Union, Block said no decision had been

According to the depaytment's Foreign Agricultural Service, the five countries are expected to import nearly 17 million metric tons of the two grains-about 13.7 million of wheat and 3.0 million of corn-in the 1980-81 marketing year.

COMPARATIVELY, U.S. exports of all kinds of grain-including wheat, rice, corn and other feed grains-are expected to reach a record of about 118 million metric tons this year.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal, for example, to 39.4 bushels or corn or

Voluntary restraints to have little effect, GM president says

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Japanese automakers easily could sell more cars in the United States this year than they did last year, despite the voluntary import restraints announced last week, General Motors president F. James McDonald said Wednesday.

"I don't think it (the voluntary restraints) will have any effect on the marketplace, as far as we're concerned," McDonald said at a news briefing in Kansas City, where he addressed a forum for area stockholders.

McDonald said the Japanese restrictions apply only to new shipments. With some 400,000 units already stockpiled on U.S. soil, Japanese automakers could increase sales merely by selling off a portion of that inventory, he said.

But the voluntary ceiling on exports to the U.S. did have a beneficial effect, he said.

"From what we know, the agreement should avert the possibility of Congress passing restrictive trade legislation, and that's good for everyone," the GM president and chief operating officer said.

"GM has never believed in import restrictions by legislation...We feel that would have brought about a tariff war."

Meeting briefly with reporters, Block said, "We don't have any idea" on how much additional grain might be sold to the five countries. "We're hopeful, but we don't have any specific projection," he said.

Block said foreign crop conditions and other factors provided a "reason to believe" the five countries' needs might be greater than earlier realized.

"There could be an awful lot of competition in the world to sell wheat, because there are other countries...and we need to be in there scrapping," he said.

EARLIER, THE Des Moines Register said in a copyright story that unidentified government officials are saying the United States is willing to sell surplus butter for about $1 a pound to the Soviet Union, about 60 cents less than the government paid for it under the federal dairy support program.

The paper said the butter will be sold to American exporting companies who will resell it to the Soviet Union. The price of about $1 a pound would reflect the world price of butter. In all, it said the sale could involve up to 400 million pounds of butter from a surplus stock of more than 560 million pounds.

"There's no decision been made to do this," Block said. "It wouldn't necessarily be the Soviet Union (but) it could be, if we were to do this."

Block added that the administration is "at least giving some consideration" to selling butter and that "if it were sold, it would be sold at world prices."

Car jumps curb, kills 12-year-old girl

CHICAGO (AP) - An out-of-control car jumped a curb onto a school playground Wednesday and struck a group of students leaving class, killing a 12-year-old girl and injuring 19 other youths, authorities said. Two of the injured were reported in critical condition, hospital spokesmen said.

Five others were reported in serious condition, one was in fair condition and four others were in good condition, they said.

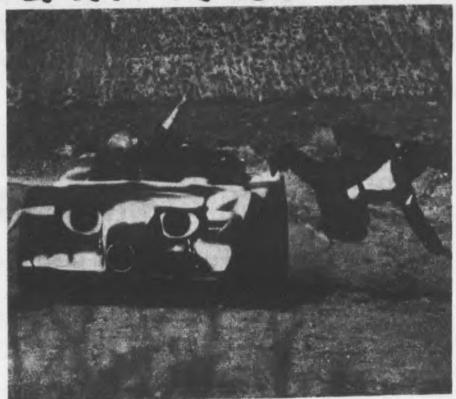

Police Capt. James Zurawski said the car was driven by a parent who had come to pick up his child at the West Side Chopin Elementary School. Zurawski said the car's brakes apparently failed and the auto jumped the curb, knocking down a fence.

A spokeswoman for St. Mary of Nazareth Hospital identified the victim as Angelica Avila. She said the girl died from multiple injuries and a skull fracture.

ONLY THE ARMY GIVES YOU TWO WAYS TO LOWER THE COST OF EDUCATION IN JUST TWO YEARS.

LOAN FORGIVENESS

If you have a Guaranteed Student Loan or a National Direct Student Loan (made after October 1, 1975) hanging over your head, consider spending a couple of years in the Army.

If you train for certain specialties, the government will release you from 1/3 of your indebtedness (or $1,500, whichever is greater) for each year of active duty.

Obviously, a three-year enlistment could eliminate 100% of your indebtedness. But you may prefer to take a shorter route and sign up under the Army's two-year enlistment option (and put 2/3 of your debt behind you).

Or you might want to join the Army Reserve. If you qualify, as a Reservist you can stay home, get paid for your active duty, and receive 15% loan forgiveness (or $500, whichever is greater) for each year you serve.

But we're not just offering you loan forgiveness. With your education, you can probably qualify for a higher rank and pay grade. You'll have your choice of many sophisticated Army skills.

And you may be eligible for generous monetary educational incentives.

TWO-FOR-ONE SAVINGS PLAN

If your dream is to continue your education some day, joining the Veterans' Educational Assistance Program can bring that day closer.

In fact, in just two years you can accumulate up to $15,200 for grad school. (Only the Army can offer you a two-year enlistment.)

It's not a loan, so you'll never have to worry about making payments. It's simply a savings program between you

You Save:	Per Mo. $100	2 Yrs. $2,400*
Gov't Adds 2-for-1:	$200	$4,800
Total: Army Adds:	$300	$7,200 $8,000
Total Benefits:		$15,200

*Maximum individual contribution during a 2-year enlistment.

Certain 4-year enlistments can get you as much as $20,100 for college, plus a $5,000 cash enlistment bonus for a total of $25,100.

and the government.

If you save between $25 and $100 of your monthly Army pay, the government will match that amount two-for-one.
On top of that, you might qualify for an exclusive Army educational incentive of $8,000.
(For enlistments of three years or more, your incentives could total up to $12,000.)

And you can participate in VEAP at the same time you're receiving loan forgiveness.

So, in just two years, you can go back to school with 2/3 of your debt behind you and up to $15,200 for your education ahead of you. (Of course, a longer enlistment could result in more educational benefits and 100% loan forgiveness.)

To find out more about both ways to serve your country as you serve yourself, call 800-421-4422. In California, 800-252-0011. Alaska and Hawaii, 800-423-2244. Ask for the name of the Army's college representative nearest you.

Reagan's $689 billion budget passes House

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House passed Thursday a $689 billion budget plan drafted to President Reagan's prescription for economic recovery through massive cuts in spending and taxes. Scores of Democrats joined a unanimous Republican minority to seal the lopsided decision.

It was the finest legislative hour to date for Reagan, who called it "a resounding victory, not only for our economy but for a spirit of bipartisanship that we can build upon in the months and years ahead."

"Today," he declared, "the people have been heard...let us never forget this historic moment of commitment."

Reagan prevailed by 77 votes in the more critical of two separate tallies. He reaped the backing of all 190 Republican and 63 of the 241 Democrats for a margin of 253 to

The chief executive had lobbied intensively to get his measure through the one chamber where Democrats have numerical control.

CONSERVATIVE DEMOCRATS aligned with the rock-solid Republican minority to choose for 1982 over an alternative backed by the Democratic leadership.

After the key vote which made Reagan's blueprint the order of business, the measure was passed-then a mere formality-by a margin of 270 to 154.

Reagan deputy chief of staff, Michael Deaver, said Reagan exclaimed "My gosh!" when informed of the key vote.

Later, in a formal statement, Reagan declared: "This budget resolution...sets responsible spending limits within which we must now work together.

"There is another message here that is equally important: when the people speak, Washington will now listen-and will act. For years, the American people have been asking that the federal government put its house in order. Today, the people have been heard...let us never forget this historic moment of commitment to a government that can both serve the people and live within its means."

OPPONENTS of the president's proposal assailed it to the end.

"Do you want to meat-ax the programs that made America great, or do you want to go slow in Reagan's austerity spending plan correcting errors of the past?"

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill (D-Mass.) said as he concluded debate in a chamber where hundreds of congressmen listened silently and a packed gallery watched intently.

"You close the door on America" when voting for the Reaganbacked bill, he declared.

But Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas, a conservative Democrat instrumental in lining up votes to pass the plan, said, "We're asking that America's traditional economic and political values be allowed to work again."

And Rep. Bob Michel of Illinois, the Republican leader, said "let history record that we provided the margin of difference that changed the course of the American government."

ALTHOUGH THE DEMOCRATS

clear in days leading up to the vote that the House was ready to back a president whose popularity, already high, soared in the days following a March 30 assassination attempt.

O'Neill conceded Democratic defections would be "extremely high," and suggested Reagan might win by 90 votes in a House where Democrats have a 51-seat majority. The margin, as it turned out, was 77 on the most critical tally.

But he made clear the Democrats would try to hold the Republicans responsible if the president's economic plan goes

"I guess the monkey is off the Democrats' back. The federal hold a majority of 241-190, it was program cuts, as brutal as they are, are the Reagan cuts," he said. "The deficits are the Reagan deficits."

The non-binding budget plan sets guidelines for Congress to follow as it passes legislation later in the year, and the precise nature of the cuts and size and shape of the tax plan won't be known for months.

But the plan does require cuts of $36.6 billion in federal programs, with the bulk of reductions ordered in social areas such as food stamps, public service jobs, health care and education.

The vote came as the Senate began debate on a its own budget bill, a measure which differs only slightly different from the House plan and also carries Reagan's blessing.

Ag college mood calms following reorganization

By PAM VAN HORN Collegian Reporter

It was one year ago when University President Duane Acker announced his plans for a structural reorganization within the College of Agriculture.

anization stirred The reorg hornets nest in the college and around the state and left some hard feelings among several faculty members involved in the shuffle, according to John Dunbar, dean of agriculture and director of the Agricultural Experiment Station—the top agriculture Acker's under position reorganization plan.

The original reorganization plan was submitted in October 1979 by Roger Mitchell, then vice president of agriculture. Mitchell, who has since taken a position at the University of Missouri, developed a plan that drew heated response from faculty members. Mitchell's plan would have put him directly in charge as dean of agriculture and director of the Agricultural Experiment Station.

Acker put a halt to the plan, pending review of the entire University's organization.

Later, he announced the creation of the position of University provost and an ag reorganization similar to the proposed by Mit-

FLOYD SMITH, who was replaced as director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, said it was too early to tell if the reorganization was beneficial to positions were announced in the college.

"I have adjusted to my duties as the director of the Kansas Water pleted on March 1, when Jim Resource Institute and have put it aside," Smith said.

Smith was at the forefront of the campus battle against the reorganization. He had challenged Mitchell over the plan because of the method used to evaluate his

In May 1980, Acker announced his plans for the colleges structural changes.

"The major change of Acker's reorganization plan has been the establishment of one line of communication from University president to the provost, then the dean to the department heads," Dunbar said.

The provost position was created by Acker after John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs, resigned. He combined Chalmers' duties with some others.

Under Acker's ag plan the dean of agriculture and director of the Agricultural Experiment Station would have the support of three associate positions-those of associate dean and director of cooperative extension; associate dean and director of research; and associate dean and director of resident instruction. The dean would be responsible to the provost and Acker.

Ozbun, associate dean and director of research, took his position.

Dunbar said since the positions were filled and now that all the deans are working in their capacities, they are moving ahead. However, he said the effect from reorganization will not really be noticed until the college is operating under the 1982 budget, which the new administrators prepared.

Acker said he thought the change of the administrative structure is a positive move for the faculty, the college departments and people across the state.

He said the major improvements have been the establishment of a single top office in the college; the deep involvement of the department heads working with the dean; and the associate dean and director of research allocating money for research within the departments; and the dean being involved with other University deans.

DUNBAR, WHO said he viewed his position as a leadership one to see that the agriculture operations are functioning effectively and efficiently, has labeled his first goal to be the development of "a team with a high degree of communication and cooperation."

He said he sees the fact that the associate deans have only one administrator they are responsible to as the key to the success of his goal.

Another goal of Dunbar's is to decentralize the budget so department heads would know exactly what they have to spend for the fiscal year and also let them allocate money more effectively, he said. The ex-

BEOG checks are finally here

The Student Financial Assistance office has finally received enough money to cover about 100 Basic Educational Opportunity (BEOG) checks, some of which were expected to be available in March.

"Students have been waiting since March" for the BEOG checks, said Susie Walters, assistant director of student financial assistance. "Many students are desperate for these dollars."

Students may pick up their checks from 9 a.m. to 11:50 a.m. and from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. today and throughout finals week in Fairchild 116, she said.

Students must bring their fee card in order to receive a release to get their checks. They will then be referred to the Comptroller's Office, Anderson 212, where the checks can be picked up.

The money was delayed because the federal office wanted to be certain they had enough money to complete the year's payments before they sent large amounts of money for BEOG to universities, said Robert Evans, director of Student Financial Assistance.

"The net result of this will be more efficient use of the taxpayers' money and will produce new knowledge of scientific importance through research," he said.

DAVID MUGLER, associate dean and director of resident instruction, is now responsible for the coordinating teaching and advising as well as curriculum segments of the college and allocates funds in those areas through his office.

"I really had a primary interest in serving the students and faculty in the College of Agriculture in whatever position I could best do it. If that included teaching or associative work, either with students or faculty, that's where I wanted to be," Mugler said.

Mugler said the real plus in the reorganization system is the interest, understanding and support of the teaching program from the dean, provost and the president.

"I see a sense on part of the department heads and the faculty of unity, unifed thrust, cooperativeness, enthusiasm for accomplishing our stated mission in the most effective manner possible with the resources we have," he said.

SINCE THE REORGANIZATION, the cooperative extension service operations and policies have not changed much except for the responsibility change of who to report to, Fred Sobering, associate dean and director of the service, said.

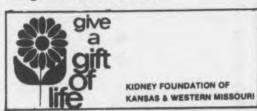

"We still have control of our budget. The cooperative extension's budget is allocated to us at the first of the year and we're responsible for it just like before," he said.

The reorganization, though, has "opened the door for extension to become more involved with the other colleges." Sobering said.

Ozbun, the new man on the block, said he believes the streamlined structure organizes and helps one know where to go to get things done within the college's administrative system.

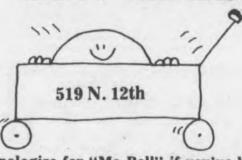

Acker's reorganization plan was also controversial within the agriculture student body and wasn't supported by everyone within the college, said Steve Hunt, 1980-81 agriculture council president and senior in agriculture economics.

"I supported everything Acker did, stepping in and evaluating the college's administrative positions," he said. "Everything that has happened within the college has been for the best."

SUPPORT PROPERTY TAX REDUCTION...

-GO TO COLLEGE-

DEAR KSU STUDENTS;

HERE ARE THE FACTS ABOUT YOUR TUITION INCREASE...

- 1.) W/under 5 min. public discussion and no reference to the impact on students, Regents raised tuition $124.00 next year.
- 2.) 3½% of the 22% increase will go towards property tax relief next year.
- 3.) Legitimate reasons for the increase were not publically stated.
- 4.) The increase is arbitrary because no thorough study has been done on what the effects of the increase will be.
- 5.) This increase is ill-timed because it was approved even though financial aid cutbacks have already placed a burden on students.
- 6.) There is a possibility the Governor will veto this tuition increase.

Voice your concern by writing the Governor, and your legislators.

Israel reports Syrian troop movements

BEIRUT, Lebanon — About 4,000 Syrian troops and tanks were reported to have crossed the Israeli-set "red line" in southern Lebanon Thursday in defiance of the Jewish state's repeated warnings that Syria risked war if it violated the boundary.

The action, if confirmed, would present the Reagan administration with a major escalation of the Mideast crisis.

Lebanese government sources said the Syrians deployed in Sehmor and Yehmor on the western flank of Lebanon's eastern Bekaa Valley and in southern Lebanon's Kfar Tibnit, just eight miles north of Israel's northernmost border town of Metulla.

The reported advance pushed Syria's forwardmost position in southern Lebanon 12 miles beyond the 25-mile "red line" along the Zaharani River that Israel said Syria agreed to five years ago. Israel has warned Syria it risks war with the Jewish state if Syrian forces cross the line

City tries to cash in on Presley's touch

SALEM, Va. — City officials are planning to cash in an old asset—a 1975 Plymouth whose value they hope is enhanced by its association with Elvis Presley.

The unmarked police car was used by Police Chief Harry Haskins to chauffeur Presley when the late singer performed at this western Virginia city in 1976.

"Crowds just mobbed the car coming and going," Haskins remembers.

Assistant City Manager Randy Smith said the car ordinarily would be worth between $1,400 and $1,600.

"Elvis fans seem to be loyal fans," Smith said, "but we aren't sure what we can get."

The buyer will receive a statement from Haskins certifying that Elvis made three short trips in the car, Smith said.

KC teamster 'seems assured' of job

WASHINGTON — Teamsters officials closed ranks behind Roy Williams as the favorite to become the new head of the 2 million-member union, sources reported Thursday as former President Frank Fitzsimmons was buried after a private funeral.

"It looks pretty much like unanimous agreement among the executive board members that Williams will be it (the new president)," said one union source, who requested that his name not be used.

The source said Williams, 66, a powerful union vice president under investigation by federal authorities because of alleged underworld ties, seemed assured of being elected president when the board meets sometime within next week or so.

If chosen by the 21 union officials who sit on the board, Williams would serve out the remaining four weeks left in Fitzsimmons' five-year term and be the leadership's sole candidate for a full term at the union's convention in Las Vegas next month. The delegates would almost certainly endorse the executive board's choice.

Storm knocks plane from air

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — A commercial jetliner tried twice to land in a torrential rain and thunderstorm Thursday then plunged into the River Plate, apparently killing all 30 people aboard, airline officials said.

The wreckage of the plane was found by Argentine Coast Guard patrol boats and helicopters in an estuary about 10 miles off the coast and about 25 miles from the Buenos Aires Metropolitan Airport, where it had been scheduled to land.

Austral Airlines, a private domestic carrier that owned the BAC-500 jet, said it appeared there were no survivors.

The craft, with 25 passengers and five crew members aboard, was on a routine flight from the northern province of Tucuman to Buenos Aires.

Airport authoriues said the pilot tried twice to land, but was warned away and told to try another airport in the industrial suburb of Quilmes, about 20 miles south of the Metropolitan Airport.

In the last radio message received from the plane, pilot Guillermo Testorelli said, "The plane is practically uncontrollable," airport officials reported.

No foreigners were reported among the passengers.

A real trip

As this semester closes, many items which can shape future development of the University remain in doubt.

K-State ran into legislative funding difficulties this year which remain a primary concern in years to come. A wave of fiscal conservatism swept through both the federal government and the statehouse. The budget-cutting is sure to trim many campus projects in all phases of education.

Meanwhile, the state Legislature and the Board of Regents waged a battle to see who could outduel each other. The people who wound up getting hurt were the students now forced to pay much higher tuition.

While students are shelling out more money, the quality of education here continues to erode because more and more good faculty members are opting to leave K-State for better pay elsewhere.

Campus construction projects remain a top University priority and while the new buildings should ease some overcrowded conditions, problems persist involving a lack of instructors in many departments to teach required courses. Yet the administration continues to work on new methods for attracting higher numbers of students.

A new coliseum has been another project endorsed by both Student Senate and the administration but only at an increasing expense to the University.

The problems are many, the solutions are few. The decisions are weak, but for some reason I'll always remember you.

So long K-State, it's been a trip.

KEVIN HASKIN Editor

The campaign continues

Student Senate may now initiate a statistical survey to determine student commitment toward building a new coliseum, a step that should have been taken long before the original referendum was voided last week.

In addition, senators are now planning to conduct more than 80 visitations to organized living groups, and tables will be set up in the Union to solicit opinions.

Admittedly, work was done to explain the referendum before, but not the efforts that are now being planned.

Instead of closed meetings, Senate is taking a step towards bringing the issue out in the open. But they should be careful in talking to living groups in that they don't turn the meetings into advertising campaigns for the coliseum. At the same time, students should take time to listen and ask critical questions of the senators.

Although money needed for such a project grows each year the University delays construction, students should be wary of investing in a project that has not been justified.

Letters

Passing time

Editor,

We've been noticing a growing unrest around campus concerning the length of a class hour (50 minutes) vs. the time it takes to work the crossword puzzle in the Collegian (30-40 minutes). What does the dedicated, concerned student do for those extra minutes at the end of the hour? Here's our solution.

Take the longest article you can find in the paper and search through the words for each letter from A to Z, in alphabetical order. The object is to find all 26 letters in order within one article on the same page. Note of caution: J and Q are hard to find.

Anyway, this game wastes a good 10 minutes or so of class time and should get you through to the bell. If that doesn't work, try writing a letter to the editor. This one was good for 20 minutes.

Thoughts

Those who set the hours for Farrell Library have made a questionable contribution to harried students preparing for finals. The library will be open tonight for an additional four hours, closing at 10. Saturday through Wednesday, the library will follow the regular schedule. I guess students don't need the library any extra for finals if they've been keeping up with their studying the rest of the semester.

If an award was ever created for the man who appointed the most committees during his tenure in office, it would certainly have to be presented to our current University president, Duane Acker. He has appointed committees on ag reorganization, a committee to set the policy for the committee which names buildings and committees on Nichols Gym.

The only things missing from his repertoire of panels is a committee on committees such as exists in Congress.

Perhaps the next one should be a committee appointed by the Board of Regents to examine the effectiveness and competence of university presidents.

I can't graduate without saying thanks to the man who is responsible for me staying at K-State. When Bill Brown agreed to be my adviser years ago, he didn't know he was in for a life sentence.

After six years—perhaps an eternity in his mind—under his tutelage, I'm finally going to graduate.

At one point, he even had to convince me not to transfer (God forbid) to that den of inequity down the river, the University of Kansas.

Brown has labored at this institution for 11 years and is now planning to take a well-deserved rest in England.

He's proof there are dedicated people in a university environment.

For anyone else who has had the pleasure of an adviser like Bill Brown, be sure to tell them thanks before you leave.

guess students don't need the library any extra for finals if they've been keeping up with their studying the rest of the semester.

Dogs—they seem to be proliferating in Manhattan at a rate far exceeding the population growth. Even on campus, man's best friend may be increasing faster than inflation. University policy states that the animals should be under the control of the owner at all times. I think they should be on a leash at all times and that leash had better be under the control of the owner.

We've all heard it before: "He doesn't bite." I don't believe that phrase and never will. Too many times that reassurance is followed by an angry snarl and a baretoothed leer.

I used to walk in the alley to get to my apartment on Ratone. But then, a couple moved into one of the houses adjoining the alley and put two German shepherds into a pen near the alley.

Now, anytime an innocent soul dares to tread upon the sacred ground of that alley, the shepherds set off a raucous howl which would make Johnny Kaw break out in a cold sweat if it were directed at him.

One Sunday afternoon early in the semester, those two dogs were loose in the back yard. When this inculpable fool (me) started walking by, the dogs took a leap for my throat—at least it seemed that way. They didn't actually leave their yard, but they didn't have to.

The point of all this is that those quiet walks along tree-lined streets have been spoiled by the dogs.

If a dog is owned for safety, it should kept in the house where it won't bother anyone but would-be burglars and the owners. If the dogs need exercise, let the owners run along with them, with leash in hand

On the political prognostication front, even though it's a little early, here's one observer who's betting on the re-election of Gov. John Carlin. He isn't the most astute man who has lived in Cedar Crest, but he may benefit from some of the lack of cohesiveness the state's Republicans displayed in the legislative session which ended Monday.

If the GOP can't get things together and come up with some realistic evaluation of school finance and property taxes, the voters may see the severance tax as an easy end run. That would translate into votes for Carlin and an anti-Republican mood regardless of the national picture.

Head shop owner to challenge Kansas drug paraphernalia law

By DEBRA GRABER Staff Writer

Don Flesher says he and his attorney plan to dispel the haze surrounding a law forbidding drug paraphernalia and simulated drugs in Kansas.

Flesher is head of the Kansas Retail Trade Cooperative and owner of Mother Earth, a Topeka record store and head shop. He said his attorney, whom he would not name, will challenge the law on constitutional grounds.

The law, which takes effect July 1, is patterned after a model law formulated by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA). Some attorneys believe the law is unconstitutional because it prohibits certain items which are almost impossible to define legally so they are distinguishable from other legal equipment.

THE BILL prohibits materials "intended for use or designed for use" with illegal drugs, "possession with intent to use" and "possession with intent to deliver." Flesher has said the law is vague and is designed to be enforced discriminately.

"We wouldn't be able to sell a scale or plastic bags or balloons, pipes or rolling paper, while a conventional store could," he said.

"They say, 'anything intended for use.'
The pipe store owner or I have no intention that these items be used for drugs. You can use a regular pipe to smoke marijuana.
Intention can only be proved by inference.

"We haven't filed yet, but we fully anticipate filing before July 1," he said.

Rep. Robert Miller (R-Wellington), the author of the bill, has speculated that if Flesher files, he also will ask a judge to declare a restraining order to stop the law from going into effect until the suit is decided.

THE LAW was defended by Neil Woerman, special assistant for the attorney general.

"The bill sets down criteria," he said.
"You just don't buy a tobacco pipe and smoke hashish in it. There's a good deal of difference. You and I know when we walk into a head shop. The law needs to be looked at with a good deal of common sense."

Flesher said his shop sells pipes for tobacco. "Is he defining legal and illegal equipment by its surroundings? He seems to indicate if it's in a head shop it's illegal," Flesher said.

Woerman said Attorney General Robert Stephan has indicated he thinks the law is constitutional. Woerman said the constitutionality of the model act has been challenged and upheld in 10 to 12 states.

At least 16 states and 220 municipalities have passed ordinances similar to the DEA Model Act, according to Charles Sherman, special agent for the DEA in charge of the Kansas City district.

Sherman said that in each case where the DEA model was followed closely, the acts were upheld.

Discontinuing rail service may curtail western route

PHILLIPSBURG (AP) — Rail service on the bankrupt Rock Island Railroad from Phillipsburg westward to Burlington, Colo., will end Aug. 1 unless some viable alternative is developed quickly, McDill "Huck" Boyd said Thursday.

Boyd, chairman of the Mid States Port Authority which is trying to keep rail service going on the line, revealed that negotiations with the Burlington Northern to keep it operating trains on the line had broken down.

Boyd said the company broke off the talks this week, citing only "recent developments" as a reason.

Burlington Northern has been operating freight trains on the 171 mile segment from Phillipsburg to Burlington on a voluntary basis the past six weeks, and has been negotiating with the port authority for a permanent lease-purchase agreement.

Boyd said the sharply lower freight rates on grain and the circuitous route the Burlington Northern was forced to follow on a shared-service basis on industrial shipments were primarily responsible for a change in the recommendations of the Burlington Northern acquisition team.

"It appeared until last week that progress was being made," Boyd said. "We had incorporated B-N recommendations into our proposal to rehabilitate the line, establish a reasonable purchase price and provide financing through track rentals and had been invited to submit a formal offer.

"After consultation with the state

KIDNEY FOUNDATION OF KANSAS & WESTERN MISSOURI

Department of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Railroad Administration, the offer was submitted and port authority officials are very disappointed that recent changes have caused the favorable recommendation to be withdrawn."

The Mid States Port Authority was organized last year to try to acquire title to the abandoned Rock Island tracks in northwest Kansas, rehabilitate them and obtain lease agreements with other railroads to continue to operate freight trains over them.

Students recommend shuttle bus alternative

After studying the feasibility of a shuttle bus system for K-State, a group of students presented their recommendation for a service that would encompass the campus, the community and major shopping areas.

The project was done for a special studies class in civil engineering, coordinated by Gordon Derr, graduate in engineering. The director of the study was Bob Smith, professor of civil engineering.

Outlining the presentation, Art Umble, senior in civil engineering, said the primary objective of the project was "to develop and evaluate alternative proposals for a bus system"

During the course of the semester, the class investigated the feasibility of three bus system levels. The first level of service proposes a campus circulation route that would encompass Jardine Terrace and the Rec Complex. A system with this capacity was estimated to cost each student $1.95 per semester during the spring and fall and $1.78 per student during the summer session.

The second level system would stretch the radius to include areas six to eight blocks from campus. Level II would cost spring and fall students $4.86 each semester and summer school students would pay $4.44.

The recommended third level would include both Levels I and II areas in addition to the major shopping locations.

Level III would cost students approximately $7.78 during the fall and spring semesters and $7.71 for students during the summer session.

Taiwan requests Acker's services

A two-week trip to Taiwan is in K-State President Duane Acker's summer plans.

Acker has been asked by the Taiwan government to "lend his expertise on a variety of things" such as budgeting, curriculum and "all the things a university president knows," Janet Woodward, assistant to the president, said. He will be conferring with persons in the Depatment of Education of Taiwan and university officials in Taiwan universities.

Expenses are being paid by the Taiwanese Department of Education in return for advice on the higher education system in Taiwan. His wife Shirley will accompany him on the June trip, Woodward said.

The Taiwan government requested Acker's consulting services through the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges. Woodward said he was chosen because of his extensive experience with land-grant universities. Acker has been involved with five land-grant universities since 1955.

Three other executive officers of universities will accompany Acker on the trip. They are the University of Connecticut President John DiBiaggo, the University of New Mexico President William Davis, and Barbara Uehling, chancellor of the University of Missouri.

Acker will be spending most of his remaining time traveling through Kansas discussing the needs of K-State with legislators and K-State alumni.

MARTIN

A survey was distributed to students at K-State as well as faculty, to determine the needs of students if a bus system was established, said Mike Scully, senior in civil engineering.

A total of 557 students were analyzed, chosen from different colleges and classes. Surveys were randomly put on 48 faculty cars and the results were analyzed with a "digitizer" and transferred to the University computer.

In a section of the survey, it was determined that 40 percent of students and faculty lived less than four blocks from campus and 75 percent lived less than a

Advantages of the system as presented by the group were less people driving, therefore, less auto emission; safety for females walking to and from campus; more economical as compared to auto insurance, gas costs, etc. and an increase in the housing market for students because of less expense for trips to and from campus.

It was also mentioned that parking would become easier for students that have to drive to campus and assistance of the inflow and outflow of people at University functions would be handled more effectively.

Alternatives to funding the system given were fares, bonds and government grants. It was also given that the University would have the options of owning and operating the equipment or contracting the service wholly are partly to an already estalbished service.

More rioting erupts in Ireland as crowd attends Sands' burial

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - The Catholics of Belfast buried Bobby Sands in a graveyard of Irish nationalist heroes Thursday, to a bagpipe's lament and a parish priest's plea for "love...peace...an end of violence.'

But new violence flared in this bloodstained land even as Sands, who starved himself to death to become the latest Irish Republican Army (IRA) martyr, was taken to his resting place, escorted by masked guerrillas and attended by 20,000 mourners.

Six miles from the cemetery, the strains of "God Save the Queen" rose in the drizzling Belfast air from 3,000 Protestants gathered to honor the victims of the underground war waged by Sands and his comrades in the IRA's Provisional wing.

"By a deliberate choice, he (Sands) took his own life. Those whom we honor today had no choice," militant Protestant leader Rev. Ian Paisley told the crowd.

THE 27-YEAR-OLD Sands' death Tuesday, the 66th day of his hunger strike at Belfast's Maze prison, brought a new peak of tension to the 11-year-old sectarian conflict here. The latest round of "troubles" threatens to worsen—three other IRA men imprisoned at Maze are hunger-striking to the death, like Sands to demand that jailed guerrillas be treated as political prisoners.

The guerrillas of the largely Roman Catholic IRA are fighting to end British control of this Protestant-dominated province and unite it with the Catholic Irish republic to the south.

Thursday's new violence was reported in Londonderry, 60 miles to the west, where rioting erupted after a mourning march. At least a dozen automobiles were hijacked, and youths stoned security force patrols.

There were no immediate reports of in-

THE FUNERAL was the biggest mounted by the outlawed IRA here since the conflict

One thousand mourners packed St. Luke's Church, Sands' parish in southwest Belfast, for the hour-long requiem Mass.

The coffin, draped in the Irish republic's flag of green, orange and white was taken on a slow, three-hour procession to the Milltown cemetery, sprawling on a hillside.

British soldiers with automatic weapons and armored vehicles stood by on side streets as the two-mile-long cortege wended through Belfast's Catholic districts, led by by a green-kilted bagpiper and seven IRA men, masked and in combat fatigues.

A trio of IRA riflemen fired three volleys over the coffin halfway to the cemetery.

A stillness fell over the graveside scene in early evening light. Sands' mother, Rosaleen, stood fighting back tears beside most of the leadership of the IRA's political front, Sinn Fein, as priests intoned the burial service in Latin.

The dead man's son, Gerard, who will be 8 on Friday, stood bewildered and dry-eyed as the pale-oak coffin bearing the body of the father he barely knew was lowered into the red clay by six IRA men.

Truman in good condition

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Doctors attending Bess Truman say she came through hip surgery in good condition Thursday, but they expressed concern over possible complications for the 96-year-old

Dr. Wallace Graham, family physician since 1945, said she was "in noble spirits" and in "very good condition" after un-dergoing 45 minutes of surgery at Research Medical Center.

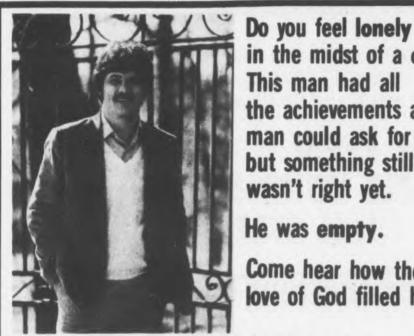

The widow of the late President Harry S. Truman suffered a serious fracture of her right hip when she fell after getting out of bed at her home in nearby Independence, Mo. Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Truman's thighbone was fractured near where it joins the hip, Graham said. Dr. Howard Ellfeldt, who also is team surgeon for the Kansas City Chiefs football club and Kansas City Kings basketball team, removed bone splinters and replaced the ball joint with metal parts.

Graham said Mrs. Truman was in good condition from a surgical standpoint, but warned: "Percentage-wise, it's precarious. There are many possible problems—pulmonary, lungs, kidneys, cardiac. I don't want anybody going around her with a cold of any kind."

New sorority to start chapter here next fall

By JILL MATUSZAK Collegian Reporter

The Panhellenic Council voted unanimously last night to extend an invitation to the Sigma Sigma Sigma (Tri-Sig) sorority to colonize a chapter at K-State next fall.

The council, which heard presentations by representatives from four national sororities this semester, voted on the invitation extension after hearing the final presentation last night.

Colonization of the Tri-Sigs on campus would probably take place shortly after formal rush at the beginning of fall semester, Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said.

The last colonization of a sorority at K-State was in 1961 with the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

"Do you realize it's been 20 years?" Robel

After the final presentation, executive members of last year's and the current Panhellenic Council met with other Panhellenic members who had seen all of the presentations.

After agreeing to invite the Tri-Sigs, the group made its recommendation to the council. After some discussion, the council voted unanimously in favor of the Tri-Sig invitation.

THE REASONS for the decision were numerous, said Joan Minneman, panhellenic expansion coordinator and junior in pre-design professions.

"It was mostly because of housing," she said. "They gave us a timetable, figures, and numbers. They would have a field secretary at the time of colonization. There are three other chapters in Kansas, and they have an established alumni association in Manhattan."

The council will ask for an answer from the Tri-Sig's national office by June 1, with a written commitment that the sorority will have its members housed within two years, Minneman said.

"The important thing is that they approached us," Robel said. "They came twice, once with a formal presentation and another for housing."

THERE WILL be "total greek support" for the Tri-Sig colonization effort if the sorority accepts, Minneman said. Panhellenic and the Interfraternity Council plan to help raise money for housing, publicity, and other aspects involved in the colonization, she said.

The council executive members said they planned to call Tri-Sig representatives after the meeting.

The other national sororities that made presentations to the council this semester were Zeta Tau Alpha, Alpha Gamma Delta, and Delta Gamma. All have Kansas chapters.

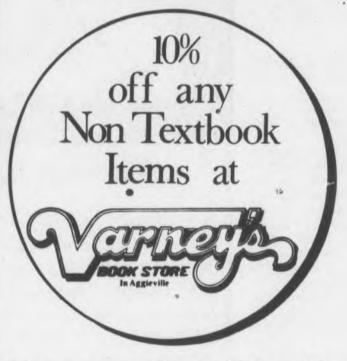

The addition of another sorority on campus will help to accommodate the increasing number of women expected to go through rush in the future, Robel said.

Government to return confiscated DES beef

WICHITA (AP) — A federal judge ruled Thursday that 170,000 pounds of beef the government confiscated a year ago, because it allegedly was contaminated with the livestock growth hormone DES, should be returned to its owner.

But U.S. District Judge Patrick Kelly stayed the effect of his order pending a possible appeal by U.S. Department of Justice lawyers.

In his 60-page order, Kelly said federal attorneys failed during the three-week trial to convince him that the beef they wanted condemned and destroyed would be harmful to consumers.

The 273 carcasses were seized at a Wichita meat processing plant and placed under impoundment in a cold storage facility.

The meat packing company then stopped payment on a $250,000 check to the Jarboe-Lackey Feed Lot, of Parsons, which handled the cattle.

ROBERT DONLAN, a Justice Department lawyer from Washington, D.C., said he didn't know how long it would take for his superiors to decide whether they want to appeal the case.

He requested and received the 60-day stay of the judge's order. But Kelly said the stay would remain in effect for the entire appeal process if the government decides to take the ruling to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

Government witnesses contended the meat contained dangerous amounts of diethylstilbestrol, a synthetic hormone that Morning shootout leaves 1 man dead

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — An early morning shootout between two pairs of brothers—two policemen and two alleged robbers—after an attempted restaurant holdup has left one robbery suspect dead and his 41-year-old brother charged with first-degree murder in his death.

Police said Isiah Jackson, Kansas City, also was charged with first-degree robbery, armed criminal action, and two counts of first-degree assault. Bond was set for Jackson at $100,000.

Police said although two off-duty officers shot Granville Jackson, 47, Isiah Jackson was charged with first-degree murder because his brother's death occurred during the commission of a felony.

Jackson was reported in serious condition at Truman Medical Center. His brother died at the hospital of gunshot wounds about 7 a.m.

Police said two brothers, Sgt. Robert Kinser, 33, and Detective Eugene Kinser, 30, had gone to a downtown restaurant to eat at the end of their shift early Thursday.

About 3 a.m., two men walked into the restaurant, one held a gun on the manager and demanded money while the other stood by the door, the Kinsers said. The suspects were armed with a shotgun and a handgun.

The two officers waited until the suspects were leaving to intervene.

In the ensuing gunfire, one suspect fell in the doorway and the other fled. He was later apprehended in an alley.

is a known cancer-causing agent. Its use as a cattle weight-gain stimulant was outlawed in 1979.

Kelly said in the order he accepts the ancient Greek assertion that "the dose determines the poison."

HE SAID while the government contended the presence of any DES was harmful, he was waiting for evidence to convince him enough DES was present in the beef to make it probable consumers would be injured.

"As a realist, the court now appreciates that the consuming public, i.e., approximately 200 million people, have daily and continuously consumed beef of DES implanted cattle for a period of approximately 25 years without a single report of a carcinogenic effect," Kelly wrote.

"Why this experience cannot serve as an inadvertent but most persuasive test escapes the court."

The meat was seized under the USDA's Meat Inspection Act and not by authority of the Food and Drug Administration, the agency that issued the DES ban. Kelly said in his order the ban remains in effect and wasn't at issue in the lawsuit.

In a statement from the bench, Kelly said it is "highly improbable if not physically impossible" that the beef in question is contaminated.

FEEDLOT CO-OWNER Jud Lackey was pleased with the order, but disappointed that Kelly issued the stay.

"If they had been able to bury this beef, which was a clean product, then that would have meant they could confiscate and destroy and food product anywhere in the United SAtes just on the whim of some bureaucrat," Lackey said.

His lawyer, Charles McAtee of Topeka, said even if the government's calculations had been correct, it would have meant the confiscated meat contained a total of 1.1 milligrams of DES. He said that total quanity would be about the same as six grains of salt.

Reagan, Suzuki hope to improve relations praise for Japan's "strong measures...to penalize the Soviet Union," President Reagan received Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki on Thursday with the administration's most elaborate welcome yet for a foreign guest.

It was the first meeting between the two 70-year-old leaders and they apparently hit it off, pledging themselves to increased cooperation at a time when the U.S.-Japanese relationship has been troubled.

One U.S. official said the prime minister told Reagan he valued the opportunity to talk with the president, "speaking openly as real buddies.

The official, who briefed reporters on the condition his name not be used, said one of the key differences between the two countries-the level of Japan's defense spending-was barely discussed.

The official also said he believed Reagan, referring to the administration's decision to lift the embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union, acknowledged to Suzuki that "our consultations might not have been as full as Japan might have expected."

NOT SINCE Richard Nixon was president has a huge flag of a visiting dignitary's nation flown along with the U.S. flag from the front of the Old Executive Office Building adjacent to the White House.

But it was there Tuesday, fluttering in a brisk spring breeze while trumpeters on a balcony overlooking the White House South Lawn blared out a more elaborate fanfare than previously accorded a visting dignitary and cannons fired a 19-gun salute.

Reagan praised Japan as "a harmonious and loyal ally whose people understand that free societies must bear the responsibility of freedom together."

Suzuki, taking note of the president's "remarkable recovery from the unfortunate incident"-the March 30 attempt on Reagan's life said he was delighted "that you are now standing here in very good health and with that winning smile that is now known throughout the world."

U.S. OFFICIALS have hoped the summit meetings, which continue Friday, will lead Japan to take more responsibility for its own defense and help guard sea lanes from an expanding Soviet navy.

But Reagan made no reference to that topic in his welcoming remarks and the Future computer expectations discussed at business seminar

Collegian Reporter

The computer industry is the fastest growing business today and in the next 10 or 15 years, computers will change the way people live at home as well as at work, according to Gary Mundhenke, president of Professional Data Services in Hutchinson.

Mundhenke was the guest speaker Thursday at the "Mini Computers for the Small Business" conference sponsored by College K-State's Administration, the Kansas Small Business Administration and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

The conference was designed to provide small businessmen with information about the usefulness of mini computers in order to help them make better decisions about using computers, said Randy Kramer, coordinator of the conference and senior in marketing.

In his speech, "Computers and the Small Business Today and Tomorrow," Mun-dhenke gave a brief history, present accomplishments and future expectations for the computer industry.

THE COMPUTER INDUSTRY is "brand new" compared to businesses such as the automobile and airplane industries. Computers are about 25 years old, he said.

However, Mundhenke predicts that in the future, society will be as involved with the computer as it currently is with the automobile.

"We're probably not 10 years away from the time when it will be unlikely to see somebody without a computer terminal in his office as it is today to see him without a telephone," he said.

Most predictions today indicate that by the end of the decade, 70 percent of the work force will acquire a computer or access to a computer to accomplish their jobs, Mundhenke added.

However, Mundhenke said he believes the question of computers outnumbering the jobs they can accomplish will arise. The question was raised in the mid-1950s when computers were first introduced, he said.

BECAUSE COMPUTER TECHNOLOGY has improved, computers are smaller and

The same International Business Machine Corp. computer that used to almost fill a room can now be held in the palm of the hand, Mundhenke said.

Technology has also driven the prices of computers down. For example, today an electronic calculator or a digital watch costs 5 to 10 percent less than five or six years

Computer accomplishments are taken for granted by people today, Mundhenke said. For example, people assume they can get a reservation on a plane to about anywhere in the world. However, Mundhenke said they should keep in mind that the computer had to process 250,000 instructions in order to make the reservation on a flight.

WITH THE INCREASE in technology, he predicts electronic mail computers will be used in offices. The computer terminal will be built into the desk and the person will be able to sort his mail on the terminal, Mundhenke said. This development would help reduce the amount of office space needed.

At home a person will be able to read the newspaper, vote and buy groceries by way of computer terminals. One benefit of these advancements would be a reduction in the amount of gasoline used to travel around

He said that "technology can do all these things today," but that most people are not ready for this change in their lifestyle.

For small businesses considering buying computers, Mundhenke recommended buying hardware and software together, knowing the dealers, and working with a reputable business.

Brown resigns student pub job

By KEVIN HASKIN unacceptable.

For most print journalism students, the initial encounter is frightening.

A short, gruff man walks into the room. As he speaks, a shortness of breath seems to accompany his gravelly voice. A few locks of hair slip down near his bushy eyebrows, out of place from their intended part.

Bill Brown

An eerie feeling sweeps across the room, caused by the difficulty associated with a class that fellow students have warned about and the initial impression received from the person in charge.

The two components of the course are exact opposites.

The instructor conveys experience by relating stories of newspapers and situations handled in previous semesters with "R2s."

The student is inexperienced, unsure of himself and worried that his work will be

But in time, through individual evaluation sessions with each student, the professor becomes familiar to the students. Although each individual's impression of him may differ, he has one unifying reference: Mr.

SINCE FALL 1970, Bill Brown has served K-State as director of Student Publications. He has advised students on the operation of two nationally recognized university publications—the Collegian and the Royal Purple. He has also taught a class that contributes the bulk of copy to the Collegian-Reporting 2.

Following the summer semester, Brown will relinquish this position to take a sab-batical in England. He will research a secret weapon developed by the British which he was involved with during World War II. After the year's leave, he will return to the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications as a professor. He will be replaced by Dave Adams, director of student publications at Fort Hays State University.

A K-STATE GRADUATE, Brown returned to the school he's "always loved" by stumbling onto the job he's had for 11

While publisher of the Garden City Telegram, Brown was offered another publishing position in January 1970. The job was at a larger publication owned by the Harris newspaper group, controlling owner of the Telegram.

Brown declined the offer and indicated to Harris he would not advance within the chain. The decision forced him to leave the Telegram because he believed the newspaper group would be better off without someone unwilling to accept a promotion.

In February 1970, Brown happened to be at K-State interviewing a student for a summer internship at the Telegram. Upon running into the head of the journalism department, Brown was asked to apply for an opening as student pub director.

It was a chance opportunity which was beneficial because "I just happened to be out of work at the time."

JOKINGLY, HE admits his timing was even more appropriate because of hostile

Mackville, Ks. (AP)-Robb Suitor, the infamous Shud-Shoveling Miser and all around S.T.M.F. has been quoted as saying "I will be graduating on time, unlike the rest of my pledge brothers."

In celebration of such a magnificent event, the entire town of Mackville, Ks. is planning to construct a monument in his honor. The sculptor of this bronze masterpiece has decided to name the statue, "The Bubble."

Along with this dedication, the Chamber of Commerce has erected a plague in his honor. The plague reads as follows:

Robb Suitor: From Shud Shoveler to appliance delivery boy to loan officer at Emporia, Ks. May all of us look to this bubble of a man for guidance and direction of what not to be in life.

Amen.

The Auxillary Women's Club are amazed at the fashion taste of this man, Robb Suitor. Some of his most memorable outfits include:

Plaid double-knits with 2" cuffs

Leisure suits in every color of the rainbow

The 35¢ tweed coat

With such an awesome wardrobe it has been rumored to this reporter that Robb or Zoot, Bluto, Pluto, Senator Blutarsky, Bubbles, Bobby, & Dennis (nick names his friends call him) is quite the lady's man. All the women around remember this "Hearbreaker" of a gem using such lines as:

With such love piercing lines as these, it's no wonder that this man can never get a date.

However, the mayor of Mackville has assured the residents that there will be an ABUNDANCE of belly babies crawling around Mackville. No one can forget "Zoots" one true romance with "The Belly."

attitudes in Garden City concerning an editorial he had written just prior to his resignation saying "Richard Nixon wasn't fit to be president.'

"People at that time thought that was a low blow. Then they came to find out I was right-three years later.'

An incident in Garden City perhaps explains best why Brown has been a master at teaching students to be assertive—a necessary trait in the journalism profession.

Brown's liberal viewpoints often led to spats with advertisers and his 1968 endorsement of Hubert Humphrey for president was no exception.

A merchant, who happened to be one of the Telegram's larger advertising clients, threatened to cancel his advertising. Following a heated debate over the phone, Brown decided to visit the businessman personally.

THE CONFRONTATION pushed Brown to jump on a counter in the store and proclaim to shoppers, "If you are Democrats, please leave because the owner doesn't want your business!"

His performance convinced many to leave the store and persuaded the merchant to keep advertising after coaxing Brown from

Although "I managed to make most of the people mad" in Garden City, Brown said his return to K-State was initially planned as a temporary move.

Brown accepted the director's job "with the idea I would go back into newspaper work." But through his experience at the University, he realizes he never left the profession.

"I consider directing Student Publications with the fourth largest morning daily in the state a newspaper job."

A STRONG personality and having a position in newspaper work have caused Brown to alienate many people at K-State, including students. But it's hard not to respect Brown for his sincere effort "to work with students and see them go out into good jobs in journalism."

On many occasions, Brown's tough criticism of each Collegian on the daily "rim copy" has upset students who think they're doing a good job. Yet the rim copy is probably the most sought-after Collegian circulating in the newsroom.

Brown is adamant that his advisory function is only that-allowing the content of the Collegian to be decided solely by students working for the paper. But he said it was tough to refrain from contributing.

"The most difficult thing to do was to keep my editorial nose away from the students." Brown quickly learned "it was a paper written by students and for students with editorial judgment left up to the students."

AS STUDENT pub director, Brown has lectured to many who complain about the Collegian or those inquiring about the newspaper's role on campus.

"Primarily the Collegian is here as an information medium. It's a valuable working experience, but that's a by-product. It's valuable also as an advertising medium for merchants who do business with students."

Although problems have surfaced at other institutions with administrations wanting to control the school paper. Brown said this has not been the case at K-State.

> You're still sexy at 20. C. May

Happy birthday from R. Powers, R. Nelson and T. Adamson

"I've received no outside pressure from the administration to control things that have been in the Collegian. When they're not happy with the Collegian, I've been told about it-but not in a threatening way."

BUT BROWN has often been critical of administrative decisions. He said something which bothers him is the amount of students flowing into K-State causing overcrowded

He cited an increase in the journalism department from 90 students when he first came here to 550 now.

"Too much emphasis has been placed on numbers-on enrollment. I believe K-State is too big for its britches."

Brown's love for the University has carried over to athletics. Like many, he has suffered through countless losing football seasons but enjoyed basketball in his customary seat three rows from the floor in Ahearn Field House. He is quick to warn that emphasis on athletics should not be the focal point of the University.

"I disagree with those that believe athletics is the picture window of the University." He said it's foolish to say enrollment is dictated by whether the University has a rich athletic tradition.

"We've had a losing football team for years and enrollment has gone up-not declined," he said.

DESPITE HAVING an opinion on almost any subject, it's wrong to say that all Brown does is complain. His fast pace portrays a man who always has something to do.

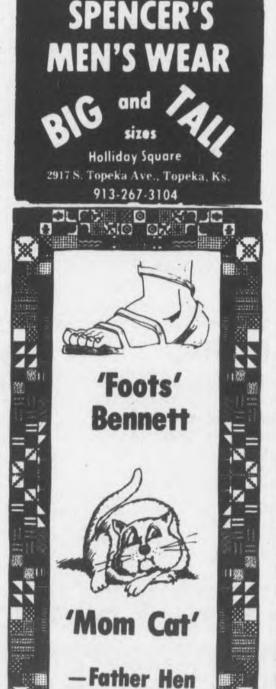

Busy as he is, he still finds time to joke with students and even pitch a softball for the comical Collegian squad in a similar fashion to the comic strip character named

Students who work for one of the University publications, including everyone who's experienced the opening day jitters of Reporting 2 and still survived, has an opinion of Bill Brown. It has been formed through personal contact rather than trying to figure him out by what's been mentioned only in class.

Students have long strived for personal advice on matters ranging from job opportunities to picky questions concerning journalistic style and ethics.

And because of his open-door policy, it's going to be strange walking into the student pub office and not hearing the most familiar question in Kedzie Hall.

"Have you seen Mr. Brown?"

Missouri official target of lawsuit

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The National Organization for Women (NOW) filed a $10 million lawsuit against Missouri Attorney General John Ashcroft on Thursday, alleging he intentionally damaged the women's rights movement to further his own political career.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court, alleged Ashcroft had conspired to violate the rights of the women's group by pressing an unsuccessful antitrust suit three years ago.

"We believe he has misused his office. He's violated our civil rights," Linda Locke of Columbia said after filing the suit for NOW, which is seeking $2.5 million in actual damages and $7.5 million in punitive damages.

However, Ashcroft denied that his actions were politically motivated and said the antitrust suit was filed "in the public interest."

THE SUIT stemmed from the Republican attorney general's unsuccessful antitrust suit filed against NOW in an effort to halt NOW's convention boycott of Missouri.

NOW had urged various organizations not to hold conventions in Missouri and other states which had not ratified the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

"Ashcroft intended to injure, and has injured, the entire women's rights movement by invoking the power, prestige and credibility of the state of Missouri in support of the spurious claim..." the suit

The suit also charged that Ashcroft conspired with other states "with the intent and purpose of harassing NOW by requiring it to defend not only the antitrust but also similar lawsuits in other states."

ASHCROFT DENIED the allegations and said he filed the antitrust suit because the convention boycott had cost the state millions of dollars.

"A public official has to do what he thinks is is in the public interest," said Ashcroft, 39. "If I end up being sued, so be it.

"I brought the suit in the best interests of the people of Missouri," he added.

During the antitrust trial, Ashcroft's office had argued the convention boycott, which was designed to presssure the Missouri Legislature into ratifying the ERA, actually hurt an innocent third party-the state's convention trade.

But U.S. District Court Judge Elmo Hunter ruled in February 1979 the boycott was a legal expression of NOW's First Amendment rights and didn't violate antitrust laws. The U.S. Supreme Court last fall refused to hear Missouri's appeal of the

At a news conference after she filed the suit, Locke also said Ashcroft's antitrust suit had hampered NOW's campaign for ratification of the ERA in Missouri because the organization had to use much of its resources on legal expenses.

Strike negotiations indicate no chance for early settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) - Negotiations between the United Mine Workers (UMW) and the soft-coal industry resumed Thursday after a three-week break, but there was no indication the talks would bring a quick end to the 42-day-old nationwide

UMW President Sam Church said just prior to the bargaining session that the union is not ready to compromise on its demands and union spokesman Eldon Callen said a quick settlement is not likely.

"We know they're not going to do it by today," Callen said. "I'm convinced of that. I know there's going to be a lot of tough bargaining. It could be done in a short amount of time, but I just don't expect it."

B.R. Brown, chief negotiator for the industry's Bituminous Coal Operators Association, refused to answer reporters' questions as he walked into the negotiations at a Washington hotel.

Brown had called off the talks at the last session April 17, saying then that the union was not ready to "bargain realistically."

CALLEN MAINTAINED that key union demands made at the last session remained on the table. Asked whether the union had decided to compromise, Church said, "No,

Probably the major issue tying up the talks is a provision that would require coal companies covered under the contract to pay royalties to UMW pension funds for nonunion coal they buy.

dropped from the March 23 proposal turned down by the UMW's 160,000 rank and file members and Church wants it put back in.

Church, asked what had brought union negotiators back to the table, said simply, "The operators."

Callen explained that Church had been calling company bargainers every few days and that Brown responded Sunday night that he was ready to resume negotiations.

CHURCH SAID Wednesday he did not know why mine owners had agreed to meet anew, but he speculated that they may be afraid of losing foreign markets if the strike

"There is not much coal at the export docks," he said. "I'd hate to see us lose our export markets the way we lost our metallurgical markets after the last strike."

Sporadic violence which has marked the six-week strike continued Wednesday night. Sheriff's deputies in Belmont County, Ohio, reported several incidents of violence that they linked to the walkout. A watchman at R&F Coal Co., a non-union coal operation, was forced out of his truck at gunpoint and ordered to walk down a road, the deputies said. When he returned, the windshield of his vehicle had been smashed.

The deputies said two independent haulers also reported windshields smashed during the night. Earlier, three workers coming off duty at the non-union Cravat Coal Co. mine near Holloway, Ohio, reported holes had been punched in the radiators of their cars,

Producer pushes 'Blues Brothers' phenomenon too far on the screen

By JIM MELIZA Collegian Reviewer

Bigger is better. At least that's what the American sensibility would have us believe. Everything from speakers to cars to movie budgets would seem to indicate that trend. That is until the foreign markets showed up with products to the contrary and as a result, most American producers took the

Collegian review

One exception seems to be the moviemakers. The powers that be have allowed production costs to soar. Some of the movies whose budgets have exceeded $20 million are "The Deer Hunter," "Star Trek," "Superman," and "The Blues Brothers."

Three years ago, Jon Landis took a cast of virtual unknowns (with the exception of John Belushi), and a $2 million budget and created a genuinely funny movie, "Animal House."

Landis has expanded his budget more than 15 times to bring the "Blues Brothers" to the screen. In doing so he tried to lift himself from the ranks of B movies.

Needless to say, the movie does have its funny parts. Dan Akroyd and Belushi are good comedians in their own right, but for some reason the chemistry doesn't seem to mesh. Since they are the backbone of the story, it becomes to big for itself without

For example, in one of the many chase scenes the brothers take the Bluesmobile on a destructive drive through the icon of American consumerism, the shopping mall. That scene is as good as most satiric attacks in recent movies, but the chase scenes keep coming and soon the satire backfires.

Musically, the cameo appearances of Aretha Franklin and John Lee Hooker outshine anything else. However, it is logical that the masters of the craft would be better than their pretenders.

As a short skit on "Saturday Night Live" the Blues Brothers was a scream. When their album was released it provided some hours of amusement. But with wretched excess, Landis proves single handedly that good ideas or curiosities, such as this film, should remain ideas.

German 'mom' likes student crowd

By SUSAN LAVERENTZ Collegian Reporter

She is called "mom" by some K-State students; to many she is a friend and confidante.

Inge Gibbons has worked at Hibachi Hut in Aggieville since 1960, providing pleasant idle chatter and advice to students who frequent the establishment.

Behind her thick German accent lies the knowlege gained through experiencing pain and sorrow, and yet, unequaled happiness since she has come to Manhattan.

"I came from Germany in 1956," Gibbons said, and she has lived in Manhattan ever since.

Inge Gibbons

"I met my husband (in 1953) while he was in the service, and we got married over there (Germany)." she said.

there (Germany)," she said.

THEY MET IN the restaurant where she worked, and had been working for 10 years after World War II.

"He came into the restaurant where I was working, and he asked me out for a date," Gibbons said.

They were married in 1955, and he brought her to the United States one year later.

She knew no English when she first arrived she said, "I learned from TV and the newspaper." K-State students—taking German classes at the time—helped her to learn the language.

"Some boys would come about 10 at night, every night, who would study German. So I teach them German to help them with their class, and they would teach me English," Gibbons said.

"They (students) would say to me, 'Inge, you learn me German?' and I would say, 'Okay, you learn me English'."

Ten years later, student attitudes and behavior have changed, Gibbons said.

"The kids 15 years ago had a lot more respect," she said. "They treated you different. Now they talk dirtier. They don't care anymore."

WHEN SOME OF the alumni come back for football games they stop in to see Gibbons

"They would come in and say, 'You recognize me? I graduated 15 years ago'." She said she remembers them.

"I call them old timers, and this is the first place they come, to come see me," she said. "They come in and give me a hug and kiss me."

Students used to come in to Hibachi Hut around 11 p.m. for a study break and to get something to eat. The whole place would be filled up, she said.

"Some kids don't got enough money, I always get them an order of french fries," she said. "They would come in and say, 'Mom, I don't got enough money for french fries.' I was mom to everybody. I say, 'We give it on the house'."

"They really appreciated it. Now the kids are more for parties and drinking," she said.

GIBBONS LISTENS to students' problems.

"They had some problems with girlfriends, they would come in and say, 'Mom, you got time?' and I would say, 'what's the matter?" They always wanted advice, she said.

"The students now don't want help and they think they can do everything for themselves," she said.

Gibbons said she believes this is another reason students of today are so different. She attributes the attitudes to the times we are now living in.

"We still got some nice kids, a few are a little nasty," she said.

Gibbons' memories are not all good, as she looks back on her childhood in Nazi Germany.

Her father was placed in a concentration camp for writing an underground newspaper criticizing Hitler; leaving her, her mother, and 15 brothers and sisters, to fend for themselves. Her mother, as well as seven of Gibbons' brothers and sisters survived the war.

"We lost everything we had because of bombing," she said.

GIBBONS' MOTHER received no financial support from the government to help raise her children because of her husband's opposition to Hitler.

Because Gibbons was the oldest, at 14 she went to work in a factory to help support the family.

"I went to high school two times a week and worked at the factory six days a week, from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.," she said.

As a child, she was supposed to march for Hitler, along with other German children, but she refused.

"They gave my mother three warnings. On the fourth time they picked me up," Gibbons said. Russian soldiers took her to a concentration camp where she spent 23 months being "used like mice," she said. She received experimental shots that infected her skin.

"The conditions were also very dirty," she said, citing that as the reason for her sixmonth stay in the hospital, following her release from the concentration camp.

"A lot of people ask me if (the television movie) the holocaust was the truth, and I say, 'that's the truth.' You still don't see everything that happened."

AFTER THE WAR was over, the American soldiers came in and asked each German if they would like to go home with them, she said. Gibbons refused, opting to stay in West Germany.

All of her family was in East Germany, but because of the Russians, Gibbons did not attempt to reach them.

Gibbons has not seen her brothers and sisters since she left for the concentration camp, but they have been corresponding through letters over the years. This month, she will be reunited with them during a three-week visit to her homeland.

Because of Gibbons' background, she finds it satisfying to help others out.

"I don't got kids, all the kids (students)

Smell those pits, Potter.

Good luck on finals. Love, Ter here are mine. When I walk down the street and some boys stop me and say, 'Mom, I was in to see you, where you been?', then they kiss me,' she said.

"The college kids are my kids, I enjoy them. When they need a little help, I help them. I like to help out. I know, I was poor. And when somebody can give me a hand, I appreciate it."

'Cats sign 6th cager but Reid to transfer

Continuing with what may be his best honors recruiting year here, K-State coach Jack Hartman announced Thursday his sixth high school basketball signee this year.

Greg Livingston, a 6-3, 175-pound guard from Coffeyville, has announced his intentions to play for K-State next year.

While Hartman gained another guard Thursday, he also lost one. Steve Reid, the 5-10 freshman from Dodge City, has announced that he will leave K-State after the spring semester and transfer to Purdue.

Livingston averaged 22 points and 13 rebounds a game for Coffeyville last year while shooting 50 percent from the field. Those figures earned Livingston all-state

'Cat softball team beaten by lowa

Despite outhitting its opposition, the K-State softball team was dumped into the losers bracket Thursday in the Region VI Championships at Lawrence.

Iowa, coming up with two runs in the bottom of the third inning, handed the Wildcats a 3-2 loss.

Now a loss away from having its season come to an end, K-State will play the loser of the Iowa-Creighton game Friday at 9 a.m. in the grueling losers bracket.

The Wildcats jumped out to an early lead against Iowa, coming up with two runs in the top half of the first inning. Tammie Totland started the fireworks with a single, and came around to score on Julie Laughery's home run to center field.

Totland was the offensive star for the women, getting three of the team's five hits against Deb Schneider, who pitched the entire game and picked up the win for Iowa.

Iowa got a run back in the bottom of the first, and then scored twice in the bottom of the third for what proved to be the eventual winning runs.

Linette Wieland and Cherle Anderson both walked, and the two came around to score on Kris Rogers' triple off Janel Anderson, who took the loss, her 13th this season to go Anderson pitched the first three innings before being relieved by Sherrie Johnston, who hurled the final four innings.

"We got some runners on base," K-State coach Charlotte Michal said, "but we couldn't score them."

Now 22-26, the women, if they plan to stick around for the finish of the tournament, will have a busy day today. If they win at 9 in the morning, they will then play at 1 p.m. If they win that game, they then will play at 5.

With Livingston averaging 25 points, 10 rebounds and shooting 57 percent from the field in the Class 5A state tournament, Coffeyville took third place, losing in the semifinals to eventual champion Wichita Kapaun-Mount Carmel, which featured 6-11 Greg Dreiling, one of the most sought after players in the country who recently signed a national letter of intent with Wichita State.

"Greg (Livingston) has a complete variety of basketball skills," Hartman said. 'Among his talents, he is an excellent shooter and an outstanding jumper. Plus, he is a first-class young man and a fine student (who plans to major in business)."

Livingston also is one of the state's top golfers, but he probably will not participate in that sport at K-State.

While K-State might have found a topnotch guard, it possibly lost one, too. Reid played enough the last half of the season to draw raves as the next Lon Kruger, K-State's former Big 8 player of the year and now the Wildcats assistant coach.

Malone scores 31 as Rockets rally for 92-90 upset victory

BOSTON (AP) — Moses Malone, Houston's dominating center, scored 31 points to lead the Rockets to a 92-90 upset of the Boston Celtics Thursday night, tying the National Basketball Association championship series at one victory apiece.

The Celtics held an 82-75 edge with 7:09 to play, but were limited to just eight points the rest of the way as the Rockets rallied to win. Houston outscored Boston 22-8 from the foul line, getting 11 of those free throws from Malone.

The next two games of the best-of-seven playoff final will be played in Houston Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

The victory broke Boston's 14-game winning streak against the Rockets, a string dating back to Dec. 12, 1978.

Despite committing 12 turnovers and being outscored 12-1 from the foul line, the Celtics held a 49-45 halftime advantage on the strength of 62 percent field goal shooting compared to 33 percent by the Rockets.

Billy Paultz scored a pair of baskets and Mike Dunleavy hit a jumper to start the third quarter, giving Houston a 51-49 lead, before Boston responded with 11 straight points. Robert Parish and Chris Ford hit jumpers, Rick Robey scored on a tip-in, Nate Archibald made a three-point play and Robey made a layup for a 60-51 Celtic lead.

But the Rockets refused to fold. They outscored Boston 17-8 the remainder of the period, Calvin Murphy hitting an 18-foot BOSTON (AP) — Moses Malone, jumper to tie the score at 68 heading into the ouston's dominating center, scored 31 fourth quarter.

Five points by Larry Bird, who led Boston with 19 points, helped the Celtics take their 82-75 lead with 7:09 to go, but once again the Rockets bounced back and outscored Boston 12-4, going in front 87-86 on a free throw by Malone with 2:49 left.

A hook shot by Cedric Maxwell put Boston back on top, but reserve forward Bill Willoughby regained the lead for Houston at 89-88 with a jumper from the left corner with 2:10 remaining.

Boston was unable to score on its next three possessions, Maxwell and Bird missing jumpers and Malone intercepting a pass, before reserve guard Allen Leavell hit a 10-foot jumper for a 91-88 Rockets lead with 28 seconds to go.

Archibald sank two free throws 10 seconds later to pull Boston within one, but Mike Dunleavy made one of two free throws with 11 seconds left for the final margin.

Archibald missed a 20-foot jumper for Boston in the closing seconds.

Willoughby added 14 points for the Rockets and Paultz scored 13. Bird grabbed 21 rebounds for the Celtics, who had won all 29 previous games this season in which they had limited their opponents to less than 100 points.

It was Houston's eighth playoff victory away from home, an NBA record.

Still with a slim chance of making the postseason tournament, the K-State baseball team will travel to Ames, Iowa for a four-game series against Iowa State Saturday and Sunday.

The two teams have doubleheaders scheduled for 1 p.m. both days.

K-State currently is in sixth place in the Big 8 with a 6-10 record, but with a little luck the Wildcats can sneak into the postseason tournament, scheduled for May 14-18 in Oklahoma City.

Missouri, 13-6 in the league, has been assured of a spot in the tournament. The Tigers host Oklahoma, 11-9, this weekend in a four-game series.

Sandwiched between Missouri and Oklahoma is Oklahoma State with a 10-6 record. The Cowboys host Nebraska, 11-9, in a four-game series this weekend and only have to win one of those games to qualify for a spot in the postseason tournament.

After Nebraska is Kansas, which finished the Big 8 season with a 12-11 record. No matter what K-State does this weekend, KU will finish with a better conference record.

But K-State, 32-19 overall, still has a slight chance to make it to Oklahoma City, provided that it sweeps the four-game series against Iowa State. One loss would eliminate K-State from contention.

But the task ahead of K-State isn't the most difficult one. Iowa State is locked in the Big 8 cellar with a 4-16 record. The Cyclones are 32-20 overall.

Rugby

In what may be the best kept secret on campus, the K-State rugby team will compete in the final four of the Rugby Championships this weekend in Dayton, Ohio. The ruggers advanced to the final four by winning the Western Championships two weekends ago at Denver.

Men's Golf

The K-State men's golf team will compete in the Big 8 championships Monday and Tuesday at Lawrence's Alvamar Hills Golf Club. Coach Ray Wauthier's Wildcats are picked to finish last in the tournament, with Oklahoma State the favorite to win it. The teams will play 54 holes—36 Monday and 18 Tuesday.

Men's Tennis

The K-State men's tennis will play in the Big 8 championships Tuesday and Wednesday at Oklahoma City. Coach Steve Snodgrass' Wildcats are picked to finish last, with Oklahoma State favored to win it. It will be a round-robin tournament.

TORONTO (AP) — Otto Velez ignited a four-run rally in the fourth inning with his third homer of the year and Rick Bosetti drove in two runs to pace the Toronto Blue Jays to a 6-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians Thursday night.

Velez, who hit seven home runs against Cleveland pitching last year, collected Toronto's first hit of the game when he led off the fourth inning with an opposite-field home run just inside the right-field foul pole off Rick Waits, 3-1.

ST. LOUIS (AP) - Reliever Bruce Sutter walked Brian Asselstine on a full count with the bases loaded in the eighth inning, scoring Jerry Royster as the Atlanta Braves beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-3 Thursday.

Sutter issued the walk came after St. Louis starter Silvio Martinez, 0-2, yielded a one-out single to Bob Horner and walked Dale Murphy. After pinch-runner Royster and Murphy executed a double-steal, Sutter intentionally walked Glenn Hubbard and struck out Bruce Benedict before walking pinch-hitter Asselstine.

Right-hander Rick Camp, 3-1, picked up the victory after allowing one unearned run in the final three innings.

Tony Scott reached first with one out when Braves' first baseman Chris Chambliss muffed shortstop Rafael Ramirez' throw. After Keith Hernandez popped out, George Hendrick was hit by a pitch and Dane Iorg rifled a run-scoring single to center to tie if

In the top of the seventh, Ramirez had provided the Braves with a 3-2 edge by scoring from second when Cards' shortstop Garry Templeton dropped Ed Miller's twoout pop fly.

Atlanta earlier led 1-0 on Benedict's RBI double in the second only to have St. Louis score twice in the bottom of the same inning.

Third baseman Horner's throwing error helped the Cards. Consecutive singles by Ken Oberkfell, Tommy Herr and Martinez produced a 2-1 St. Louis lead before Atlanta tied the game 2-2 in the fifth on Benedict's

Anchorman feels pressure to keep CBS News No. 1

NEW YORK (AP) - Dan Rather says he knew he'd feel pressure to maintain the CBS "Evening News" audience as Walter Cronkite's successor, but says, "I had no idea it was going to be what it was.

"In human terms, nobody can see and hear that much written and said about himself, and not be aware of it," Rather said in an interview in his ninth week as an-

"I do worry some because so much attention is given to the superficial apsects of broadcasting-who's up and who's down," Rather said. "All that counts, but is far less important than maintaining a standard of good, solid journalism."

The pressure, Rather said, has been from the outside-the media in particular, as well as the opposition—and not from his bosses at CBS. Each of the networks reportedly has spent at least $1 million promoting its own evening newscast since Cronkite's depar-

SINCE BEING named Cronkite's successor last year, Rather has been subjected to intense scrutiny, and rumors persist that CBS has a replacement—perhaps Charles Kuralt, the network's "Morning" news anchorman-waiting in the wings.

The common theme in promoting the news on ABC and NBC has been experience. NBC, as recently as Monday, ran a quarter-page ad in major newspapers touting "John Chancellor & The NBC News Team: Experience You Can Trust."

"Sure, I've felt the pressure," said Rather, who joined CBS News in 1962. "I wish I hadn't. There's no sympathy called for, though. What I do believe is that in the long pull, what counts is coverage, and I'll put ours up against theirs any time.

In the two months since Cronkite's departure, the competing networks have gained slightly on CBS, long the frontrunner in ratings for its evening news show.

THERE IS SOME question, however, whether the shift in viewer preference is a result of disaffection with Rather or of the extraordinary promotion for ABC's "World News Tonight" and "Nightly News" on

"It appears Rather is changing viewing habits," said Paul Isacsson, vice president for sales for CBS, "and what I think you're seeing is viewers looking around, and most of them coming back to CBS."
He said the "Evening News" share of one segment of the audience, women 18-34, has increased by 17 percent in the last year, while ABC's proportion of the same audience has declined by 7 percent.

In addition, commercial time for the "Evening News" "sold faster than ever" for Rather's first full quarter as anchorman, Isacsson said, reportedly at a rate of $50,000 for a 30-second spot. "That's a great source of encouragement," he said.

CBS' "Evening News" attracted 26 percent of the audience in Rather's first week on the job, March 9-13, compared with 23 percent for NBC and 22 for ABC. By Rather's eighth week-April 27-May 1-CBS' share was 24 percent, ABC's 23 and NBC's 22.

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Book Buy-Back

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the books are to be re-adopted fer use the next semester, and if the books are to be re-adopted fer use the next semester, and if the books are to be re-adopted fer use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Duestion: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

> Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40. Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the

Horticulture department hosts first plant therapy workshop

For the first time, K-State's horticulture department will sponsor a summer workshop on horticulture therapy, Wednesday

K-State, which established the first undergraduate horticultural therapy curriculum in the United States 10 years ago, will bring in several noted speakers from various parts of the country to speak at the workshop, Richard Mattson, professor of horticulture, said. The workshop will be a "hallmark," celebrating the past decade, as well as the "Year of the Disabled Person," as designated by the United Nations, he said.

"This is a new development in our program," Mattson said. "It marks the first time we have attempted to put on a summer workshop to meet the needs of professionals that are working in the fields."

Fire guts fraternity house

A lone figure kicks through a charred pile of rubble that once represented a semester's worth of notes and

A maze of dismal, blackened walls, random debris, and memories are all that remain of the Sigma Chi fraternity house after it was gutted by fire last Tuesday. The fire destroyed the oldest portion of the house, and the kitchen, dining room and meeting area-a four-year-old addition-sustained moderate smoke and water damage.

The fire started after a workman had been removing paint with a blowtorch near the front entrance, according to Larry Reese, assistant fire chief. Parts of the internal wooden structure smoldered about two hours before the fire actually broke out.

The paint removal was part of a renovation project being done while the house was vacant for the

As a result of the destruction, the fraternity members will probably be living in neighboring apartment buildings for the fall semester, according to Frank Bradley, president of the Sigma Chi House Corporation, an alumni group.

Bradley said a new apartment building is under construction close to the Sigma Chi property and renting was presented as one of the housing options at a board meeting held Thursday night.

"There's a possibility we could rent the entire building and that would house practically all of the members," Bradley said.

The board is also looking at other apartment buildings as possible housing alternatives, he said.

Bradley said the house was insured for approximately $350,000, but said that sum would probably not be adequate to rebuild the structure.

The older portion of the house will probably have to be torn down, Bradley said.

"We haven't had time to have a contractor look at it but we alumni think it will have to be razed," he said.

The fraternity house was built around 1925, Bradley said. Before the Sigma Chis bought the building in 1950, it was occupied by the Delta Tau Delta frater-

Changes hinge on funding cost $3 to $4 million and the faculty of the department have began a push to encourage the Kansas Legislature to designate money for the remodeling of the lab. John Dunbar, dean of the College of Agriculture, said that meat faculty members, along with the deans, have started to work closely with groups in the livestock and meat processing industries of Kansas in order to achieve their goal.

Calvin Drake, professor of animal sciences and industry, a feedlot expert and executive vice president of the Livestock and Meat Industry Council, is "optimistic" about acquiring the money needed for the renovation project.

"BUT I THINK THAT the period of time involved to get the money may be longer than what we had hoped for. Our need is immediate," he stressed. "It appears that the legislative process will take at least two years."

"The meat packing industry is the number two industry in the state of Kansas and it's impossible to serve the state's second largest industry in the condition we're in. We can probably continue to operate for some time without renovation, but in a very limited manner," Drake said.

We need to learn to use more efficiently the inedible parts of the carcass and we don't have the capabilities at this time.

To further complicate matters, the lab must meet standards set by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) for federal meat inspection. During the fall of 1980, the USDA closed the meats lab because it did not meet these standards, Dell Allen, professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

"The USDA shut us down because of structural problems. We had wooden doors and tables that were outlawed a long time ago. Paint on the walls of the slaughtering room was flaking and our smokehouse was a fire trap," Allen said.

REPAIRS COSTING $80,000 were made, but according to Michael Dikeman, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, the University just barely "got us in compliance with inspection requirements that the USDA sets for any federally operated meat facility."

Negotiations continue with veterans

LOS ANGELES— A Veterans Adminstration official changed his mind about returning to Washington and decided to resume negotiations Sunday with Vietnam War veterans staging a sit-in in a VA hospital to press for a meeting with President Reagan to seek better medical care.

VA lawyer Robert Coy said he was returning to Washington because negotiations with the veterans, some on a hunger strike, had broken down. He also said the VA may try to forcibly remove the veterans from the lobby of the Wadsworth VA Hospital.

But Wadsworth administrator Frank Terry said Coy changed his mind because he wanted to "moniter the situation" during a planned rally on the hospital grounds Sunday.

Coy said the VA had agreed to two major demands of the protesters. But he said the veterans had enlarged their terms to include a meeting with Reagan.

One of the hunger strikers said Sunday that the veterans wanted the meeting with the president because they no longer trusted the VA.

Coal miners settle new contract

WASHINGTON— Coal miners were ready to return to work today after a 10-week strike, with a new contract that will increase their wages and benefits by almost 40 percent. But the reopening of some mines was threatened by stalled contract talks for mine construction workers.

Negotiations continued Sunday in Washington between the construction locals of the United Mine Workers union and the Association of Bituminous Contractors.

The construction workers have threatened to picket if they haven't reached agreement by today, and most UMW miners would be reluctant to cross those picket lines, a UMW official said.

The strike officially ended Saturday night when UMW President Sam Church and BCOA President Joseph Brennan signed the agreement following ratification by the rank and file.

The miners accepted the pact by a 2-1 vote to end the strike which began March 27 and was marked by shootings at non-UMW miners and other sporadic violence.

Pope looks strong at surprise address

VATICAN CITY— Pope John Paul II made a surprise address Sunday before an applauding crowd of 20,000 people celebrating Mass in St. Peter's Basilica, near where he was shot three weeks ago. It was his first public address since the shooting.

"I wanted to be with you. It is with great affection for all the faithful that I give the benediction," John Paul said while leaning on the edge of a balcony at the back of the church for support.

His voice sounded tired but stronger than it has been since he was shot May 13 in St. Peter's Square.

Later, John Paul leaned out of the third-floor window of the papal apartments overlooking St. Peter's Square to bless an exuberant crowd of 80,000.

The crowd waved handerchiefs and applauded for several minutes. Some waved red and white Polish flags. One man lifted a banner high above the crowd saying, "Ben Tornato Papa" (Welcome Back Pope).

Great Lakes cleanup may be axed

CHICAGO— Efforts to clean up the Great Lakes, the source of drinking water for 22 million people, will go down the drain if President Reagan's budget-slashers get their way, according to some scientists and environmentalists.

The administration's proposed budget for 1982 would cut off twothirds of the funds now being spent toward rehabilitating the lakes, the world's largest body of fresh water. Once pronounced "dead," some of the lakes have been stirring back to life.

"This means the lakes are going to get dirtier, the fish aren't going to be as healthy, and our efforts to try to plan for sane and rational growth are going to be scrapped," said Larry Kamer, director of programs for the Lake Michigan Federation.

But some federal officials say it would be difficult to predict the impact of the cuts, a reduction from $30 million to $10 million for various projects.

Other lake-watchers say the worst effects would be the curtailment of stocking the lakes with fish and the monitoring of pollutants.

"New toxic substances could get in the lakes and we'd never know about it," said Robert Ragotzkie, director of the University of Wisconsin's Sea Grant Institute, part of a $3.7 million research program scheduled to be cut.

Paper seeks feedback

Today marks the first day of summer school registration—the start of another semester of academic pursuits for both fledgling and weathered students. It also begins another semester of publication for the K-State Collegian.

There is an existing philosophy behind the Collegian. It strives to serve the students and faculty of K-State with accurate and informative articles. Hence, the news it presents will try to reflect the campus as a whole by examining all sides of all

To achieve such objectivity, the Collegian staff must turn to available sources. These sources include both students and faculty. As a newspaper, we depend upon the campus and community for their cooperation and feedback. The readership, in turn, depends upon the staff to present unbiased news coverage.

However the Collegian will not manufacture news out of mere ploys for free publicity by any group, be it student or non-student. All story possibilities are examined on a threefold basis: timeliness; availibility and accuracy of information; and proximity. The staff encourages anyone with story ideas meeting these criteria to contact the Collegian offices.

The Collegian staff also looks to its readers to exercise their freedom of speech in the form of letters to the editor and column material. However, it is also an inherent right of everyone to publicly disagree with ideas that are expressed. The purpose of the editorial page is to provide a channel for the free expression of ideas.

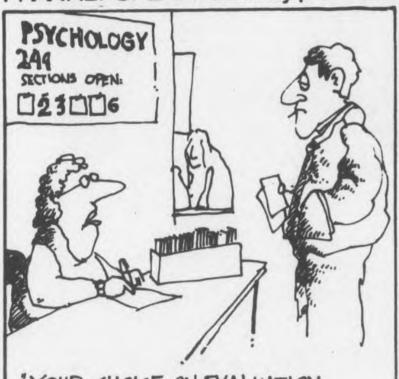

Our editorial policy this semester is to provide a chance for all students, who so request it, to express opinions-within the bounds of good taste and legal guidelines. The staff will continue to accept the responsibility of presenting informed analysis, comment and editorial opinions on public events and

Letters to the editor are edited only to correct obvious errors in spelling and grammar and to meet layout limitations. The staff, however, reserves the right to edit for stylistic reasons and may reject material at its discretion.

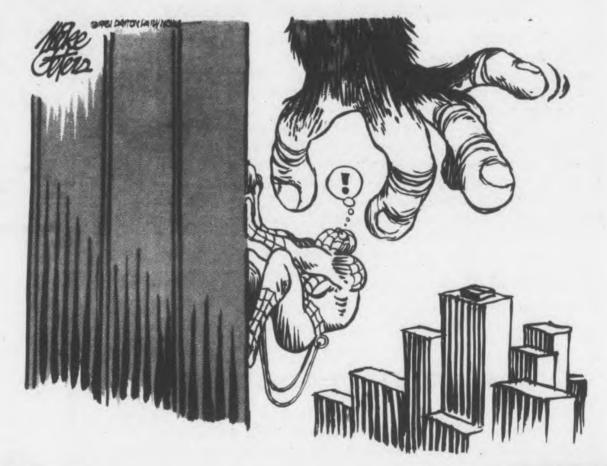

Disagreement with ideas expressed in the Collegian is welcome and often informative. A presentation of differing views helps to prevent the development of narrow minds. The right to present diversified opinions is not to be questioned. It is the purpose of the editorial page.

Words of wisdom for summer survival

Welcome to, or back to, K-State. In the interests of the promotion of as hassle-free a summer as possible, staff members thought we would like to pass along a few hints and bits of trivial information that might make your summer go easier.

First of all, about registration. It's in the Union.

You will probably need more than one check. Although there is a unified bookkeeping system at K-State, some departments like to be paid separately.

If you do not want your name, address, phone number, etc... to be readily available, you must fill out a form available in Admissions and Records. People who get their unlisted phone numbers published in the fall student directory sometimes get very irate about this.

If you list your parents' address as your permanent address, your grades will be sent there. They do not care if you are 50 years old and have been self-supporting since the age of 10.

Registration will take twice as long as you expected it would. On the bright side, it will take twice again as long this fall and it's not as complicated as it looks

That class you really needed just closed while you were reading this.

Lab.

These improvements did not alleviate problems caused by the facility, however. An expansion and remodeling of the facility have been proposed at a cost of $3 to $4 million, Dikeman said. The planned renovations include repairs to the slaughtering floor, the processing room and the meat coolers. More laboratory space is also needed for research projects, according to Dikeman.

Curtis Kastner, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, noted that problems with refrigeration are of particular current concern.

"MEATS RESEARCH IS dependent upon adequate and dependable refrigeration. At some point in time, a meat product must be refrigerated and it severely hampers our research projects without adequate and dependable refrigeration," Kastner said.

Earlier this year, the refrigeration equipment failed and a research project exploring the carcass and eating quality of young bulls was hampered.

"On March 31, we put the carcasses in the cooler and sometime late that night, between ll p.m. and 5 a.m., the refrigeration went off. Even though the refrigeration conditions were not standardized as required for experimental purposes, the product was chilled fast enough to insure product wholesomeness." Kastner said, adding that "some people believed the meat had spoiled-but it didn't."

"We lost research data only-not product. For research purposes, we need to keep our experimental conditions exactly the same from study to study and this includes the rate at which the product is chilled," he

"THE PHYSICAL PLANT has made an effort to keep the refrigeration running, but it needs consistent repairs and maintenance. Refrigeration malfunctions have caused loss of product in the past," Kastner said. "But other improvements and additions are needed to keep our research current and competitive in a state where livestock provides a large portion of Kansas farm income."

Before money can be obtained for the improvements, the lab proposal enters a complicated process within the University's governing heads, the Kansas Board of Regents and ultimately in the Kansas Legislature.

Each year, a list of proposed capital improvements for the campus is submitted to President Duane Acker. Deans from each of K-State's colleges make their requests for project money in this list.

Acker then develops a University priority list which is submitted to the Board of Regents. During June, the board approves what it will request for the University.

KC bats are hot as Royals win 7-1

KANSAS CITY (AP) - Lee May and John Wathan drove in two runs apiece and George Brett paced a nine-hit Kansas City attack with three singles Sunday, lifting the Royals to a 7-1 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Brett had collected three singles before he left the game in the seventh inning when he was hit in the head by the catcher's throw while stealing second. He apparently was just dazed on the play.

The 38-year-old May doubled home two runs during Kansas City's three-run third inning off Milwaukee starter Randy Lerch, Cesar Geronimo opened the inning with a fly ball triple that left fielder Mark Brouhard misjudged, and scored on Willie Wilson's RBI ground out. Brett singled and Amos Otis walked, then May brought both home with his double down the left field line to make it 4-1.

The Brewers got their only run in the first on successive one-out singles by Robin Yount, Cecil Cooper and Gorman Thomas. Kansas City tied it in the bottom of the inning when Brett singled home Wilson, who had walked and stolen second.

The Royals added a run in the sixth on Wathan's run-scoring ground out, and two more runs in the eighth on a walk to Willie Aikens, Wathan's triple and Geronimo's sacrifice fly.

Left-hander Paul Splittorff, 3-4, scattered eight hits over 51-3 innings to win his third straight game. Renie Martin pitched the final 32-3 innings to collect his second save.

THE GOVERNOR REVIEWS and analyzes the board's request and forwards his recommendations to the legislature. The legislature evaluates the list and will approve or reject the building or renovation projects. Projects proposed for K-State must compete with those submitted by other universities in the state.

If approved, money for the improvements and projects proposed by Acker in April of 1981 become available to the University for fiscal year 1982-83.

The meats lab renovation is currently second on the priority list within the College of Agriculture, according to Dunbar. Phase Two of the plant science building currently tops the list. Dunbar said that Phase Two would provide an addition to the plant science building currently under construction, along with additional greenhouses.

"WHEN THEY APPROVED the plant science building, they requested the project in two parts-phase one and two. That was done several years ago and that established Plant Science Phase Two as our first priority," Dunbar said.

"In recent years, the meats facility in Weber Hall has become obsolete and student enrollment has increased. Therefore, Weber needs remodeling. Since this developed later, we established it as our next prioriy," Dunbar said

The meats lab now ranks 11th on the University priority list, and fourth on the major capital improvements list.

HE NOTED THAT the recently-elected Kansas Legislature did not approve any money for buildings this year.

"Although the future of the meats' lab is in the hands of the Board of Regents, the governor and the legislature, it's really in the hands of the people of Kansas," he said.

"If they want to tell the governor, the regents and the legislature that they want it-then they'll probably get it because all of those three groups work for the people of Kansas."

K-State art professor completes 'landmark' mural for church

Sunday marked more than the formal completion of a year-long art project by Oscar Larmer, K-State art professor—for the congregation of the First United Methodist Church of Manhattan, it represented the dedication of a "landmark."

See related pictures, p. 7

Nearly two years ago, Larmer, a church member, accepted the challenge of designing a wall in the south stairwell of the church's Education Building at 121 N. 6th.

The "challenge" was to design an interesting wall that "could be seen from the first floor, outside the building and from the second floor" of the education center.

That challenge was met with the creation of a 8-by-10'3" mural depicting selected events from both the Old and New Testaments in the Bible.

In an impressive display of time and talent, Larmer made six shaped panels that fit together to form four surfaces for the mural. The panels were painted with a Liquitex acrylic on Belgian linen stretched over plywood shaped to fit the artists puzzle-like creation.

The final effect is a glowing rainbow of Christian heritage.

The center panel shows an open Bible in front of the sacraments of Holy Communion. These are reflected in a large Chalice. The remaining panels "read" upward starting from the lower left corner of the wall.

Bible stories including: the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden; the loading of animals on Noah's Ark; and God's appearance in a burning bush are captured in hues of deep blues and earthy greens. The Ten Commandments, the worship of the "Golden Calf," and the transformation of Lot's wife into a pillar of salt are shown in vivid red, orange and maroon shades.

Stories from the New Testament are represented by events in Christ's life—his birth, ministry and crucifiction are depicted on the right side of the mural in hues of violet and greens.

The rainbow effect of the mural is completed with the son of God representing "the sun" in a glowing display of gold and yellow.

Since the artist teaches classes during the week and has his own paintings exhibited in showings across the country, Larmer was able to work on the project only "on weekends, Christmas breaks and holidays," he said.

However the year-long endeavor was a labor of love for Larmer.

"Even though I've worked on it a long time it's still exciting. Every time you paint you leave a little bit of yourself for posterity's sake, but my concern was that it (the mural) communicates the right message and all the colors and shapes blend in together," he said.

The artwork is the first of this type for the 55-year-old church, Charlotte Scott, a church spokesman, said. The mural was sponsored by funds from families who chose to donate a memorial gift to the church, she said

Lytle places third, Bramlage sixth in NCAA competition

Doug Lytle took third place in the pole vault and Joe Bramlage placed sixth in the javelin during the final round of the NCAA track and field meet Saturday at Baton Lytle, freshman in construction science at K-State achieved third when he cleared 17-4 1/2. He lost a second place finish to UCLA's Tim Curran with two failing attempts at 17-1/4. Curran had only one miss at that height. The event was won by David Volz of Indiana with a vault of 17-8 1/4.

"My vaulting hasn't been too good technically," Lytle was quoted as saying in a United Press International story. The freshman, who placed fourth in the NCAA indoor meet said, "I feel fortunate to have placed third. I plan to spend a long summer of training hard in Manhattan and getting ready for next year."

Bramlage, senior in construction science and a native of Marysville, closed out his career at K-State with a sixth place finish in the javelin with a throw of 251-2.

His best throw came on his first effort Saturday. He later hurt his arm on his fourth throw and could not improve.

"I threw in the sixth round despite the injury because I figured this would be my last shot," he was quoted as saying in the UPI story. "Overall I've had a very successful career at KSU and I'm very happy about it all." The javelin event was won by Mike Juskus of Glassboro State with throw Texas-El Paso won the tournament for the third straight time, followed by Southern Methodist Universiy in second and Tennessee placing third.

Boy faces manslaughter charge in drowning of 8-year-old friend

MIAMI (AP)—Eight-year old Ricardo Anderson told his playmates he couldn't swim and begged them not to throw him in the water. Police say he managed to get out of the canal twice after being pushed in, but the third push was harder and Ricardo drowned.

A 9-year-old classmate has been charged with manslaughter.

Five boys were in the Andersons' back yard when Ricardo drowned Friday, Dade County homicide detective Rafael Nazario said. "Ricky would say, 'I can't swim. Don't throw me in," he said.

"When he didn't come up, the young boy threw rocks at him hoping to get him up," Nazario said.

North Glade Elementary School principal Herbert Day described the child in custody as "a jolly little boy. "I don't ever know of him being vicious."

Henry and Lena Anderson, Ricardo's parents, said they have lived along the murky canal in northwest Miami for four years and that Ricardo had been warned never to play in the back yard. Anderson said he believes the other boys persuaded his son to play near the canal.

Israelis destroy nuclear reactor in bombing raid

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP)—Israeli warplanes streaking 600 miles into hostile territory destroyed an almost-completed Iraqi nuclear reactor outside Baghdad, a facility Israel claimed would have made atomic bombs for use against the

The attack, made Sunday but not disclosed until Monday, was one of Israel's most stunning military blows in years.

The Israeli government said in announcing the raid that the French-built reactor posed a "mortal danger to the people of Israel." U.S. sources said the facility might have been operational within two weeks.

The Iraqi leadership, apparently thrown off balance, waited until after the Israeli announcement Monday to acknowledge the raid, which it said was carried out by nine

It vowed that Iraqi nuclear technology would recover and accused the "Zionist enemy" of collusion with Iran in its border war with Iraq.

At Iraq's request, the Arab League scheduled an emergency meeting to discuss what League Secretary-General Chedli Klibi called the "arrogant challenge" from Israel. He said the meeting would take place in Baghdad in the next three days.

In New York, Iraq asked for a prompt meeting of the 15member U.N. Security Council. A message to the United Nations from Iraqi Foreign Minister Saadoun Hammadi said the air raid had "far-reaching consequences for international peace and security."

The startling Israeli operation was condemned in Washington, as well as in Arab and other Western capitals. U.S. officials said the Israelis used American-built jets in County charges owner of Stereo Factory

Attorney's office alleges three violations in ads

By DAVE COOK

Collegian Reporter Darrell Lister, owner of the Stereo Factory, has been named the defendent in a civil suit involving three violations of the Kansas Consumer Protection Act (KCPA) following an investigation by the Riley County Attorney's

The alleged violations stem from a two-page advertisment which ran in the Collegian April 29, and a one-page advertisment with identical information which appeared in The Manhattan Mercury May 1.

The company's "Expo '81" advertisments presented manufacturers' list prices for many items that were higher than the actual list prices.

Under the deceptive acts and practices section of the KCPA, a person can not make "false or misleading representations, knowingly or with reason to know, of fact concerning the reason for, existence of or amounts of price reductions..."

THE PRESENTATION of the manufacturers' list prices were used in connection with the sale prices and may have communicated an unrealistic savings to consumers. There were many uses of incorrect manufacturers' list prices in the advertisments.

Counts one and two of the petition, filed May 7 by the State of Kansas, allege that the advertisments included "certain material misrepresentations of including false and misleading representations of fact concerning the manufacturer's list price." The petition lists 36 such misrepresentatons.

The third count alleges that the advertisement "offered for sale, certain property at a price in excess of the manufacturer's actual list price" and represented those items as being "on sale" under "drastic price reductions."

THREE MISREPRESEN-TATIONS where the sale price actually exceeded the manufacturers' list price were included in the petition. They were:

-A Phase Linear 8000 Turntable with an advertised manufacturer's list price of $1000 and a sale price of $850. The actual manufacturer's list price was $649.

-A Hitachi SR-5010 amplifier with an advertised manufacturer's list prict of $349.95 and a sale price of $249.95. The actual manufacturer's list price was $239.95.

-A Hitachi DE-25 tape deck with an advertised manufacturer's list price of $279 and a sale price of $199.95. The actual manufacturer's list price was $179.95.

The petition asks that Lister be ordered to pay $2,000 each time the advertisment ran, or that he disclose the names and addresses of everyone who purchased items at the sale. It also requests that Lister be ordered to refund the purchase price, with interest, to any consumer who wishes to cancel the transaction and to refund the remaining consumers the difference between the advertised manufacturers' list price and the actual manufacturers' list that Lister be ordered to pay a $2,000 civil penalty for the third count-the use of sale prices in excess of the actual manufacturers' list price.

The petition also seeks restitution from Lister for the cost of the investigation conducted by the Riley County Attorney's office.

"We're in the discovery stage right now," Pat Caffey, assistant Riley County Attorney, said. "We sent them a request for admissions, admitting the actual list prices. If they fail to do that we will have to prove it (the actual list prices)."

Lister has 30 days to comply with the request, he said.

"We would like to ask anyone who has made purchases of those items (appearing with inaccurate manufacturer's list prices) to write our office," Caffey said.

When contacted about the allegations, Lister had no com-second of two chemical explosions occurring in Willard Hall last

The explosions took place in the Quantitative Analysis Laboratory on the first floor.

They were apparently caused by a leaking can of sodium metal, a highly unstable substance which reacts explosively when exposed to water, according to Frank Duncan, K-State fire chief.

Herbert Moser, professor of Scott Tomlinson, a campus treated and released. The two was in the area at the time of the first explosion.

> "I heard a hissing sound and saw an orange glow through the vents," Tomlinson said.

> Moser was apparently attempting to contain the substance with the assistance of two firemen from the K-State Fire Department when the second explosion occurred. Moser was taken to St. Mary Hospital, where he was chemistry, was injured in the custodian in the building, said he firemen, Mike Bodelson, junior in architecture, and Ken Klamm, senior in electrical engineering, were treated at Lafene, and released.

There was no damage to the building, according to Duncan.

"The explosions took place in a hood designed to contain minor incidents of this type," he said.

The building was cleared and the metallic sodium was disposed of, providing fireworks for onlookers.

the raid, in possible violation of the terms under which they were sold to Israel.

"The United States government condemns the reported Israeli air strike on the Iraq nuclear facility, the unprecedented character of which cannot but seriously add to the already tense situation in the area," State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said in Washington.

Moreover, he said, the United States disagrees with Israel's claim that the reactor posed a potential security threat. Fischer noted that Iraq is a signatory to the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty and has undertaken to accept the safeguard standards of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin went on nationwide radio Monday night and declared, "We are not afraid of any reaction by the world.... We had to act to safeguard the safety and wellbeing of the Israeli people and its homeland."

He said he was sending President Reagan a written explanation.

U.S. intelligence sources in Washington confirmed the planes demolished the 75-megawatt, $275-million Osirak reactor, on the banks of the Tigris River 12 miles east of the Iraqi capital.

The Israeli government announcement said none of the 100 to 150 foreign specialists working on the project were injured. It said the raid was planned for a Sunday because the foreigners would not be working at the

The raid came as Mideast tensions were already high because of Israel's objections to the presence of Syrian anti-aircraft missiles in Lebanon. The attack also coincided with what are reported to be Iraqi preparations for a spring offensive against Iran in the 8-month-old border war between those two countries.

Israel had long hinted it would act against the French assisted Iraqi nuclear program.

Begin claimed French assessments that the reactor would be unable to make bombs were "not reliable at all."

"Our information was that the reactor was designed to build nuclear bombs to drop on the state of Israel," he said.

This may not have happened immediately, Begin said, "but a nation doesn't live on borrowed time of three-four years."

The earlier Israeli statement announcing the attack accused Iraq of aiming to produce bombs of "Hiroshima size" and said, "Thus a mortal danger to the people of Israel arose."

The Iraqis said the planes struck at 6:37 p.m. Sunday.

"I consider an intimate knowledge of the Bible an indispensable quality of a well-educated man."

El Salvador conspiracy challenged

WASHINGTON— A month after taking office, the Reagan administration unveiled a trove of captured documents as purported proof that the Soviet Union, Cuba and other Communist countries had conspired to send 800 tons of arms and other equipment to leftist insurgents in El Salvador.

The allegation of complicity in the struggle for control of the tiny Central American country is now under challenge, with publication in Monday's Wall Street Journal of an article entitled "Tarnished Report?"

The article suggests the administration's so-called "White Paper" contained mistakes and guesswork. A State Department policy planner who was sent from Mexico City to El Salvador to analyze the captured documents, was quoted in the Journal as saying part of the report may be "misleading" and "over-embellished."

"I say throw the white paper away. Ignore it," James Cheek, who was deputy assistant secretary of state for Latin America, said. "The fact remains all those weapons are there. You tell me how they got them?"

Cheek, who is being reassigned, said the origin of many of the documents was never clear. He said the only way they could be completely authenticated was if the guerrillas themselves stepped forward and claimed authorship.

Court provides new right for women

WASHINGTON— A divided Supreme Court provided women with a powerful new right Monday to sue employers who allegedly pay them less because of sexual bias.

By a 5-4 vote, the court ruled that women in jobs held primarily by women can sue on charges that they are being discriminated against in comparison to jobs held primarily by men.

Thus, for the first time the Supreme Court said women can file and win wage-discrimination lawsuits without proving that they perform the same jobs as men who get paid more.

Led by Justice William Brennan, the court's oldest and most liberal member, the majority ruled that a federal civil rights law allows women to file such suits.

The decision states, in essence, that women cannot be paid lower wages simply because they are in jobs held primarily by women. Such a policy would violate that portion of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 outlawing on-the-job sex bias, Brennan indicated.

The decision specifically provided a victory for former matrons at the Washington County Jail in Hillsboro, Ore., who said they were paid about 35 percent less than male guards at the jail.

Monday's decision sent the Oregon lawsuit back to a federal trial court for further proceedings.

Atlanta suspect not held for slayings

ATLANTA— Authorities lack sufficient evidence to arrest a man who says the FBI called him a suspect in some of the slayings of 28 young blacks, a prosecutor said Monday. But he said police will not be rushed by public pressure into either clearing or arresting him.

"We're not prepared to make any arrests at this time," Fulton County District Attorney Lewis Slaton said as he left a closed-door meeting with top police officials investigating the killings.

He said he has made no move to schedule any grand jury sessions in connection with the slayings.

Police officers and FBI agents maintained a stakeout Monday at the northwest Atlanta home of the 23-year-old free-lance photographer who has been the focus of publicity since he was questioned by authorities for nearly 12 hours last week in connection with the killings.

In another development, the mother of one of the victims said FBI agents showed her several pictures last week and that one showed a man who had talked to her son not long before his disappearance and death.

Helen Pue, mother of 15-year-old Terry, said she had seen the man driving a green station wagon, giving candied apples to children and hanging around a rapid transit station on Atlanta's west side.

"I saw Terry talking to him. I asked what he said, but Terry said he just was talking," she said. "The only thing he told me was that the man wanted him to work for him."

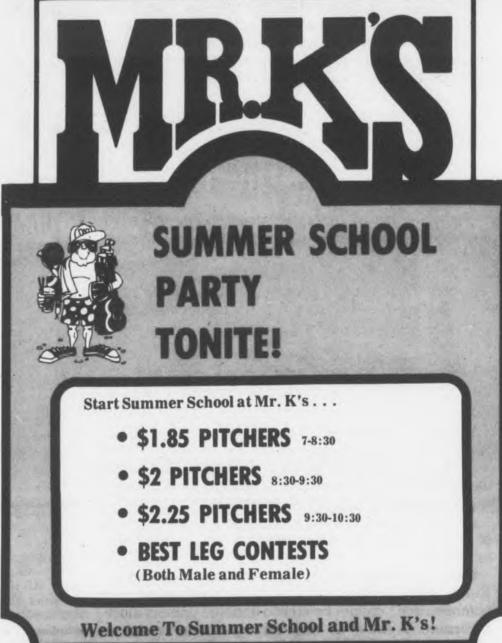

Sources have said in recent days that a preliminary analysis of fibers taken from the man's home showed "promising" matchups with fibers found on some victims' bodies.

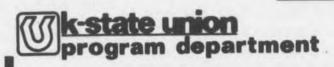

The young black man was questioned by police last Wednesday and Thursday. Atlanta Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said the man was freed because of insufficient evidence, but has declined to officially rule him out as a suspect.

Weather

Today's partly cloudy skies may offer a bit of relief after Monday's sizzling temperatures. However highs are still expected to reach into the low 90s with a 30 percent chance of rain.

Energy wise

Damn, it was hot yesterday.

With the heat comes the use of air conditioning. With the use of air conditioning comes increased utility bills. With increased utility bills comes a decrease in appropriations from the Legislature. With the decrease in appropriations comes headaches for administrators with budgets to stay within. With administrative headaches come memos.

To avoid the inevitable memos—as much as possible—buildings should be cooled only to temperatures necessary to keep most people reasonably comfortable. With nights as relatively cool as they are, most air conditioning can be turned off during non-business hours.

Presidential orders requiring minimum temperature settings at or near 78 degrees Fahrenheit have been lifted. Our responsibility to decrease energy consumption has not. Climate modification is the largest classification of energy use within buildings.

Moderate use of energy air conditioning will save energy. Decreasing the number of memos will save trees.

Supporting dairy

President Reagan is again calling for a decrease in dairy price support increases.

In this period of rapid inflation, a decrease in an increase essentially means a decrease. But why support the price of dairy products at all?

All agree inflation must be curbed. Will the creation of instability in the dairy industry really help stop inflation?

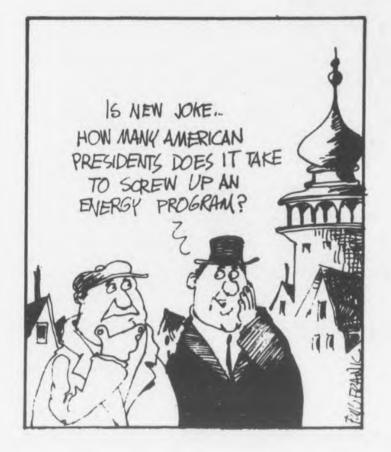

Dairy products are not just another commodity. Raw milk (milk that is not pasteurized or homogenized) cannot be stored until the price is more favorable. It takes at least three years for a cow to reach peak production capacity—hardly the same as planning next year's crops.

Dairy farmers further argue that declines in wholesale milk prices will result in increased herd sizes as farmers increase production in order to meet fixed costs. Larger herds mean more milk. A vicious cycle is created.

The milk distribution system in the U.S. is amazing. Some of the milk produced in northern Kansas is shipped as far as central Texas before being sold to consumers. Planning and executing such a distribution system requires stability in the industry.

Cutting dairy price supports would seem to be pound-foolish.

A hacker whacking

Pasture pool—'scuse me, "golf''—seems like such a simple game. All it involves is whacking an inch-and-a-half dimpled white ball down a mowed pasture to an isolated, manicured lawn. The ball is then gently tapped toward a cup inset in the lawn. The goal of all this whacking and tapping is to drop the ball into the cup with long, thin-shafted clubs.

Simple? I wish.

This spring was my first attempt at the game, despite growing up as a golf-orphan because my mother played every chance she could just to get away from the kids.

It didn't seem difficult. Armed with a hand-me-down set of starter clubs, I set out to master this sport.

It appeared even easier when my partner, an avid golfer, stepped up to the starting mound—'scuse me, "tee box"—set his club—'scuse me, "driver"—looked at the ball—'scuse me, "addressed the ball"—swung and slammed the dimpled sphere 150 yards down the mowed pasture—'scuse me, "fairway."

SEEMED SIMPLE ENOUGH. With a rather battered driver, I stepped up to the ball perched ontop a stick—'scuse me again, "tee''—set my driver to one side of the ball and said, "now go for it my dimpled friend." I swung with a mighty heave to connect the driver with the ball.

I looked down the fairway to see the effort of my swing. No ball. Bringing my eyes back to the tee box, I saw my ball rolling about 20 yards away. I figured it would take me about five hits—'scuse me, "strokes"—to make the 175 yards to the manicured lawn—'scuse me, "green."

I took aim again and fired. My driver—'scuse me, "wood"—whoosed over the ball.

Disappointed, but not discouraged, I attempted to convince the ball to take a trip down the fairway. This time, however, the ball found the tall-grass prairie—'scuse me, "rough"—that lined the fairway. The ball was declared lost.

Dropping another ball, I hacked and putted the ball to the green. My spirits rose. All I had to do now was show that ball the direction of the cup and everything would drop into place.

NO SUCH LUCK. My first putt would have made King Kong proud. The second went halfway, and the third rimmed the edge of the cup.

I took an eleven on the number one hole and still had 17 holes to go. After eighteen holes, I had another ball in a lake, hit a tree, landed in a conveniently placed sandbox—'scuse me, 'sandtrap'—drove a few grass clumps—'scuse me, 'divots'—and threw my putter off the tenth green.

But I did whack some balls solidly down the fairway, tapped in a few difficult putts and improved the number of strokes on the second nine holes—'scuse me—"the back nine."

So I'm hooked. I have to graduate from hacker to duffer and then reach coveted title of "golfer."

Research setback:

Refrigeration failure alters Ralgro data on meat quality

Editor's Note: This is the second piece in a two-part series examining the repercussive effects of structural problems encountered in the Weber Hall meats lab.

By NANCY KRAUS Staff Writer

Much of the nation's livestock industry is showing an interest in using an organic growth stimulant on bulls—instead of steers—to produce an improved meat quality. The K-State College of Agriculture is no exception.

However, when refrigeration equipment failed at the college's Weber Hall meat laboratory last spring, a research project addressing this issue was hampered—a project that could have a beneficial impact on the currently lagging beef industry, according to a K-State professor.

When the refrigeration unit suffered a power failure, the controlled experiment conditions were altered. Curtis Kastner, associate professor of animal science and industry, said it is difficult to place an exact value on the ruined research data. The failure caused the refrigeration unit to reach a temperature above 70 degrees—30 degrees higher than normal.

"THE PLANNING began about two years ago and involved the nutrition people, the reproduction people and the meats people. Plus we had the cooperation of a commercial producer. We had the complete biological and production records of those bulls," Melvin Hunt, associate professor of animal science and industry, said.

Bulls were selected because of the leanness of their meat, Hunt said.

"There is a built-in hormonal factory in bulls that tends to produce less fat," he said.

"Bulls characteristically have a faster growth rate and produce leaner carcasses—both of which are extremely important in livestock production. Because bulls' feed efficiency is better than that of steers or heifers, it ultimately means that it may cost less to produce beef," Hunt said.

In the research experiments, some of the bulls were implanted with Ralgro, an organic growth stimulant, and some were not. When the bulls reached a weight of about 1,000 pounds they were slaughtered.

CALVIN DRAKE, professor of animal science and industry specializing in feedlots, said Ralgro was important in the feeding trial because it is the only implant available to cattlemen that is not in the form of a hormone.

"Ralgro is an anabolic, or growth agent, made from corn mold," Drake said. "It is not a hormone—yet we get an increase in daily gain and feed efficiency. These are two important factors in determining whether a cattleman makes a profit or incurs a loss."

From the cattle feeding standpoint, average returns on a monthly basis have fallen short of full production costs every month but three since July, 1979, according to Mike Sands, livestock marketing extension economist. Sands added that feed costs have averaged $1 higher per bushel this year compared to last year.

The results of the bull feeding research at K-State could have a positive effect on a currently depressed beef industry, Drake said.

"The major objective of the research was to determine implanting effects of the Ralgro on bull performance and carcass characteristics. Tenderness was a major criteria to be studied," Hunt said.

Because of the exposure to high temperatures, Kastner said there was no way to determine if the stimulant affected tenderness.

THE STUDY of carcass characteristics is usually done on conventionally chilled carcasses. When the refrigeration system failed, research data on color and marbeling (amount of fat in the meat) was lost, but the meat did not show any signs of spoilage, according to Kastner.

Another vital part of the study which was lost was in Kastner's area of expertise—electrical stimulation and hot boning the carcasses.

The hot boning process involves cutting meat from bones immediately after an animal is slaughtered, Kastner said.

"Because you remove excess fat and bone before chilling, you don't have to use as much space or energy," Kastner said.

Kastner estimated it would be about six months before all the data on the bull experiment could be compiled and summarized. After the research data is compiled it will be distributed within the livestock industry. Cattlemen and farmers may then decide whether or not to incorporate Ralgro in their bull feeding programs.

Even though much data from one group of the bulls was lost, the remaining information will be incoporated into the report. Because of the many parties involved with the project, along with the time and effort put into the planning and instigation of the trial, it is unlikely that the research could be repeated for several years

Campus building remains nameless

By SUZANNE CRUMRINE Staff Writer

Although the internal construction and occupation of the $6.5 million, native stone general classroom and office building is essentially finished, a final step remains in the completion of the campus structure.

It has not been formally named.

The new building, located on the northeast corner of Mid-Campus Drive and Lovers Lane, is now under the awkward label of "the general classroom and offices building." However it is not likely to be known by a shorter name in the near future.

"The president (University President Duane Acker) is not in a hurry to name the building," University Provost Owen Koeppe said. "It (the building's title) will probably stay that way for awhile."

Vince Cool, director of University facilities planning, said he did not know of any proposed names for the building so far. If there are any under consideration they are not available for public knowledge yet, he said.

THE PROCEDURE to name any unnamed campus building begins with the selection of a committee. That committee recommends possible titles to Acker, Cool said. Acker then presents his recommendation for a building name to the Kansas Board of Regents, he added. The board ultimately casts final approval of the building name.

Gene Cross, vice president for university facilities, was the chairman of a committee that recently established this procedure for naming campus buildings.

"At this time there has been no action of any kind to name the classroom-office building," Cross said.

After two years of construction, the building's 106,000 square feet of new space was ready for use in late March.

Cross said completion of the building was originally slated for Jan. 10, 1981, but that several factors delayed its opening.

"THERE WERE SOME problems with one of the contractors as far as finances," Cool said. "There was a time when one of the contractors had no workers on the job."

However, Cool said the delay presented few problems for the University.

"We weren't all that interested in being moved into it (the new building) in January," he said.

The activity of beginning a new semester would have only been compounded by the opening of the new building, according to Cool. He said the administration's prime objective was to have the building ready for use in time for the 1981 summer session.

"There was absolutely no way that move could be done between semester's (in could be done between semester's (in January)," Cool said. "The object was to get the faculty and department heads moved in (during) spring semester so the faculty could be ready by summer school."

The building provides office space for the Departments of Education and Psychology. The use of general classrooms in the building will be "based on need," according to Cool.

Today marks end of open auditions for K-State summer play

Today is the final day to try out for the summer production of "On Golden Pond." Auditions for the Speech Department's play begin at 7 p.m. in the Purple Masque Theatre.

The cast will consist of from three to six men, two women and one teenaged boy. Volunteers will be needed to assist the stage crew.

This will be the first time in several years that a play has been performed at K-State during the summer. For the production, casting will be open to the general public.

Those interested in trying out or helping should contact Kneisley at the speech department. Copies of the script may be checked out in East Stadium 110. Drama participation credit may be obtained for acting and technical work on the production. For class credit, Lewis Shelton in the speech department should be contacted.

Performances of "On Golden Pond," by Ernest Thompson, will be July 10, 11, 17, 18, 19, 24 and 25 in the Purple Masque Theatre. "There is no question that education and psychology (classes) would have first priority, but the classrooms are not automatically assigned to these departments," he said.

PROXIMITY TO THE new building is also considered in allocation of classrooms space, Cool said. For example, an overflow class in Justin Hall would have a better chance of getting the new classroom space than an overflow class in Durland Hall, he said.

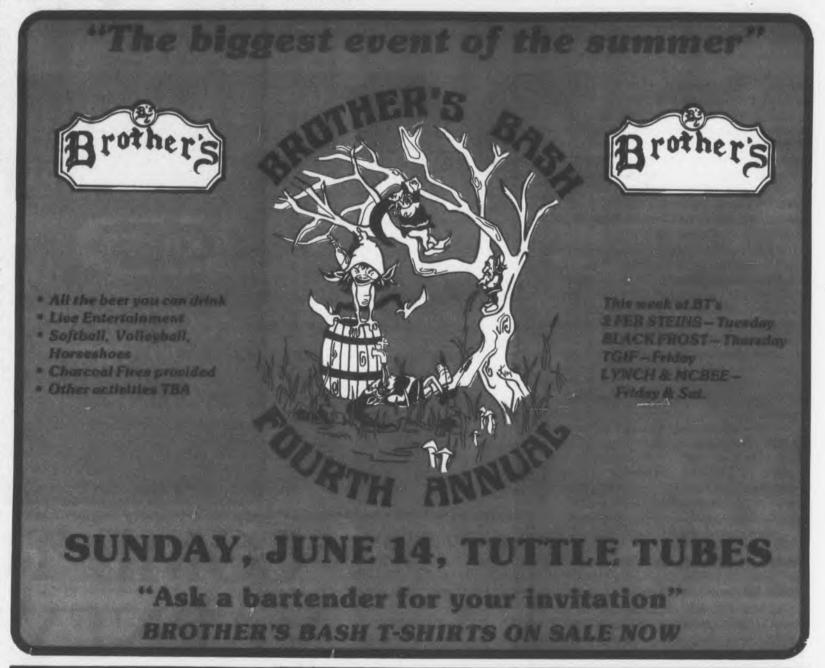

Cool said two rooms were designated for the College of Architecture and Design and two for the Art Department. These rooms are specially equipped for drawing studios.

Cool said some changes of allocation of office space were necessary before occupation, since the original allotment of space was considered nearly five years ago.

"These are done routinely just to bring plans up to date and adjust for requirements," he said. "By the time the building was done there were naturally some changes." Lover's Lane, the street running south of the classrooms building between the University President's home and Justin Hall, will remain closed until all construction equipment is removed. Cool said he had no estimate of how long the road would remain closed. Some equipment remains on the grounds for completion of the building's exterior.

"We will probably not do so (open the street) until the general contractor has moved his sheds and is completely off the job," Cool said.

Hazardous disposal plans raise concern

State denies plea for Wichita waste plant

TOPEKA (AP)-Based on results of a geological study, a permit for an 80-acre expansion of the only hazardous waste disposal operation in Kansas will not be granted "at this time," two top state officials said Monday.

Attorney General Robert Stephan and Secretary of Health and Environment Joseph Harkins made the announcement during a news conference in Wichita, where they outlined the results of a study by the asking the court to dismiss the legal action. Kansas Geological Survey (KGS). The entire report, which is still being analyzed, will be released publicly before next Monday, the two said.

Meanwhile, a Shawnee County District Court judge in Topeka took under advisement a request by the waste facility operator to order issuance of the permit. In the same case, the attorney general is

After listening to oral arguments for more than an hour, District Judge William Carpenter said he would issue a decision "as soon as due consideration can be given to these matters."

Stephan and Harkins, in their news conference, noted there would be further testing of the geology of both the proposed expansion area and the adjoining current 80acre dump near the tiny south-central Kansas community of Furley.

"We regret that the KGS study is not as conclusive as we had hoped. But as a result of the report, the approval of the Secretary of Health and Environment will continue to be withheld from any planned expansion of the site," the two said in a joint statement released in Topeka.

Findings by the Geological Survey contradicted some reports made earlier by consultants hired by the site's operators. Particularly, the state survey indicated that levels of underground water in aquifers might be too high and that the soil for proposed landfill trenches is of a higher permeability than had been earlier reported.

Those two conditions could increase the chance that hazardous wastes, buried in trenches or stored in ponds and lagoons, might seep through the soil into groundwater supplies.

But Stephan and Harkins emphasized that the study found no contaminants in groundwater sampled from the area, and said there were "no immediate health hazards" from the existing site.

Because of a need for more information. the two officials said independent consultants are to be hired immediately to perform additional soil studies and measurements of underground water at both the expansion and existing sites.

"While, as we have stated, the KGS report suggests no immediate health hazard, it does raise questions which concern us as to the aquifer level and permeability of the soil at the current adjacent site," their College to gain assistant dean

Duitsman returns to K-State

After a leave of absence, Kansas Secretary of Agriculture W.W. "Bill" Duitsman will return to the faculty of K-State effective Feb. 1, 1982.

Duitsman will assume a position in the College of Agriculture as assistant to John Dunbar, dean of agriculture and director of the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station, according to a university news release. Dunbar assumed his duties effective Jan. 1, 1981 after a reorganization of the College of Agriculture by President Duane Acker.

As assistant to the dean, Duitsman will work closely with Dunbar, associate deans and department heads within the College of Agriculture. He will try to develop and maintain strong working relationships with Kansas agribusiness leaders, with interest groups such as Farm Bureau, and with Kansas legislators, according to the release.

During his tenure as State Secretary of Agriculture, Duitsman was on official leave of absence from K-State. Prior to serving as Secretary of Agriculture, Duitsman had been head of the Fort Hays State Experiment Station—which is a branch of K-State's College of Agriculture. He held that position for 22 years before leaving to become Kansas Secretary of Agriculture in 1976.

"WHEN MR. DUITSMAN was invited to accept the position of Secretary of Agriculture, we at K-State encouraged him because of the excellent leadership contributions he could make to state government. We are pleased that he now will be returning to Kansas State University. His knowledge and understanding of the problems of Kansas agriculture will greatly assist Kansas State University as it works to serve Kansas farmers, ranchers and the people of Kansas," Acker said in his issued remarks.

When Duitsman's acceptance of the position was announced, it came as a surprise to at least two administrators in the College of Agriculture. Assistant Dean of Agriculture Larry Erpelding and Associate Dean of Agriculture David Mugler said they had no idea of Duitsman's plans to return to K-State until after the issuance of a university press release.

"It will be a pleasure to have Bill Duitsman on the administrative team in agriculture at K-State. I have enjoyed working closely with him while he was Secretary of Agriculture. Now I welcome him back to our administrative team," Dunbar said in a university release.

DUITSMAN WAS BORN and reared on a farm near Linn in Washington County. He graduated from K-State with a bachelor's degree in agricultural economics in 1940. After graduation, he played two years of professional baseball with the Cleveland Indian organization.

Later he returned to Kansas to assume a position as county extension agent in Osage County. He left this position to serve in the United States Army in 1942 where he served as a captain during World War II, according to university sources. After being discharged from the military service in 1946, Duitsman became extension director in Brown County where he established the first active county soil testing laboratory in the state.

As part of a long range campus traffic circulation plan, a landscape island will be constructed on the west end of Vattier Drive, northwest of the Union. It will consist of a mound of earth covered with small plants and shrubs accented by wood timbers. The project will act as a barrier, closing the street to drive through auto traffic and is designed to enhance the surrounding scenery, Grounds Superintendent Tom Shackleford said.

Also planned for completion this summer is the resurfacing of tennis courts located in the Washburn Recreation Complex.

The natural area will include: a courts should be playable soon after Thursday. The courts were previously all cement, but are being resurfaced with a rubberlike material that offers better traction and playability.

No plans have been madé concerning repairs to campus streets, according to Cross. This is because there were no repair funds allocated by the state. Cross said funds from the state traffic and parking departments cannot be used to repair the streets, by law. Over $500,000 was requested for roads, sidewalk and drive repair, Cross said, but nothing was allocated to the University.

Additional summer projects include: the resurfacing of sixteen parking lots located throughout the campus; installation of additional bicycle racks; and installation of new walkways east of the Washburn Recreation Complex and near

For 70 minutes, the seven justices heard oral arguments in the lawsuit filed by Stephan which contends Carlin's veto of a school finance section of the final appropriations bill passed by the 1981 Legislature was unconstitutional.

The case represents one of the first court tests of a governor's veto power authorized under the Kansas Constitution, and could exert a strong influence on how lawmakers conduct their business in the future. "It is a case with substantial lasting impact on the legislative process," proclaimed John Martin, a special counsel for Carlin.

The case also marked the second time in the history of the Supreme Court that television and still camera were permitted into the courtroom to cover proceedings.

THE HIGH COURT took the case under advisement, and will issue a decision later. In most instances, court opinions are not handed down for at least several weeks after the hearing date.

A standing-room-only crowd of about 150 packed into the eggshaped courtroom, a rare occurrence for a Supreme Court proceeding but a reflection of the signficance of the case. Notably absent were both Carlin and Stephan, although numerous members of their staffs were in attendance.

W. Robert Alderson, first deputy attorney general, argued that the veto was an improper use of the governor's power to strike out individual sections or "line items of appropriation" in a money measure.

SAYING THE COURT should confine its review only to the matter of the veto, he asked the justices to reverse the governor's action and reinstate the vetoed section of the bill which allocated no money but set limits on how much school districts could increase their budgets in the 1982.

Martin, however, urged the court to look beyond the issue of the governor's veto power. He said the vetoed section was not an item of appropriation and therefore violated the constitution prohibition against having two subjects in the same bill.

"It is unconstitutional. It is independent substantive legislation that has no business in an appropriations bill," Martin

The Kansas Constitution was amended in 1974 to exempt appropriation bills from the two subject ban. But Martin said the change meant only that the Legislature can appropriate money for more than one subject in the same bill.

IT DOES NOT MEAN, he said, that lawmakers can write all types of unrelated general legislation into money measures to protect them from a veto.

"This bill, in this case, is an example of logrolling," Martin said. "It is bad politics, and bad legislation. It has been universally condemned."

He argued that Stephan's request to overturn the veto was moot because the bill was unconstitutional at the time Carlin made the veto May 18.

Alderson, however, maintained that questions about the bill's contitutionality were irrelevant.

"The question is does the governor of the state of Kansas have the constitutional authority to disapprove a portion of a bill which does not constitute an item of appropriation of money from the state treasury," he said.

Noting that the vetoed section appropriated no money, Alderson said, "The govenor's veto was an exercise of unlawful power."

In addition, he argued that Carlin had twice before improperly vetoed sections from appropriations bills and said the court must issue an order to stop it from happening again.

"This constitutes a third instance. It constitutes a continuing disregard for the limitations of his veto," Alderson said of Carlin.

Grain embargo recovery will be slow, Dole says by the U.S. embargo, it is going to be a difficult process, U.S. Sen. Robert Dole told the National Association of Wheat Growers Tuesday.

"I'm an optimist," Dole told the honorary board of directors of the Wheat Growers Foundation, a group formed to advance industry objectives, including new foreign markets.

"I don't believe the Soviets are going to be anxious to rush over and be our first customer," the Kansas Republican said. "We may become a residual supplier to the Russians for a while."

Dole's remarks came the same day as an agreement was announced in London that would allow the Soviets to buy six million metric tons of American corn and wheat before the long-term grain agreement between the two countries expires Sept. 30.

THE AGREEMENT WAS the first positive step in re-opening grain sales to Russia since the embargo was lifted by President Reagan April 24. Although the Department of Agriculture would not confirm it, there was belief that negotiations on a new long-term grain agreement with the Russians could open as soon as mid-July.

Dole made no direct comment on the new grain agreement, but agriculture experts in the capital said the Soviets probably already

WASHINGTON (AP)-Although there is have bought enough wheat for their current optimism that U.S.-Soviet grain trade needs and may buy only one million to two gradually will recover from the blow dealt million tons of corn under the expanded agreement.

"Let's face it, it doesn't take long for others to move in to fill the void," Dole said. "The Canadians didn't abide by the embargo, the Argentines didn't abide by the embargo, and the losers were the American taxpayers and the American producer."

THE KANSAS SENATOR also said there is great potential to develop wheat markets in China, but "I'm not sure right now what they would pay for it with...If we get something we could barter, we might even want to do that.

"We've made it clear to Agriculture Secretary John Block that we need a more aggressive export policy."

Dole, who heads the Senate Finance Committee, also boosted Reagan's economic program as a potential cure for farmers' financial problems.

He said while visiting his hometown of Russell, Kan., last weekend, he heard concern from farmers about low prices for farm products.

"But there was even more concern about interest rates. Reagan's economic program is designed to halt inflation and bring a decline in interest rates. There are indications that interest rates might come down soon, and I hope they are right. It is really causing havoc in farm states.'

Voting districts need adjustment; census reveals shifting population

WASHINGTON (AP)—The five U.S. congressional districts in Kansas have remained remarkably balanced over the past decade and should require only minor adjustments to keep them within one-man, one-vote requirements, according to figures released late Tuesday by the U.S. Bureau of

The greatest change since the 1970 census came in the huge First District, now represented by Republican Rep. Pat Roberts. The western Kansas district, which covers 60 percent of the state's area, grew by just over 1,000 residents to a population of

The ideal district computed by the census bureau would contain 472,642, which means Roberts' district falls about 5 percent, or 23,818 people, below the ideal figure.

The Fourth District of Wichita Democratic Rep. Dan Glickman also was slightly below the ideal figure, needing 6,230 more people.

The state's other three districts had slight surpluses. The largest was in the Third District of Republican Rep. Larry Winn, which includes Kansas City, Kan. It had 4.2 percent, or 19,909 too many people, the census numbers showed.

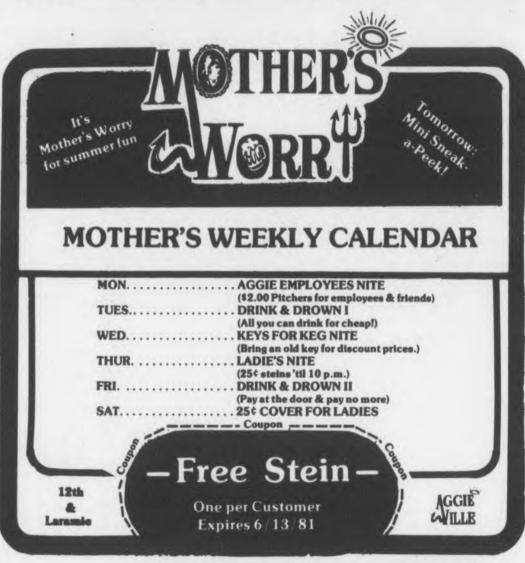

The Fifth District of Augusta Republican Rep. Bob Whittaker had a surplus of 7,965

Construction workers picket mines

WASHINGTON— Construction workers angered by a halt in contract talks picketed coal mines in six states Tuesday and kept thousands of United Mine Workers off the job, just two days after the end of the miners' 72-day strike.

"We're going to picket everything in sight from now on," said Clarence George, secretary of UMW Construction Local 1582 in southern West Virginia. "Just go to any mine and we'll be there."

Mines employing more than 8,000 miners in West Virginia, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania and Kentucky were shut down by the UMW construction workers, who negotiate separately with mine contractors.

Negotiators for the roughly 11,000 construction workers left Washington Tuesday afternoon after talks with the Associated Bituminous Contractors were halted.

UMW miners had returned to work without incident Monday, under the 160,000-member union's new agreement with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association. But thousands of miners refused to work Tuesday when confronted by construction pickets at mine entrances.

Grain price support access approved

WASHINGTON— Legislation giving wheat and corn farmers immediate access this year to the government's longterm price support loan program was approved Tuesday by the House Agriculture Committee.

The plan was prompted by Agriculture Secretary John Block's refusal to say whether early entry into the grain reserve for the 1981 crop would be permitted in light of other changes authorized in the program.

The key change is elimination of the mandatory interest waiver for the first year of a three-year reserve loan.

The reserve program provides farmers higher loans than available through the normal nine-month support loan plan and no interest charges after the first-year of the loan.

In return, however, grain deposited in the reserve must stay there for the full three years or until market prices hit set levels. With regular nine-month loans, farmers have access to their crop at any time.

Yanks unveil solar-powered plane

PARIS— The American team behind the only human-powered flight across the English Channel unveiled the first solar-powered airplane Tuesday and said they hope it will make the same crossing.

The Solar Challenger, on exhibit at the Paris Air Show, is driven by the sun's energy. It is powered by more than 16,000 solar cells placed on moveable panels on top of the wings and has no batteries or other energy storage.

The glider-like plane weighs 217 pounds, has reached an altitude of more than 14,000 feet and a speed of 42 miles per hour in test flights.

The inventor of the craft, Paul MacCready, said there is no "immediate, practical or commercial uses for such a plane," but that the planned Channel crossing is intended to "prove how far you can go in improving the efficiency and energy conservation potential if you combine imagination with modern, super-light materials."

The Channel crossing, scheduled for some time in mid-June depending on weather conditions, will be made by Stephen Ptacek, a 28-year-old Golden, Colo., pilot who lost 25 pounds to prepare for the flight MacCready estimates the flight will take about seven hours.

Cancer claims Allen Ludden

LOS ANGELES— Allen Ludden, longtime host of the popular television game shows "Password" and "G.E. College Bowl," died Tuesday after a long battle with cancer. He was 63.

Ludden's wife, actress Betty White, was at his side when he died at 1:25 a.m. PDT at Good Samaritan Hospital, family spokesman Larry Bloustein said.

"The cause of death was cancer," said hospital spokeswoman Pat Shrott.

Ludden had been hospitalized several times in recent months because of the cancer, which was diagnosed a year and a half ago, Bloustein said. A malignancy had been removed from his side in an operation last year.

It was shortly after the operation that Ludden went into a coma and was forced to leave NBC's "Password" in its 20th anniversary year.

There were reports that Ludden suffered a stroke last year, but doctors later determined that his coma was triggered by a calcium imbalance related to his cancer therapy, Bloustein said.

Tornado preparedness

Fifteen years ago this week, a tornado struck Manhattan. It caused $8 million in damage to K-State alone, including $3 million in damages to the Jardine housing area. Other residential areas of Manhattan were also heavily damaged.

The story of the destruction in Manhattan was eclipsed by a story from Topeka. On June 8, 1966, a tornado from the same storm system that hit Manhattan struck Topeka. There it caused $100 million in property damage and killed 17 people.

Tornadoes don't always happen somewhere else. According to Del Petty, Riley County Emergency Preparedness Coordinator, Manhattan's warning system for severe storms is one of the most advanced in the state. The dispatch room, located in the Riley County Police building on Colorado Street, receives direct information from the National Weather Service. via teletype.

If severe weather threatens, duty personnel are briefed. Spotters may be called. The watch commander has direct telephone lines to the radio stations, the University physical plant, the hospitals and other places with large concentrations of people

If a tornado is sighted, the sirens will be sounded for three to five minutes. They will have a steady tone. The tone will be repeated if the weather remains threatening. There is no such thing as an "all clear" siren in Manhattan.

If a tornado should hit Manhattan with no advance warning, even the most advanced warning systems in the world won't help.

Tornadoes are the most destructive of all atmospheric phenomena, at least on a local level. Everyone should learn the warnings and the basic precautions to take:

—Seek a permanent shelter. Do not remain outside or in a vehicle. Mobile homes are not permanent shelters. Avoid buildings with vaulted roofs, such as gymnasiums.

—Go to the basement. If the building has none, stay in an inner hallway or small enclosed room not near an outside wall. Another alternative is to hide beneath heavy furniture. Stay away from windows.

-Open windows on the side of the building opposite the direction from which the storm is coming.

—If time permits, shut off the electricity. Treat these storms with all the respect they deserve.

Another Martin controversy

Once again, Billy Martin, everybody's favorite salesman and sometimes major league manager, has become embroiled in a major controversy.

Martin has always seemed able to place himself in the midst of some of baseball's biggest controversies in the recent past. When he was manager of the New York Yankees, his clashes with owner George Steinbrenner and star outfielder Reggie Jackson regularly made national headlines. In fact, during a nationally televised game, Martin had to be restrained from going after Jackson in the dugout.

Martin has long been one of the premier umpire-baiters among major league managers. Umpires who work games in which Martin's teams are playing know he will do his best to get the calls going his

This latest episode in the Martin saga stems from a disagreement with an umpire in Toronto. Martin disputed the umpire's call and was thrown out of the game. He then proceeded to throw dirt at the umpire's back as the ump walked away.

Martin's actions were inexcusable, but the fact remains he does have a right to dispute an umpire's call.

The American League has suspended Martin for seven days and fined him $1,000. Martin has appealed this decision and has been allowed to manage during the appeal.

Terry Cooney, the umpire involved, has filed an assault suit against Martin in a Canadian court.

These actions point to the heart of the problem.

Decisions made on the baseball field and disputed on the baseball field should not be decided any further from the field than the commissioner's office.

Going to the courts to settle a baseball feud is unnecessary and will accomplish little more than keeping a number of attorneys employed for months-perhaps even years.

Settling any manner of disagreements in the courts seems to be the order of the day.

Children are suing their parents for improper parenting, and a wife recently sued her husband because of a fall she took on a snow-covered sidewalk that he had failed to

Maybe it's time people found a better way to settle their differences, especially disputes.

It's really hard to imagine Baseball's Hall of Fame umpire Bill Klem running to his lawyer when he had a confrontation with a manager. Klem simply ran subsequent games involving that manager's team with an iron hand and did not allow the situation to get out of his control.

Detractors of the sport of baseball point to its apparent lack of action as one of the reasons they would rather not watch it. If suits like these (Cooney's) continue, baseball will no longer be considered the national pastime.

NBC will no longer run its Game of the Week, and say goodbye to ABC's Monday Night Baseball.

Recent rulings about the permissibility of television cameras in the courtroom could change the viewing habits of the actionminded American sports fan.

"Divorce Court" will definitely make a prime-time comeback, and we can look forward to any number of spin-offs. Howard Cosell will finally be able to use his law degree while commenting on the latest exciting development on the "Sue-Your-Neighbor" specials.

Win a trip to beautiful and exciting Wamego, Kan. Yes, three days and five nights of sun, surf and sweat as you dine by candlelight at Dari Delight on High-

All this and more can be yours if you submit the winning name for the new General Office and Classroom building (GOACR Hall for short). If you can name it in three notes or less a special bonus prize will be added-a Greyhound bus tour through sensational Flush in central Pott County.

President Acker has said he is no hurry to name GOACR Hall, so take your time and do a good job. A second prize-no trip and no tour-will be awarded to the runner-up.

With just a smattering of creativity your entry can top the University's choice for the new plant science building-Throckmorton Hall (that's the truth). With a touch of originality you can add some pizzaz to a building that is certain to win not a single architectural beauty award. And with any amount of imagination you can whip up a name that will delight both friends and foes of the campus.

Please keep entries under three pages in length and abstain from any obscenities as they tend to confuse new freshmen, alarm visiting parents and irritate old alumni. Remember, the winning name must fit within the dimensions of the cement slabs they throw up in front of important campus buildings.

No nouns created by man or beast will be accepted as they add credibility to not only this contest but to this institution as well.

All entries will be translated into Japanese and turned over to a panel of celibate Norwegian sheperds who will chose the winning name. Bribes are encouraged and will be forwarded to a numbered bank account in Switzerland. If you make your checks payable to "Nuke the Whales Federation," they are tax-deductible.

The entries must be postmarked later than July 28, 1983, and must be accompanied by a label of your choice from the K-State Union. Reasonable facsimilies will be accepted. Contest invalid where prohibited by law. Promotional consideration has been waived by the Wamego and Flush chambers of commerce. All persons remotely associated with the University are disqualified from participating in this contest-so, enter now.

Task force selects department head

Eugene Kremer, head of the K-State Department of Architecture, has been appointed to an Energy Curriculum Advisory Task Force created by the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) and the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture (ACSA).

The initial meeting of the eight man task force was held in Washington D.C. May 7-8, at which time members reviewed and evaluated passive energy teaching materials under development and considered possibilities and strategies for future program directions.

Kremer said the task force, which includes representatives of DOE and ACSA, as well as several university professors, will reconvene in Washington July 29-30, to select a small number of resource materials for use and evaluation in schools during 1982. The group also will review a request for proposals to be sent to schools of architecture later this year and to advise on a draft report for a DOE research program on passive solar architectural education.

Honors student wins scholarship

Douglas Gudenkauf, a sophomore in animal science from Seneca, is this year's recipient of the $400 Farmland Industries—James McCain Commemorative Scholarship.

The scholarship, established to honor the president of K-State from 1950 to 1975, is one of a number sponsored by Farmland Industries. It goes annually to an outstanding student in agriculture, based upon that student's freshman record.

At K-State, Gudenkauf participates in the honors program in the College of Agriculture and has been named to Phi Eta Sigma, a scholastic honorary.

K-State agronomist writes textbook

Roy Follett, K-State extension agronomist, and collaborators Larry Murphy and Roy Donahue, are co-authors of a new textbook, "Fertilizers and Soil Amendments," just published by Prentice-Hall

Murphy and Donahue are former members of the K-State faculty. Murphy, now of Manhattan, is Great Plains director for the Potash and Phosphate Institute; while Donahue, now of Forsyth, Mo., is an emeritus professor of soil science at Michigan State University. Follett and Donahue have previously collaborated on a textbook "Our Soils and Their Management."

The book contains chapters on nitrogen fertilizers, phosphorus fertilizers, potassium fertilizers, secondary nutrients, micronutrients, and lime as well as chapters on applying fertilizers, reclamation and management of saline and sodic soils and use of organic materials such as plant and animal residues.

Muller wins livestock judging award

Mark Muller, Coffeyville, has been selected as the 1980 recipient of the F.W. Bell Memorial Livestock judging award.

The award, a gold watch, is presented each year to the outstanding senior livestock judging team member at K-State. The award is given in memory of Bell, who coached K-State livestock judging teams for 29 years.

Mueller, a senior in agriculture education, attended Fort Scott Community College (FSCC) before transferring to K-State. He was a member of FSCC's winning Cow Palace livestock team and at K-State was a member of the winning horse judging team at the World Quarter Horse Show at Oklahoma City.

Muller has been active in the Ag Ed Club and Alpha Tau Alpha and served as a secretary to both organizations.

Professor recruits cheering section

The K-State basketball team is getting an international boost from L.T. Fan, professor and head of the K-State Department of Chemical Engineering.

The Wildcats will be in Japan June 30 to July 13. When Fan learned that, he checked his list of former research associates and students from that country and wrote each of them, asking that they attend the games in cities where the team would be playing.

Of the 18 former K-Staters on the list, "I found that I had one, two or three in practically every city," Fan said. He said he was sure that if at all possible, the Japanese contingent will be there to cheer on the Wildcats.

While in Japan, the Wildcats will play at Yokohama, Shizuoka, Kyoto, Osaka, Okayama, Fukuoka and Tokyo. It will be the first time the team has played overseas.

Fan says football is already a popular sport among the Japanese, and basketball is beginning to make headway among sports fans there.

While supporting the Wildcats now, Fan has probably done the groundwork for another generation of K-State boosters in Japan.

"Each time I go there, I take T-shirts for the children" of the former K-Staters, he said.

Begin defends Israeli air strike

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP)-Prime Minister the June 30 elections. Menachem Begin, brushing off worldwide condemnation Tuesday, called the daring and devastating Israeli attack on Iraq's nuclear center an act of "supreme and legitimate self-defense."

In a stern warning against future attempts by Israel's enemies to develop a nuclear weapons capability, Begin declared, "There won't be another holocaust. Never again."

His political rivals stepped up their criticism of the raid's timing, claiming the prime minister used it to try to win votes in Israeli generals, appearing at a news conference with Begin, confirmed that American-made F-15 and F-16 warplanes were used in Sunday's raid. They said 'several tons" of bombs were dropped on the French built Iraqi reactor, and disclosed that as many as three people were killed in briefing. the attack.

Previously only one victim, a French technician, had been listed. The two other possible casualties were not identified.

IN WASHINGTON, Pentagon spokesman

Henry Catto said the Reagan administration was studying whether the raid violated U.S. prohibitions on use of American-supplied planes for any but defensive purposes.

"A decision has yet to be made" on whether to go ahead with delivery of four F-16s scheduled to start Friday, Catto said at a

In general, he added, "no decision has been made on a moratorium on sales or deliveries to Israel" pending an administration investigation as to whether Israel violated a legal ban on use of American-supplied equipment against another country without U.S. approval.

"I don't think it should take very long," Catto said when asked for his estimate of when a finding will be made by the administration.

AT THE STATE Department, meanwhile, spokesman Dean Fischer said that although U.S. arms sales to Israel are under review, the United States has no intention of backing away from its commitments to Israel.

He gave no hint as to what action the administration may take if Israel is found to have misused the American aircraft.

"I don't want to prejudge the outcome of a process now beginning," he said.

Fischer added that the head of the American diplomatic mission in Iraq, William Eagleton, had a meeting with Iraqi Foreign Ministry officials in Baghdad. Fischer said he had no information on the meeting.

Catto said Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger "strongly condemned" the attack Sunday by 14 U.S.-built F-15 and F-16 warplanes on the nuclear reactor some 12 miles from Baghdad.

HE REFUSED TO characterize Weinberger's "emotional state" in condemning the Israeli attack, but quoted the Pentagon chief as saying success for the mission" of special ambassador Philip Habib to resolve a hot dispute between Syria and Israel.

The United States already has delivered 25 of the 40 F-15 fighters bought by Israel and 53 of 75 F-16s.

The scheduled delivery of the next group of four F-16s this week puts early pressure on President Reagan to decide what policy to follow in continuing or suspending arms deliveries and possibly future sales to Attack on nuclear reactor sparks swift condemnation

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS Israel's bombing raid on an Iraqi nuclear reactor brought swift condemnation from friends of the Jewish state as well as it foes, and prompted cries of outrage from the Arab world.

The Arab League called an emergency foreign ministers' meeting in Baghdad Thursday to discuss a response to Israel's attack deep inside Iraq, 12 miles from the Iraqi capital on Sunday. And the United Nations Security Council was expected to meet Friday to hear Iraq's complaint that Israel committed a "grave act of aggression."

The United States, which denounced the attack by its ally and denied prior knowledge of the raid, was criticized for alleged complicity.

Iran, which has been at war with Iraq since last September, condemned the Israeli raid as "a United States conspiracy, carried out by its regional accomplice, the Zionists who occupy Jerusalem," according to the official news agency Pars.

The Soviet Union denounced the air strike and claimed U.S. leaders were "direct accomplices."

France, which supplied the reactor and technicians to Iraq, signaled that the attack had set back the expected warming of relations between Jerusalem and the new French government of Francois Mitterrand. In Paris, Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson summoned Israeli Ambassador Meir Rosenne to condemn the raid and express France's shock at the death of a French technician, a French Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Saadoun Hammadi summoned Arab diplomats in Baghdad to urge that their countries "consolidate" and "stand firm in the face of the Zionist enemy's aggressive policy.'

Iraq's official news media said Israel attacked because of fear Iraq was leading the way to an Arab victory over the Jewish Israel said it wanted to keep Iraq from building atomic bombs to be used against it.

Egypt, "astounded and sorry that this attack should come after the summit meeting" last Thursday between Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, called on the United States and other nations "to force Israel to stop its violence and aggression" in the Middle East.

Western diplomatic sources in Cairo said Sadat was insulted by the Israeli action at a time when he is trying to advance the Camp David peace process. The sources, who asked not to be identified, said the attack would affect the tenuous relations between Egypt and Israel.

Syria, which is itself involved in a confrontation with Israel over placement of anti-aircraft missiles in Lebanon, called Sunday's attack "an aggression against the whole Arab world."

Reagan administration officials said the Israeli raid had undercut U.S. envoy Philip Habib's efforts to mediate a solution to the Lebanon crisis, increasing the chance of war in the Middle East.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, speaking in the House of Commons, "totally and utterly condemned" the air raid and branded it "a grave breach of international law" that would heighten tension in the volatile Middle East.

Technological advances continue for UNIVAC I

First computer outgrows early days of 'novelty'

BLUE BELL, Pa. (AP)—The date was June 14, 1951. It was a time when chips were chocolate or potato, not the computer kind. And it was a day that would change the nation, forever immortalizing these six words:

Do not fold, spindle or mutilate.

The world's first commercial computer, designed for the U.S. Census Bureau, was unveiled that afternoon. Scientists, bureaucrats and military brass came to gawk at the future, wrapped in a gleaming metal box known as UNIVAC I.

Measuring 8 feet high, 7½ feet wide and 14½ feet long, the Universal Automatic Computer (UNIVAC) proved to be a perfect luncheon guest, quietly consuming strands of magnetic tape for the curious.

NEXT TO UNIVAC was a control panel, described by one newspaper reporter as "a contraption that looks like a combination pipe organ console, a linotype machine and a telephone switchboard." Nearby, he added, was a "Buck Rogers typewriter."

Thirty years later, pioneers of the Census Bureau remember astonished faces when they recall those first close encounters of a computer kind.

"It was a great mystery. People just marveled over it, thought of it as some kind of superhuman brain," said Robert Stephens, 57, who trained people to service the computer and is now in computer performance evaluation for the Census Bureau.

The early UNIVAC was highly accurate, but electronically cantankerous, breaking down two or three times a day.

Beckoned from Philadelphia to Washington to help keep the system running, Edward Stein, 55, recalls Census workers regarded UNIVAC "as an oversized toaster. You'd just push a button and the 'toast' would pop out.

"They didn't understand it. They envisioned some kind of black art."

Contributions sought for fireworks display at Tuttle Reservoir

For the first time since the Veterans of Foreign Wars' celebration in 1976, Manhattan residents and visitors will be able to celebrate a Fourth of July fireworks celebration at Tuttle Creek Reservoir if the efforts of a Manhattan man are successful.

Lynn Pugh is coordinating the celebration which is scheduled to take place on the east side of the lake, next to the face of the dam.

Pugh, who has lived in Manhattan about eight years, said he would like to see Manhattanites get involved by making contributions of time or money. A project goal of $3,000 has been set and Pugh said about one-sixth of that amount has already been pledged. The funds will be needed to cover the purchase of fireworks and other

A special appearance by The Manhattan Ski Club is scheduled for the celebration. The appearance of an area skydiving club will be contingent upon approval by the U.S. Government Corps of Engineers. The aerial fireworks display is scheduled to begin at

Although the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce has sent about 800 letters to local merchants requesting support, Pugh said financial backing is "not just up to the businesses."

"If everyone could donate one dollar, it would be outstanding," he said.

Other plans to solicit contributions will include a firework stand to be located at the Skate Plaza Roller Rink, and signs and donation canisters at various businesses and on campus. Pugh said he had also tried to rally support for the display by appealing to K-State employees and his co-workers at Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

Donations are also being accepted at both of Manhattan's Citizen's State Bank buildings, located at 6th and Humboldt and in Village Plaza Shopping Center. No admission will be charged for the celebration.

was just another in a series of computer designs for Dr. J. Presper Eckert, who with the late Dr. John Mauchly invented the 30ton granddaddy of them all—the Electronic Numeric Integrator and Computer, or ENIAC.

Although ENIAC had two fathers, necessity was the mother of that invention, said Eckert, 62, who is now vice president and technical adviser to the president of Sperry-Univac.

When U.S. forces landed in Africa in November 1942, the Army discovered the change in environment would force recalculation of thousands of firing tables for artillery guns. But no machine existed that could work at the required pace.

Enter Eckert, a 23-year-old graduate student, and Mauchly, an Ursinus College physics professor who came to the University of Pennsylvania to attend "a class for smart people who needed to know about the war's problems," said Eckert, then a lab instructor.

He and Mauchly began a hasty collaboration on a computing machine for the Army that could deliver data quickly and accurately. The proposal was delivered to the Army Ordnance Department at Aberdeen, Md., on April 9, 1943-Eckert's 24th birthday.

"THOSE WERE war days and everything was done on a handshake. We had hoped to finish in 18 months, but they kept adding to the project. It was a brand new area. We were stumbling along in the dark," said Eckert, who has received a number of awards for his contribution, including an honorary doctorate from Penn.

Classified as Project PX, the computer grew more complex with each demand made by the military. While the project wasn't top secret, it was not to be loosely discussed and Eckert found his work difficult to explain, "especially to my draft board. I couldn't tell them what I was ENIAC, with its 18,000 vacuum tubes in a 30-by-50 foot machine, was delivered to the Army in 1946 at a cost of $400,000. It could do 5,000 calculations a second, not too impressive by today's standards, but it was 1,000 times faster than anything else in those

"As it turned out, it wasn't finished in time to help with the war," Eckert said. But its UNIVAC I WAS a first for the nation, but it development pointed the way for computer calculations relating to the hydrogen bomb, wind tunnel design, cosmic ray research and weather predictions.

> ECKERT AND Mauchly later formed their own company, the Eckert-Mauchly Computer Corp., which struggled for four years to develop UNIVAC, in part because the firm lost a $2 million government contract after "somebody decided Mauchly's secretary knew a communist, and so that made us unreliable," Eckert said.

> In 1950 they sold the company to Remington Rand Inc. (now Sperry-Univac) for $250,000 each. Mauchly became an independent consultant; Eckert remained with the firm.

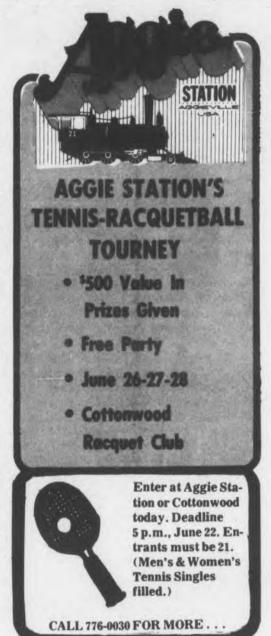

> When they unveiled UNIVAC I in 1951, computers were little more than a novelty. As Eckert put it: "At that point, we were considered a bunch of lunatics."

> They sold about 40 of the UNIVAC I model. for more than $1 million apiece. For '50s business executives, the technology was baffling, especially UNIVAC's magnetic memory tapes.

> Thirty years later, he believes there still are advances to be made with computers. "There are limits, but we haven't found them yet," said Eckert, who has a knack for putting things in perspective.

Once asked what he would do if computers took over the world, Eckert replied calmly:

"Pull the plug."

James Nowaskey fills new position as director of General Services

James Nowaskey has been chosen to fill a new position for University Facilities. As of June 1, he is the Director of General Ser-

Nowaskey will be responsible for five areas of University Facilities: the custodial operations of both the academic buildings and grounds; the University motor pool; the vehicle repair garage; and the Ahearn Recreation complex.

According to Gene Cross, vice president for university facilities, the job was created to consolidate the five different functions into one area of general services.

The creation of the job is part of the final phase of the divisional reorganization of University Facilities.

Prior to reorganization, Cross had 17 facilities unit heads who reported to him. Through the reorganization, he has assigned the responsibility of meeting with some of these units to other people-such as Nowaskey.

"Where I used to have 17 people reporting to me, I now have seven," Cross said.

According to Cross, each area will now be able to function more effectively.

Before coming to K-State, Nowaskey was the director of general services at the University of Wisconsin at Menomonie for 10 years. While at the university he also taught classes in hotel management and was the assistant coach in football for a few years.

Prior to these positions, he served as an industrial engineer and Director of Food Services for the San Diego, Calif. school system for 15 years.

He also has a bachelor's degree in industrial management.

As the Director of Services, Nowaskey said that he is not sure what, if any,

Reagan accepts Mexico summit invitation

WASHINGTON (AP)-After insisting that they could agree and only mentioning in Castaneda said the decisions on which Fidel Castro be excluded, President Reagan accepted the invitation Tuesday of Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo to a North-South summit conference of the Americas.

Official confirmation of Reagan's decision to participate in the Cancun, Mexico, summit next October came in an exchange of warm, personal toasts by the two American presidents who spent two days together discussing hemispheric issues and basking in the country hospitality they both enjoy.

At the conclusion of the visit, Reagan announced the two nations would establish a bilateral commission to seek solutions to problems that weren't solved here. He also said he would await Mexico's comments on the options his administration is considering to deal with the influx of illegal Mexican laborers-Reagan called it "the undocumented migrant problem."

It was apparent the leaders spent most of their time searching for issues on which passing their differences, such as the role of the United States in opposing revolution in El Salvador.

U.S. officials, who spoke with the understanding they would not be quoted by name, said the decision for Reagan to attend the North-South summit conceived by Lopez Portillo followed a decision not to invite Cuba's communist leader to discuss the issues of mutual concern to the industrial and developing nations of the world.

A high Mexican official, however, rejected any suggestion that Lopez Portillo had capitulated to Reagan's position.

countries to invite were made by an 11nation organizing committee which met in Vienna last November and again in March. The issue of Cuban participation was not mentioned during the presidents' talks here,

One U.S. official familiar with the issue said Reagan had indicated in early March a desire to attend the summit but made it clear to the Mexicans at that time he did not want Castro there. He was prepared to raise it again in these meetings, the source said, but that didn't prove necessary.

Royals fall to New York, again

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Dave Winfield and Graig Nettles slammed home runs and Dave LaRoche, Mike Griffin and Goose Gossage pitched 7 2-3 innings of scoreless relief Tuesday night as the New York Yankees won their ninth straight game, downing the Kansas City Royals 8-5.

Winfield socked a three-run homer and Nettles a solo shot in the third to tie the score 5-5, then Oscar Gamble put the Yankees ahead for good with a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the fourth.

The left-handed LaRoche, 3-0, hurled 3 2-3 innings in relief of starter Gene Nelson, before Griffin took over in the sixth. Gossage came on in the eighth after a one-out double by Jamie Quirk to register his major league-leading 17th save.

Kansas City scored all of its runs in the first two innings off Nelson. In the first, after Willie Wilson led off with a triple and George Brett walked, Willie Aikens singled home one run and Amos Otis doubled home another.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Dave Winfield Revering and Rick Cerone before Kansas and Graig Nettles slammed home runs and City came back for three runs in the bottom of the inning.

Jerry Grote tripled and Wilson was hit by a pitch, U.L. Washington singled for one run, Brett doubled in another and the final run came home on Aikens' sacrifice fly.

That gave Royals' starter Juan Berenguer a 5-1 lead entering the third, but Winfield followed a walk to Mumphrey and a single by Gamble with his seventh homer of the year. Nettles, the next batter, tied the game with a towering home run to right, his seventh.

Cerone opened the Yankees fourth with a double off reliever Renie Martin, 1-3, and went to third on Bucky Dent's single. Cerone was out in a rundown following Randolph's grounder, but Gamble followed a basesloading walk to Mumphrey with his sacrifice fly to right.

The Yankees added a run in the sixth on an RBI single by Randolph and another in the seventh on a throwing error by Brett, allowing Reggie Jackson to score from first base.

Deal permits Soviets to buy grain

LONDON (AP) — The Soviet Union will be allowed to buy an additional 6 million metric tons of U.S. grain to be shipped before Sept. 30, U.S. officials said Tuesday. They said the Soviets will be able to buy "reasonable" amounts of grain after that date.

The announcement at the U.S. Embassy in London followed nearly two days of talks between a U.S. team lead by Undersecretary of Agriculture Seeley G. Lodwick and Soviet Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Boris Gordeev. The talks were held at the Soviet Trade mission in London.

The agreement, which came less than seven weeks after President Reagan lifted the limited grain embargo imposed by President Carter in January 1980, provided the Soviet Union could buy up to an additional 6 million tons "without further consultations" by the end of the current fiscal year.

The deal provides for the purchase of 3 million metric tons of wheat and an equal amount of corn. A metric ton is 2,20 pounds, or about 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn.

If the Soviets buy the full 6 million tons, it will bring their imports of U.S. wheat and corn to 14 million tons this year, the final period of a five-year U.S.Soviet grain agreement.

"The USSR has already imported 8 million tons—the amount allowable without additional consultations between the two governments," the statement noted.

Negotiations are expected before Sept. 30 on a new grain deal. "In the meantime," the announcement said, "the USSR may

House passes anti-busing legislation

Representatives, by a 265-122 vote, passed legislation Tuesday aimed at halting courtordered busing of school children for desegregation.

It was the second time in a year such antibusing legislation passed the House. Former President Carter vetoed a similar measure last year, but President Reagan is on record as opposing court-ordered compulsory busing.

The bill would bar the department from taking any action that would cause children to be bused past their nearest school.

Democrats, led by Southern conservatives, supported the proposal by a 120-98 margin. Republicans supported it 145-24.

A supporter immediately hailed the more than a two-to-one margin as a "real breakthrough" in efforts to halt courtordered busing.

Rep. James Collins (R-Tex.) author of the amendment, predicted "I think we're going to see the Justice Department by the end of this year stopping introducing all of these busing (suits). They've introduced over 500 of these suits in the past 15 years."

COLLINS SAID THE bill was only intended to stop the Justice Department from filing any more cases. Current Justice Department desegregation suits would not be affected, he said. Neither would the right of private citizens to file suits in the future for purposes of school integration.

In another action backed by conservatives, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted to restore the death penalty for several federal crimes. With little debate, the committee voted 13-5 to approve a broad capital punishment bill designed to meet Supreme Court rules for protecting the rights of defendants convicted of capital

The bill would permit the death penalty for treason and espionage, for carrying explosives across state lines, kidnapping, hijacking an airplane, and the attempted, or actual, assassination of a president.

Watercolor workshop entices area artists

CLAY CENTER—A balding, middle-aged man pressed his fingers tightly against his tensely pursed lips. A slender young woman in deep concentration drew her pale features into a frown. A loudly dressed grandmother dropped her jaw in amazement as she strained to see over the top of her glasses.

Fifteen pairs of eyes focused intently on one man. The coldness of a large, modern classroom was somehow diminished as the artist's sturdy figure hovered gently over a collage of papers, paints and bowls of murky, black water.

Men and women spanning a variety of ages stared silently—almost reverently—as a serene Kansas landscape took shape before them.

With hands possessing the delicacy and exactness of a skilled surgeon, Oscar Larmer, professor of art, slowly introduced his audience to the basic techniques of watercolor painting in the first day of a fourpart workshop presented June 5, 6 and June 12, 13.

Unfolding a rattan wrapper resembling a window shade, Larmer revealed a curious collection of paintbrushes and several "unconventional" instruments that he used in his demonstration of watercolor technique.

LARMER BEGAN his painting by first drawing a design on his paper.

"Most people first sketch lightly with a pencil or brush, but if you have a design in mind, just start (painting)," he said.

Stopping only to impatiently retrieve glasses that occasionally slid down his nose, Larmer painted the soft colors of a Flint Hills skyline with amazing rapidity.

"Today's focus was to learn to do washes...and the basic manipulation of brushes," he said.

Larmer responded easily to the hesitant questions of the members. As the workshop progressed, the flow of questions and answers increased between the group and the instructor.

"A lot of people become inhibited (by watercolors). They think you cannot change the surface. Sometimes you can't but you have to remember that it's just a piece of paper," Larmer said. "The beauty of it is it's a faster extemporaneous medium. The surface changes with every wash."

CHANGES IN the surface of a watercolor may frighten beginning painters, but they are relatively easy to make and offer a chance to experiment in textures, according to Larmer.

'You can take color off with clean water applied to the paint on the paper-lifting the color off with printmaker's blotter paper," he said. "It (the blotter paper) can also be used to create clouds by wadding it up and wetting it. Paper toweling, for instance, couldn't (create a cloud effect) because it isn't rigid enough-but can be used to create other textures.'

Using paper and other household items as painting utensils, Larmer emphasized the flexibility of watercolor technique.

"Watercolor ... you can do a lot more with it than you think at the beginning. Textures can be made with a sponge...a tree can be made by wadding up the corner of a sponge and cutting it to a round shape.

"Another thing used for texture in the foreground is to use the handle of your brush. While it's wet you can draw (with) the edge of it...or scissors, or a pocket knife, or a credit card," Larmer said.

DEMONSTRATING THIS technique, the artist used his own pocket knife to create several clumps of grassy foliage.

After his demonstration, the workshop members were given time to experiment with the newly-learned techniques

"The sessions start each day with a demonstration (by Larmer). Then he lets us work for awhile and closes with and individual critique. That helps as much as anything-to have him hold your pictures up in front of the class and talk about them, Kay Thompson, graduate in art and workshop member, said.

For an enrollment fee of $40, the four-day workshop meets three hours each morning. After a lunch break, class resumes for three hours in the afternoon.

The sessions drew people from both Clay Center and Manhattan. And for many participants, this was not the first art workshop that they had attended—like Lucy Mulroney Mulroney is a traveling art instructor for five schools in and around Clay Center. She said art workshops should be seen as needed refresher courses.

"I keep coming back to class—you really have to stay with it," she said.

However many students are in it purely for pleasure, according to Larmer.

"A lot of people take workshops like this as a vacation," he said. "We've had weekend workshops as campouts at state lakes-three days of painting, discussions, and films." The final sessions scheduled for this weekend may include a trip for on-location watercolor painting at Milford Lake and a day devoted to still life paintings, Larmer said.

Larmer has taught at K-State since 1956 and is director of graduate studies for the Art Department. His artwork has been exhibited in showings across the nation.

Polish crackdown:

Communist party leader vows to end dissonance; anti-Soviet activities will no longer be tolerated

WARSAW, Poland (AP)—Communist Party leader Stanislaw Kania made a last-ditch such a practice one must give evidence starting tomorrow." effort Tuesday to forestall Soviet military intervention in Poland by vowing a swift crackdown on "counter-revolutionary activities" that the Kremlin and its Warsaw Pact allies blame on the independent union Solidarity.

He told a meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee that the mounting concern of the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact was "fully justified."

Kania, in what appeared to be the toughest speech since he took office after a wave of strikes last summer, opened a Central Committee meeting called hastily over the weekend after Solidarity threatened a regional strike Thursday.

ALTHOUGH THE STRIKE apparently has been postponed, a letter from the Soviet Central Committee to its Polish counterpart urged pressure to curb "counter-revolution," and Kania in his speech said "all comrades know this letter (and) our friends have a full right to such reactions."

Kania said that Poland's socialist allies were "indignant at the filthy wave of anti-Sovietism and anti-communism" in Poland, including desecration of Soviet war memorials, rising crime and attacks on police and other state authorities.

He declared: "There cannot be any more tolerance for activities directed against socialism, against our alliances, against the friendly relations with the Soviet Union. About talks Monday night.

Kania said the letter from the Soviets warned that "the serious danger hovering over socialism constitutes a danger for the very existence of an independent Polish state."

KANIA SAID IT was not enough to pledge loyalty to socialism, the Warsaw Pact and Comecon, the East Bloc economic pact, but "we have to fullfill them with convincing con-

"We are able to repulse all threats," he said. "One has to consolidate the party, prepare and conduct a successful congress, develop an effective fight for a way out of the crisis, fight counter-revolutionary threats, anarchy...

Noting that too few workers had been elected as delegates to the congress so far, Kania said too many experienced party members were losing elections, calling it a "dangerous tendency. Despite his harsh words, Kania also pledged to continue the line of reform the party adopted last August after the birth of Solidarity, the first union free of party control in the

Kania also praised "common sense" among some union members who had decided to suspend a warning strike in four northwest provinces Thursday after union-government

Baseball negotiation attempts prove 'fruitless'

'Until the judge rules it's going to continue'

NEW YORK (AP)-Baseball negotiators, still looking over their shoulders for a federal judge's ruling on an injunction, Tuesday spent another fruitless 30 minutes at the bargaining table.

And after the session, union leader Marvin Miller said in the event of a strike, he would let the players themselves handle the negotiating sessions with management to show the other side "how strongly the players feel on the issue" of compensation for the signing of free agent players.

"It's getting very terse, very tense," said federal mediator Kenneth Moffett after another meeting of no movement. "Until the judge rules, it's going to continue this way."

Moffett called a tentative meeting for Wednesday afternoon, which could be canceled if Judge Henry Werker rules beforehand on a National Labor Relations Board injunction that asks that the implementation of the owners' free-agent compensation proposal be postponed one

Werker's office said on Monday that a decision would come "later this week."

IF THE JUDGE denies the NLRB request, the players have said they would strike within 48 hours of that decision. If the players strike, Miller said he would let the players handle the negotiations "unless in specific instances the players request I

Miller, executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association since 1966, said the change in format stems from the owners' "underlying assumption that they can sell the players the Brooklyn Bridge and I'm the only one that stands in the way."

He said Ruly Carpenter, owner of the Philadelphia Phillies, was the latest management official to make that contention in an informal conversation with some of his players Monday. Ray Grebey, the owners' chief bargainer, told Miller at the negotiating table Tuesday that that wasn't his belief.

However, Miller said: "Mr. Grebey has told me directly that he thinks I can take the owners' proposal and sell it to the players. That's a grave underestimation of the players."

So if a strike is called, the nucleus of the players' bargaining unit would include the four players on the union's executive board: Bob Boone of Philadelphia, the National League representative; Doug DeCinces of Baltimore, the American League representative, and the two pension committee representatives, Steve Rogers of Montreal and Mark Belanger of Baltimore.

Miller said Don Fehr, the union's general counsel, would "attend the sessions to provide continuity.'

"While there's a change in format, there's no change in terms of mechanics," Miller said. "(The union negotiating panel) will still have full authority to negotiate a settlement subject to the approval by the union's executive board and ratification by the players."

RUSTY STAUB, the player representative of the New York Mets who attended Tuesday's session, said the players appreciate Miller's leadership and the legal advice of Fehr and lawyer Peter Rose, but "when it comes down to deciding, the players make the decision."

Although both sides agreed that they were waiting for the judge, they disagreed on what action could be taken in the interim.

"Neither side had anything new to offer," Grebey said. "The Players Association asked if we were waiting for the judge's decision, and we said it was a factor. This thing will have to be settled at the bargaining table, and having the judge's ruling will assist that."

The last new offer made public was the union's proposal, under which each of the 26 major league clubs would designated one or more players to a pool from which teams losing a "ranking" player to free agency could draw its compensation.

Grebey announced Saturday that the owners had rejected that proposal after giving it "considerable study.

Student aid may be cut in budget

By JANA BAKER Collegian Reporter

Students already feeling the pinch of inflation and higher tuition, will be dealt another blow should the Reagan budget plan be passed and signed into law.

Reagan's budget conference committee voted Friday to recommend an $80 cut in the maximum Basic Education Opportunity Grant (BEOG).

It is also considering a revision of the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program that would base eligibility on adjusted gross income. As the program stands now, adjusted gross income is not considered on applications.

Reagan's budget committee agreed to reduce the BEOG ceiling $80—from $1,750 per year to $1,670.

Concerning the GSL program, Evans said the committee "has proposed the program not be based upon convenience." The way the program is currently administered, Evans said, students don't have to qualify for loans, they simply fill out an application and find a lender willing to make the Evans said he anticipated adjusted gross income figures would be used to determine needs in the future. Those earning less than a yet-to-be-determined income would automatically qualify for a GSL, while those earning more than the limit would have to submit a regular application for financial aid to determine their eligibility.

It is possible that a general cut in funds for financial aid may also cause a change in the National Direct Student Loan program, according to Evans.

"I doubt if it will be a significant amount," he said, "I think it will be an amount that we could live that interest rates for the new Parent Loan for Undergraduate Students program may increase. The current interest rate is nine percent, but the Reagan administration wants to set it at 14 percent, Evans said.

Evans added that the House and Senate will probably concur with the conference committee's decison and that the president would go ahead and sign the bill.

Student Financial Assistance at K-State is keeping track of the funding changes and will relay new information to students as soon as possible.

"We have made awards on all but the basic grants," Evans said. "We are prepared whenever we receive the final go-ahead from the Department of Education, to proceed with the sending of award letters to all students who have basic grants with us."

Evans said he anticipated getting revised award letters out by the end of the month.

Evans said he is satisfied with the proposed changes. "Given all the things that could have happened between last Febuary and now, we are coming out fairly well. We don't have as much money as we need-but nobody does."

Bar codes to save sorting costs

Postal Service wants new ZIPs

By TERI GROFT Staff Writer

Although it has been a target of much controversy, the installation of a nine-digit ZIP code may become a reality if the U.S. Postal Service has their way.

If the ZIP-plus-four system is accepted by the national Postal Rate Commission, new nine-digit ZIP codes will replace the conventional five-digit ones.

According to Oscar Bureman, Manhattan post master, the ZIPplus-four system, which is presently under discussion stages, will be most beneficial to large businesses having access to a computer that aids in addressing mail and is able to store nine-digit ZIP codes.

In the present means of distribution, the mail is first sent through optical carrying reader (OCR) computers, which are located in highly mailconcentrated areas. After a letter has been sorted through the OCR, it is then sent to sectional centers (areas that have the same first three digits).

Here the mail is sorted according to destination-either by hand or by a sorting machine—at the rate of about one letter per second. After sorting, the mail is sent to designated cities and is again sorted and distributed to the letter carriers manually.

With the ZIP-plus-four system, mail is still sent through the OCR computer, but is bar-coded and sent on to sectional centers.

The bar-coding is a series of black lines similar to the Universal Product Code used on food items in many grocery stores.

The code is translated by a barcode reader-a device that sorts out the nine-digit letters and sends them directly to the letter carrier, saving two sortings. The five-digit ZIP codes will be handled as

IN ORDER TO entice large businesses to use the 9-digit ZIP Codes, a discount of about 1/2 cent per mailing will be offered, Bureman said.

"Over-all, business mail is now 80 percent of the (total mail) volume. Some businesses might send five mailings a day, whereas some credit billers send thousands of letters at specific times of the month." he said. "Those are the businesses that have large enough volumes to benefit from ZIP-plusfour. There would be an incentive to use it."

Bureman said he spoke for himself and the U.S. Postal Service in approval of ZIP-plus-four.

"An estimate by the Postal Service claims the change to ninedigit ZIP codes will eliminate 30,000 clerk jobs, resulting in $600 million savings, and the Postal Service is generally conservative in their estimates," Bureman said.

"I don't see any difficulty with it and I think most people in the Postal Service see it the same

Should the new system gain the approval of the Postal Rate Commission, the first five digits of ZIP codes will remain the same, Bureman said.

IN ISSUING THE new codes, cities will be divided into segments, then broken into sectors to determine the final four digits. Although everyone will be in a nine-digit area, personal letters will still be distributed if only the five-digit ZIP code is displayed, according to Bureman.

Although Manhattan has been inspected to determine the number of sectors and segments, he said the exact amount is not known at

The University will be also be effected if the change is approved, either by assigning a different ZIP code to each building or possibly to each department-depending on how large the department is, he

The U.S. Postal Service had planned to have the new system into effect by now, but according to

Military referrals cause housing squeeze

The limited availability of offcampus housing for K-State students may be even more restricted next fall, due principally to a continued increase in personnel at Fort Riley.

"It is my understanding," Thomas Frith, director of housing at K-State said, "that Fort Riley has increased its strength by 2,000 (persons)."

Frith estimated one-third of the soldiers would seek housing in

"It will have some effect (on students). How much, I really don't know," he said.

Fort Riley currently refers incoming soldiers to the Manhattan area for housing, said Judy Grossnickel, housing referral officer at Fort Riley.

"We have a constant flow of people looking for housing," Grossnickel said.

Grossnickel cited the Manhattan and Junction City newspapers as examples of the scarcity of housing and rental availabilities.

"The Manhattan newspaper has openings, and the Junction City newspaper has three ads total,' Grossnickel said. "That's why we are referring the people to

"Right now we have about 25 people per day looking for housing," she said. "That figure is lower than in January, when we had about 40 people per day looking but we are still above average, which is 15 people per day."

Grossnickel expects the trend to steadily continue, as the fort is just now getting up to its authorized strength.

"I don't know what will happen in August," she said. "For incoming soldiers, the optimum time to relocate is in the summer, so those people with families can get their children enrolled in school.'

Grossnickel said personnel at Fort Riley are already panicking about not having a place to live.

"We are suggesting that some people live by the lakes-buy or rent a camper or tent, and live about a column and a half of there awhile. Some people are having to live in motels for several weeks before housing can be found," Grossnickel said.

"The rental situation (in Manhattan) is super critical at this point," said Earl Russell, Manhattan realtor.

Russell said the rental shortage in Manhattan is a result of the summer of 1977 when "Fort Riley was emptied out." At that time, few rental units were built, because there were more than enough units available, he said.

Although the housing situation right now is tight, "some type of housing will be available for everyone," Russell said.

A race to available housing in August between Fort Riley personnel and K-State students is forseeable, Grossnickel said.

Richard Elkins, administrative director of admissions at K-State, said the housing situation will "most definitely" be a problem in the fall, even though enrollment figures are not predicted to change significantly.

Polish leader to face vote of confidence

Party chief Stanislaw Kania and his top taken at the plenum, said he was ready to aides were branded incapable of resolving crackdown coupled with his call to continue the Polish crisis Wednesday at a stormy Central Committee meeting that pitted footstomping, pro-Soviet hardliners against moderates favoring reform.

The attack was viewed as a call for Kania and his aides on the Politburo to resign. The 11-man Politburo called for a vote of confidence, and the Central Committee began debating the issue. Kania said Politburo members should quit if they failed to get at least 50 percent of the committee's votes.

Kania and his aides were attacked by Tadeusz Grabski, a hardliner on the Politburo, at the Central Committee meeting. The session was held in response to a Soviet call for cracking down on Solidarity, the first union free of party control in Communist Eastern Europe.

Kania opened the meeting Tuesday with a vow to curb unrest. But he also pledged to continue reforms begun when he took over from Edward Gierek at the end of the summer strikes that gave birth to Solidarity, sent shockwaves through the Soviet bloc and led to mass shakeups in the government and party. The current premier, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, is the third in 10 months.

The Politburo for some months has not been a consolidated, cohesive leading team, "and in its present composition and under the leadership of Kania is unable to lead the country out of the crisis," the official PAP news agency quoted Grabski as declaring.

Grabski said during the past two days of debates that speakers repeatedly offered motions for a vote of no-confidence in the Politburo and expressed doubts whether it would continue preparations for an emergency party congress called for mid-

PAP said Politburo member Kazimierz Barcikowski then took the floor and resign from both the Politburo and the Central Committee.

Doctor wins civil rights case

TOPEKA— The Kansas Civil Rights Commission said today one of the largest monetary awards it has ever ordered is to be paid by the University of Kansas Medical Center to Dr. Ethel Nurge of Kansas

The commission said it directed the Medical Center to pay Dr. Nurge $34,967.19 in wages and $3,000 for pain, suffering and Nurge alleged the Medical Center paid her a lesser salary than male employees in lower ranking positions.

The commission said the Medical Center was unable to demonstrate that higher salaries paid to two male employees in Nurge's department, the College of Health and Sciences, were based upon any factor other than sex.

The Medical Center has the option of complying with the commission's order, or appealing to district court, the Civil Rights Commisson said.

Haig hopes to gain support in China

WASHINGTON— Secretary of State Alexander Haig will try to use his two week trip to China and other Pacific nations to rally support for Reagan administration policies aimed at blocking Soviet global expansion.

The China visit also signals the Reagan administration's desire to pursue normal relations with the communist country, a policy followed by the past three U.S. presidents.

Haig left last night for Hong Kong and will go to China Sunday for talks that will mark the first direct, high-level contact between the Reagan administration and the Chinese leadership.

He will attend a meeting next week in Manila which will bring together the foreign ministers of Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia, Malaysia and Singapore.

After that, Haig will go to New Zealand for a session with officials from Australia and New Zealand and return to Washington, by way of Hawaii.

The entire trip will cover 27,670 miles.

Although earlier plans to visit Japan were cancelled because of changes in the government there, Haig plans to meet with Japan's new foreign minister, Sunao Sonoda, while in Manila.

During talks in Peking, Haig is expected to invite China's prime minister, Zhao Ziyang, or another leader to the United States later this year or early in 1982, and to discuss the possibility of a visit to China by President Reagan in 1982.

Bungling bank robber wrecks car

WICHITA— A man who tried to hold up a bank stole a police car and wrecked it Wednesday afternoon while leading officers on a short but bizzare chase, police reported.

When Officer Mike Nelson responded to a holdup alarm at City National Bank in east Wichita, employees told him a man standing outside the bank had tried to rob it.

Nelson tried to talk to the suspect, but the man walked across the street and then began running.

Nelson had left his cruiser idling outside the bank and the man sprinted to the car and took off, Norman said.

The suspect struck one car, and a few blocks later lost control of the cruiser, which struck a utility pole, and crossed two lanes of oncoming traffic before coming to rest in a yard.

Officers apprehended the suspect after a short foot chase.

Bank employees said the man didn't show a weapon when he approached a teller cage but said, "You know what I want."

Returning miners stop at pickets

WASHINGTON- Striking mine construction workers expanded their picket lines in seven states Wednesday, keeping more than 40,000 United Mine Workers miners from working after their own 10week walkout.

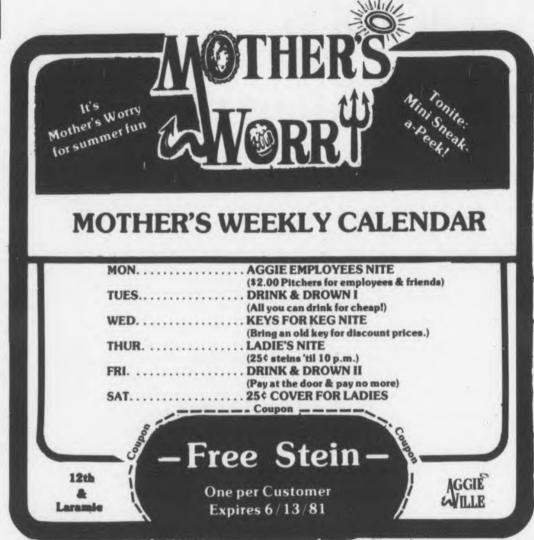

Picketing was reported in Alabama, Illinois, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia. In Washington, talks between the strikers and the Association of Bituminous Contractors (ABC) were stalled, according to a statement.

"Based on the present situation, we are not hopeful that an agreement will be reached anytime soon," it said.

The most widespread mine closings Wednesday occurred in West Virginia, Illinois and Alabama, where construction locals stepped up picketing in response to the negotiating deadlock. Union and company officials said more than 14,000 miners in West Virginia, 12,400 in Illinois and 8,000 in Alabama were off the job.

Some 160,000 UMW miners returned to work Monday after their union settled a 72-day strike against the Bituminous Coal Operators Association. UMW construction workers, who negotiate separately, struck March 27 along with the miners.

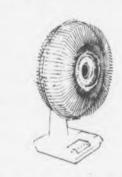

It might be a good idea to dig out your umbrella before hiking to class today. Partly cloudy skies are expected, with widely scattered thunderstorms. Highs are forecast for the low-to-mid 80s.

ZIP-plus-four plan needs work

ZIP-plus-four is ridiculous.

First of all, alternatives to nine-digit ZIP codes are available. In Canada, the postal code alternates letters and numbers and is said to even designate to which side of the street the letter or package is to be delivered. The U.S. Postal Service either rejected this alternative or did not investigate it fully. One wonders if misplaced national pride-or fear of copying a "lesser" nation-did not go into this decision.

Secondly, nine digits are difficult to remember. And of the three configurations tested by an independent agency, five-four (as the ZIP-plus-four code would be), four-five and three-two-four (as Social Security numbers), the five-four was shown to be the most difficult to remember.

Calling a toll-free number for a ZIP-plus-four number will cost more in labor costs (clerical time) than does the use of the current ZIP code directory. Also, the costs of a toll-free number to the Postal Service must ultimately be paid by consumers. How much is this toll-free number with its probable high use worth to the telephone company?

The benefits of the new system to large companies will not outweigh the inconvenience to the rest of us. A decreased cost to one service doesn't seem to be worth the increased costs (at least during the conversion phase) to the rest of the country. Remember the Postal Service is essentially a monopoly.

Outmoded industrial systems do not need to be sustained. However, there is also a question of appropriate technology.

The community post office is still a reality in many areas. Mail continues to be hand-delivered to most businesses and residences.

Probably as many people complain about the Postal Service as complain about the weather; probably many of these complaints are justified. However, the service in this country is said to be the best in the world. The Postal Service's desire to improve its service is to be commended.

But surely a nine-digit ZIP code is not the best alternative.

The malady of a mall

The fight is on.

The winner's trophy is a showcase of Manhattan residents who do what Manhattanites seem to do best-spend money.

The conflict that is beginning to rear its capitalistic head stems from possible plans to build a large shopping mall west of Manhattan near the Municipal Airport. At this point, plans are under study and could be labeled "tentative.

But even now city and county officials are foreseeing problems.

At a Downtown Redevelopment Board meeting Wednesday morning, anxiety was expressed about the future success of downtown redevelopment plans if a mall were built west of town.

For frustrated Manhattan merchants, this location for a mall could serve as an effective barrier from Junction City and Fort Riley shoppers.

Discussion of the project already has officials worried about the reaction it will yield from major Manhattan stores-merchants that they are desperately trying to solicit commitments from for the proposed downtown mall.

The project should draw attention and concern from downtown merchants. The city has been holding the promising carrot of downtown redevelopment in front of their faces for too long-with too few results.

Kania walks political tightrope

These days Stanislaw Kania is hardly in a position to be envied.

The Polish Communist Party leader is being pushed by hard-liners in the Kremlin and their Warsaw Pact allies to crack down on the "counter-revolutionary" activities that have rocked his country in recent months.

Any reluctance by Kania to do so could mean Soviet military intervention into Poland.

Yet Kania knows full too well that Lech Walesa's Solidarity movement has captured the spirit of Polish people and to ignore the union causes by subscribing to the Kremlin wishes would be akin to political suicide at home.

If ever a man could be damned if he did and damned if he didn't it is certainly Kania.

Yet Kania finds himself in the almost unique position of being embraced by both communist and Solidarity leaders. For to the latter, Kania's government presents itself as a barrier against a military invasion. And to the former. Kania is a barrier against a worker revolt orchestrated by Solidarity.

The drama continued last weekend when Kania made a speech before an emergency gathering of the Polish Central Committee. The Associated Press said the speech appeared to be Kania's toughest since taking office last summer.

According to the Associated Press, Kania lashed out at the "filthy wave of anti-Sovietism and anti-communism" in Poland, including desecration of Soviet war memorials, rising crime and atauthorities.

Kania also said it was not enough for the Polish people to pledge loyalty to socialism and the Pact-confronting Warsaw Walesa's established contention that the union has no plan to overthrow the Polish Communist Party.

Yet, while the Warsaw Pact nations blame Solidarity for Poland's domestic problems, Kania took time out in his speech to trying to stifle two rebellious cuddle the Solidarity cause-pledging to continue the reforms that have been introduced since Solidarity was created.

And so it goes for Kania. Each day he scurries from one end of the teeter-totter to the other, seeing that neither side tips too far in the wrong direction.

What happens in Poland in the next few days promises to be interesting. Many of the Kremlin's charges see Kania as being far too moderate and would like to see him

If he is forced to step down, what then? Walesa, to be sure, is the true representative of the Polish people and any right-wing successor to Kania would surely run into resistance from the so-far tacks on police and other state nonviolent Solidarity. Would the successor call in the Soviet troops?

It would appear Kania has a future in the Polish government. Consider the following: The Kremlin, one would think, knows an invasion would incite negative world public opinion-especially with Soviet troops still fighting in Afghanistan. And for those in Moscow not particularly bothered by world opinion, the fact the Soviet Union would be involved in countries might skuttle an invasion. For what if a third country chose to rebel? And then a fourth?

To replace Kania at this time would appear risky at best. Kania's position in Poland, though shaky, appears secure. A real paradox in a paradoxical nation.

City optimistic about receiving federal grant

Collegian Reporter

Manhattan's chances of getting an Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG) are good, Bernd Foerster, chairman of the Downtown Redevelopment Advisory Board said during a board meeting Wednesday.

The city was turned down for a grant the last time it applied, but Foerster said he thought this year's application, to be submitted in August, would bring different results.

Close cooperation between those in Manhattan drawing up the proposal and the selection board in Washington, D.C. is a primary reason for the city's good chances. Foerster said. The fact that Manhattan is a relatively small town will work to its advantage because large cities have been getting the grant for a long time, Foerster

The UDAG program has not been effected by President Reagan's budget cuts because the program takes a "small amount" of federal money and "generates large sums of private money, Foerster said.

A hearing date was set for July 21 in order to have the UDAG application ready to submit in August, if the Manhattan City Manager proceeds with plans.

PROGRESS OF the downtown redevelopment design project was also discussed at the meeting in a report prepared by Gary Stith, coordinator of downtown redevelopment.

A completed design of the project is ready

By PATTY PROSSER guidelines. According to the report, there is a meeting scheduled for the third week of this month to begin work on street improvements and pre-design for several store

> A commercial rehabilitation loan program draft being considered for the project was also discussed, but not voted upon. The program, which has been used in other Kansas towns, operates from the sale of municipal bonds, according to Foerster.

> The bonds, which are sold to independent investors, are tax deductable and can be worked through local banks, he said.

> THE LOANS would be used primarily for exterior improvements in the downtown area. Foerster said the areas under current consideration are: the central business district; south of the downtown area; and Aggieville.

> Both the Aggieville and business district would have separate specific building guidelines while the area south of downtown would have no guidelines. Three separate types of loans would be avaliable-with one being geared especially for the renter wanting to make improvements, Foerster said. The interest rate for the loan was not set but was estimated to be between 13 and 14 percent.

> In other action, a decision was made to not recommend an amendment to the zoning ordinance that would allow banners displayed in the downtown area.

According to Stith, the City Commission had wanted to permit the placement of and waiting on the approval of design banners on a temporary basis to support the Kaw Valley Rodeo. This would have required an amendment to the present zoning ordinance.

Downtown Redevelopment Board members said they felt the banners would create a cluttered look in the downtown area and said that amending the ordinance might cause an overuse of it.

Board Member Charles Hosteteer said he felt the banners would give Manhattan a "small-town look."

THE LAST TOPIC discussed was that of a possible shopping mall to be located west of Manhattan near the Municipal Airport. Dial Construction Company, the Omaha, Neb. based firm that proposed the building of the mall, is expected to file a rezoning request for the area in the near future.

Foerster said he was concerned about the loss of farmland that might incur if a developer was allowed to build the shopping center, and questioned the impact it would have on getting commitments from Manhattan merchants for the proposed downtown mall.

Rosalys Rieger, a member of the redevelopment board and a county commissioner, said she felt that the city and county should be expected to work together on this as much as possible.

"The county is also concerned about the farmland and the use of it," she said.

KPL wins contested contract suit, court denies natural gas price hike

TOPEKA (AP)-Pleasing both utility and and Mesa informed the company in utility regulator, the Kansas Supreme Court handed down a decision Wednesday that will mean a savings of $24 million to more than 100,000 natural gas customers in the state.

The high court said that the Mesa Petroleum Co. could not legally raise its prices under a 1978 federal law and terminate contracts for supplying natural gas to Kansas Power and Light Co., which had refused to pay the higher rates.

The decision represented a major victory for KPL. The big Topeka based electricity generator and gas distributor had argued that if the Amarillo, Tex., firm was allowed to invoke a price escalator clause under the Natural Gas Policy Act it would cost its gas customers more than $24 million over a period of years.

In a unanimous opinion deciding two related cases, the high court held, "The contract price was not escalated, the attempted termination of the contract was ineffective and the (Grant and Clark Meade) district court's judgment is affirmed."

A DECISION IN A suit involving Energy Reserves Group Inc. of Wichita against KPL was not among opinions handed down Wednesday. There was no explanation from the court why the Energy Reserves case wasn't decided at the same time, although all three cases were argued May 5.

Mesa had sought to increase the price of part of the natural gas it supplies to KPL under 1970 contracts from $1.92 per thousand cubic feet on Nov. 9, 1978, to $2.078 on Dec. 1, 1978, under an escalator clause it claimed was triggered by the federal act.

KPL declined to pay the increased cost,

February 1979 that it was terminating the supplemental contracts in dispute.

Mesa went into court to get the contracts terminated, but lost and then appealed to the Supreme Court.

THE HIGH COURT said Mesa "seems to discount or overlook" the language of the federal law which it said doesn't apply to the KPL contracts as the Amarillo firm tried to interpret it.

"The contract by its terms does not provide for price escalation upon enactment of the NGP Act ..." said the opinion, written by Justice Alex Fromme.

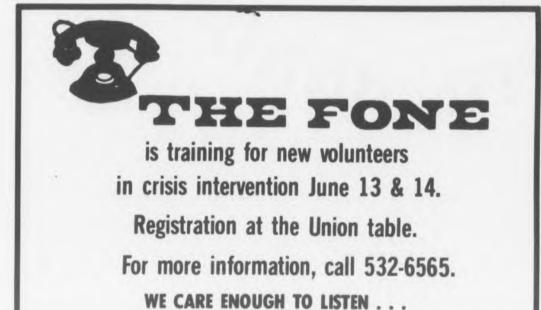

The Mesa ruling, although an unquestionable victory for KPL, failed to address the 1979 Kansas Natural Gas Price Protection Act which had been cited by utility lawyers during their arguments before the court.

But the court still has another gas pricing case to act upon, and it could provide the backdrop for a constitutional test of the Kansas law.

THE DECISION WAS among 17 rulings made public by the state high court on Wednesday from cases it heard during the first week of May.

Notably absent from the docket was an opinion for a case marking the historic first appearance of television and still cameras into the Supreme Court chambers. It was considered a potentially landmark case because the justices were asked to overturn a century-old law prohibiting husband or wife from suing each other for damages from of injuries in an accident.

U.S. halts jet shipment to Israel after violation of agreement ministration Wednesday suspended the reporters on the decision said Israel also is shipment of four sophisticated F-16 jet fighters to Israel after determining that the Israeli attack on an Iraqi nuclear power plant may have violated a U.S.-Israeli agreement.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. told Sen. Charles Percy (R-Ill.) chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, that "a substantial violation" of the 1952 agreement under which the United States has sold arms to Israel "may have occurred."

matter," Haig wrote.

The text of the letter was released at the White House and the State Department.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said President Reagan, whom he earlier described as "shocked" at Israel's destruction of the reactor on Sunday, "personally approved the text of the

A State Department official who briefed scheduled to receive delivery on major equipment items starting in July

But the official, who asked not to be identified, said "no decision has been made on anything but the four aircraft.'

He added that a "whole range of options" would be available to the administration if the review of the Israeli attack concludes that Israel was in substantial violation of Haig said that the administration would "We are conducting a review of the entire consider in its review the Israeli contention that the attack "was necessary for its defense because the reactor was intended to produce atomic bombs and would become operational very soon and that, once it became operational, an attack would have been impossible because it could not have been carried out without exposing the inhabitants of Baghdad to massive radioactive lethal fallout."

The 1952 Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement governs U.S. military sales to Israel. It provides Israeli assurance that the equipment will be used solely to maintain internal security, "legitimate self-defense," defense of the region, or in a United Nations security arrangement. It states Israel's assurance that "it will not undertake any act of aggression against any other state."

The United States already has delivered 53 of 75 F-16s it has agreed to sell Israel as well as 25 of 40 more sophisticated F-15 fighters.

Both types of advanced aircraft, which are basically the same types flown by the U.S. Air Force, took part in the Sunday attack on the Iraqi reactor, according to U.S. officials.

Officials suspect sauce in illnesses

Contaminated barbeque sauce is the suspected cause of 18 illnesses following a veterinarians conference Tuesday night at the All Seasons Motel, where approximately 320 people attended a poolside barbeque.

Between two and six hours after the meal, two males and a female began complaining of diarrhea, nausea, vomiting and cramps and were taken to St. Mary Hospital according to Charles Murphy, director of the Manhattan-Riley County Health Department.

The three were still hospitalized Wednesday afternoon but a hospital spokesperson refused to give any additional information about the victims.

The other 15 people-including two who ate at the All Seasons restaurant but did not attend the conference-complained of similiar symptoms, but apparently did not enter the hospital.

Murphy and Martin Mechtly, supervisor of environmental health, began an investigation into the cause of the illnesses

Tuesday night. "We are not saying it (the illnesses), was or was not food poisoning, but we are investigating with the strong possibility of staphylococcla," Murphy said. Staphylococcla is a parasitic bacteria occuring in clusters.

The conference dinner consisted of barbeque beef, potato salad, cole slaw, baked beans, corn-on-the-cob and ice tea. Mechtly said the barbeque sauce on the beef may have triggered the illness, although other possibilities are being investigated.

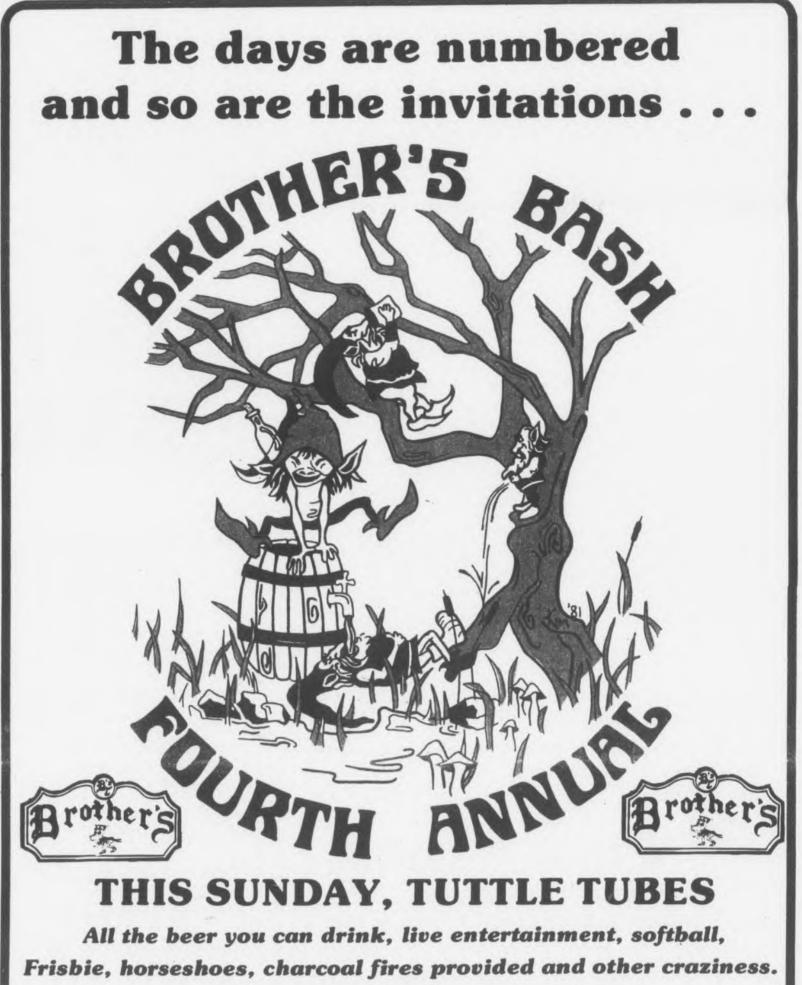

The meal was prepared at the motel, but the barbeque sauce was made outside the Manhattan area, Murphy said.

Food poisoning is being investigated because, according to Murphy, "the symptoms the people complained of are very similar to symptoms occurring in food poisoning. The latency period following the time of the meal is a very good reason for us to suspect food poisoning."

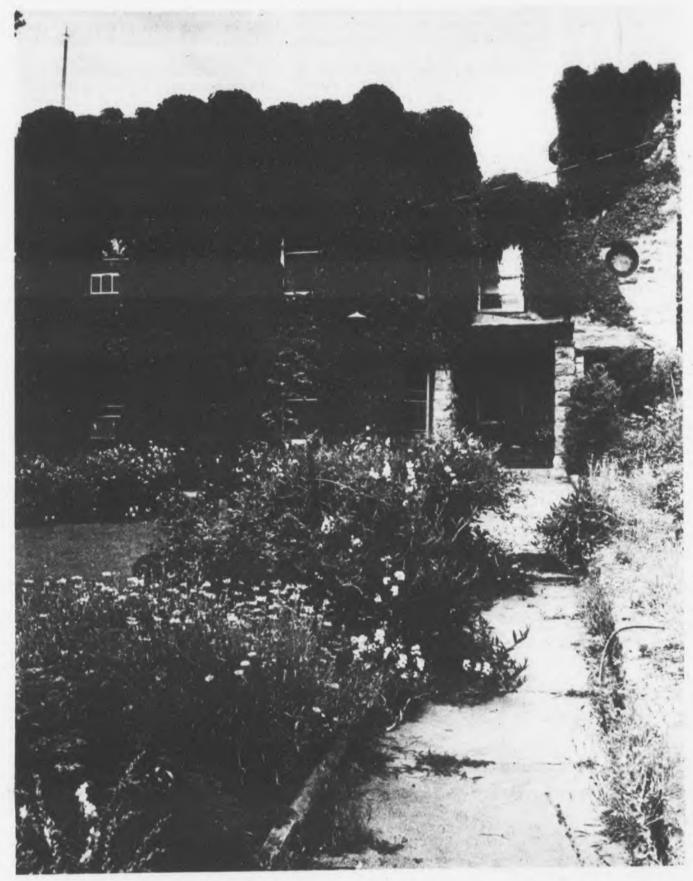

Motel food manager Dick Walters said he is investigating other possibilities also: "We are checking on where these people ate lunch to see if there could be another source of their illness. We are waiting for the final results of the investigation before taking any action one way or another," he said. The investigation will continue and should be concluded Friday, according to Murphy.

Completed in 1904 by Judge Kimble, "Kimble Kastle" has become one of the more unusual apartment dwellings in Manhattan. The residents are often college students who he arof vacancies by word-

Castle provides uncommon dwelling

Beneath a tall tower topped by an old weathervane, set in the stone wall shaded by ivy, a window peeks out at a garden filled with a multitude of flowers. The window overlooks an area that could have once hidden knights in armor and mystical unicorns.

From that window, I sit and dream of waiting for my prince, or watch the garden grow, or sometimes just hide from civilization. Most of the time, I tend to forget that I am a K-State student. If only for the summer, I am a princess, living in Manhattan's local castle, "Kastle Kimble."

Deciding I could not spend another summer alone at home in Utah, I figured I'd better make plans in Manhattan.

Apartment hunting was made easier by a friend, Gayla, who said she was looking for a roommate and had already made apartment

I don't know how Gayla, my roommate, heard of the place-but she did. She met Mr. Richards, our landlord, and asked him if there would be an apartment available for the summer. He said yes, and before Gayla had either summer plans or a roommate, she said she

As far as I knew, I'd be living in an old house. All I cared about was that I'd have a place to live, and someone to live with We both are content with our apartment-Gayla loves the woodwork and is intrigued by the structure and mystery of the whole place. I favor the windows, each complete with a window seat, perfect for reading Harlequin romances while waiting for my Prince Charming to come for me.

I don't read Harlequin romances though, and even if my prince came, he'd have to ring the bell downstairs. Even then, we don't usually hear it-visitors generally have to telephone us first, so that we can listen for them.

Our landlord immediately made us feel at home. He is an industrious man, and fatherly. Except for the fact that he originally thought my name was Dill MacIntosh, we get along fine. Gayla and I often eat breakfast looking out our kitchen windows at "Mr. Richards," who is almost always working in his vast garden. The place flourishes with flowers, trees, and shrubbery, while ivy on the house surrounds the windows.

Isolated from the street by a stone wall and tall shrubbery, the castle is very dark and still at night. Separated from the busy sounds of Manhattan and Poyntz Ave., Kastle Kimble's silence is intensified after the sun sets. Coming home from work at night, I am sometimes frightened by the ominous shadows I'm sure must be made by the same tall trees I admire in the daytime.

I remained pretty brave until going to the Riley County Historical Society to find out more about my summer residence. An article there claimed previous residents believed the late Judge Sam Kimble, builder of Kastle Kimble still haunted the house. Terrific.

The article did say that the ghost was a happy one. That provided me with some comfort. Judge Sam Kimble was highly thought of by Manhattan residents in the late 1800's. He began building Kimble Kastle in 1894 and it was completed in 1904.

The "castle" originally had 15 rooms, including two hallways. Five of those were bedrooms, separated into apartments by Mr. Richards soon after he purchased the castle. There are stained glass windows, and marble fireplaces, and hardwood floors of oak and walnut.

The original estate had 1200 acres, a horsebarn, a tennis court, and ice house, a blacksmith shop, a carriage house, and two flags constantly flying from the two towers, or turrents, on top of the castle.

Now the place is not without conveniences. In our apartment we have a refrigerator, a small stove, a dishwasher(Gayla), and a small room with a sink and toilet. The shower is in the bathroom across the hall that we share with another apartment. Laundry facilities consist of Woolite in the kitchen sink.

Our apartment has three main rooms. The front door is in my bedroom, dominated by an antique four-poster bed, which leads to Gayla's bedroom, doubling as our living room. Next to the living room is our kitchen and dining area.

Gayla's bedroom-living room is our own creation. Because our landlord only had one bed in the apartment, we had originally planned on alternately sleeping on the couch. But Mr. Richards found us a twin bed in his "barn" above the garage. There were a few spiders dangling off the bedsprings and mattress, merely minor details compared to our problem of where to put the bed.

Mr. Richards set the bed up in my bedroom, but Gayla and I decided that to get to the other rooms, the bed would have to go elsewhere. Now, in the living room, it serves also as a daybed and couch. If Gayla leaves her closet door open, the bed is not so obvious.

The imperfections in "our place," make it more perfect to us. Mr. Richards has posted his rules: no overnight guests, no boys in girls' rooms or no girls in boys' rooms, no eating in sleeping areas, and more, but we have found him to be a very understanding man.

Curiousity drove me downstairs to talk to Mr. Richards about the history of Kimble Castle. Three sisters (the Moores) bought the castle from the Kimbles in 1918, Mr. Richards and his wife bought it in 1943.

I was a little disappointed when Mr. Richards said there weren't any secret rooms or tunnels. He had boarded up the small rooms in the towers because at one time, kids used to get on the roof of the house, crawl in the towers and through trap doors to scare the Moore sisters.

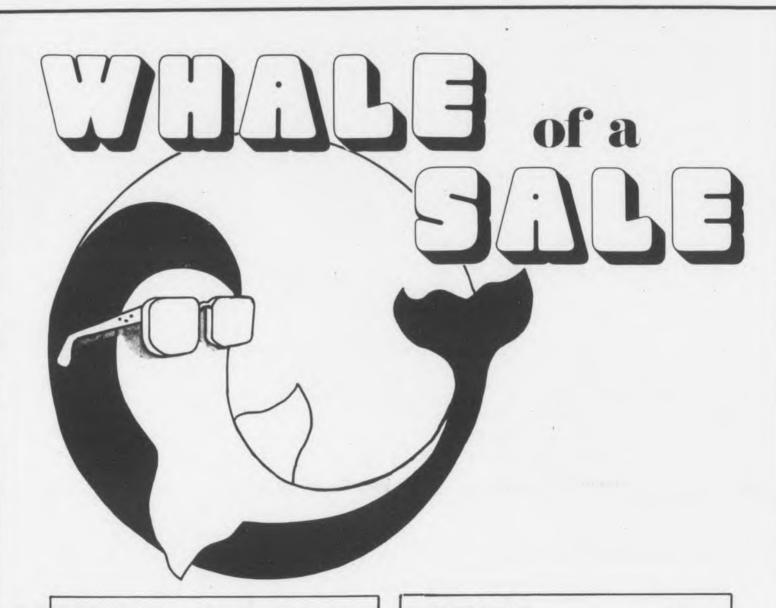

The stone archway at the beginning of the driveway was once located at an entranceway to a Manhattan grade school. It was taken down and each stone was numbered by Judge Kimble, and then erected—each stone in numbered sequence—by the Moore sisters.

Mr. Richards told me he had been renting apartments for about 35 years, and he still keeps in touch with a lot of his former tenants. He rents four apartments in the house and has always had close friendships with his tenants. He gave me a kiss and a hug when I said goodnight, and I knew why this place was so special

Something about Mr. Richards and his unique house have cast a spell on me. Sometimes I'm living centuries ago, or I'm in a world of my own. Most of the time, I forget I am a student.

I am a princess this summer, living in a wonderful castle.

Senate passes cuts: eligibility tighter in food stamp program

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate rejected deeper cuts in the nation's food stamp program next year and approved a plan Wednesday that calls for substantial reductions proposed by the Reagan administration.

Agriculture Committee Chairman Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) and other conservative senators pushed the rejected cuts in an effort to nearly double the reductions recommended by Helms' committee. Similar cuts are pending in the House.

As it neared a final vote on the bill, the Senate also agreed to exempt the elderly and handicapped from tighter eligibility standards.

The proposal, drafted by the Senate Agriculture Committee, includes many program changes the Reagan administration says will "target assistance to those who need help in meeting nutritional needs" while still making mandatory reductions in federal spending.

"IT'S NOT THAT WE haven't cut the food stamp program," said Sen. Bob Dole (R-Kan.) chairman of the nutrition subcommittee. "We've cut it more than a few of the things that affect big business.

"It's not a popular program," Dole said. "The people in the program probably don't vote, but they have a need."

In accepting the bill, which will pare some $1.8 billion from the food stamp budget next year, the Senate did agree to exempt the elderly and handicapped from tigher eligibility requirements that would have knocked some 100,000 of them from the food stamp rolls. Nearly 2 million senior citizens and handicapped now receive food stamps.

As it stands, the bill will still mean some 900,000 fewer food stamp recipients next year and lower benefits for millions more. About 23 million Americans now receive food stamps.

REPUBLICANS ON THE Senate Banking Committee, meantime, slashed federal housing subsidies by more than $20 billion in an 8-7 vote along party lines.

The House Education and Labor Committee reluctantly approved plans Wednesday to cut $12 billion from child nutrition, Head Start, school aid, assistance to the handicapped and public employment programs. The cuts would eliminate the Youth Conservation Corps and student loans to families making more than $25,000 a year.

Chairman Carl Perkins (D-Ky.) said he, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and Rules Committee Chairman Richard Bolling (D-Mo.) guaranteed him "that we will be allowed several votes on the House floor in order to reverse some of the worst cuts."

The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee approved a $5 billion education authorization for the next two years that would consolidate many programs into block grants as proposed by Reagan.

Manson appears out of isolation for work detail and talk show

NEW YORK (AP)-Charles Manson, kept in virtual isolation since his conviction for nine brutal cult murders in 1969, is "coming out" of seclusion.

Recently assigned a work detail as the Vacaville, Calif., prison chapel janitor, he soon may be allowed to eat with other inmates, officials say. And on Friday, he'll make his first network TV appearance as Tom Snyder's guest on NBC's "Tomorrow Coast to Coast.

Manson is serving a life sentence at the medium-security medical facility where he gets regular therapy. Originally sentenced to death for the murders of actress Sharon Tate and eight other southern Californians, he got a life sentence when the state's death penalty law was abolished in 1972.

For some, the name Manson is synonymous with the violence of the '60s drug culture, but in announcing the interview, NBC producers noted that many young people have never heard of him.

"There are many young people today who unfortunately do not know who Charles Manson is or what the drug culture, taken to its extreme, can do to people," said executive producer Roger Ailes.

Basketball camp: Hartman emphasizes full danielitals and tour plants and tour Hartman emphasizes fundamentals and team play;

Good shot selection, good intensity and a good shooting touch are terms K-State basketball fans may have overheard many times from Jack Hartman, head basketball coach. For many of the 400 young men participating in the 1981 Jack Hartman Basketball Camp, these are terms they will never forget.

The camp, now in its 11th year, attracts boys ages 8 thru 17, from states including Illinois, Colorado, Nebraska and Oklahoma, as well as Kansas, according to Hartman.

During the camp, Hartman and his staff attempt to improve on the basketball skills that the boys arrive with. For a fee of $180 per camper, instruction is given emphasizing basic fundamentals and team play, he said.

"We have a real good basketball camp. It's a real positive thing. It can be a good experience in being away from home for the first time. That's a meaningful experience in itself," Hartman said.

The camp session that began Sunday, will continue through Friday afternoon. There are three different five-day sessions a camper can attend. The next session will begin this Sunday, with the last session scheduled to start Sunday, June 21.

When players arrive at the camp they are assigned to teams. These teams are then grouped to form leagues. The league play continues until the All-Star games are played on the final day of camp.

"We group them according to their age, size and ability. We don't want any of them to be overmatched. This way it's fun," Hartman said.

While at camp, many mornings are used for practicing drills, leaving the evenings for scrimmages between teams. These scrimmages are scheduled to take place between 6:30 and 9:00 p.m., at both the Manhattan High School and Manhattan Middle School.

With 400 eager young men taking part in the camp, Hartman said he has to depend on coaching help from others on his staff.

"I try to get around and work with groups in the morning. It's hard to get on a one-onone situation.

"Every one (of the boys) is a potential Kansas State student. I don't know how many are potential Kansas State basketball players. We don't use it (the camp) as a recruiting tool," Hartman said.

Aside from occasional complaints about the food and a lack of female companionship, the boys speak well of their coach at Kansas University)," Hardy said.

learning experience.

According to Jack Chapman, age 14, Hartman has helped him improve his rebounding and shooting. "He talks to us and tells us how to shoot," he said.

James Hardy, age 13, said he wanted to attend Hartman's camp to improve his playing skills.

"I came here because I thought he was a better coach than Owens (head basketball

"H-Block" Hunger Strikers

The heroic H-Block hunger strikers, those brave springs of Ireland who have chosen the glorious way of martyrdom in their struggle to liberate their people from the yoke of British imperialism, convey the message that the people will be victorious over the world-devouring imperialism. Certainly, world imperialism will try to suppress the liberation struggle with all its might; therefore, unity of all the people of the world is an inevitable necessity.

It is in this respect that in a message addressed to the People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran (PMOI), Shin-fin, the political branch of the Irish Republican Army (IRA) asked the revolutionary people of Iran to demonstrate their revolutionary worth against British imperialism in the streets of Tehran. The reactionary authority in the Iranian government spied their "anti-imperialist" (!) policies and-because of superficial support of the Irish people-strongly rejected the PMOI's request to organize a demonstration of people in Tehran.

Nevertheless, PMOI shows their support of liberation struggles around the world by exposing their ruling reactionaries' deceitful nature, by making public their actions, such as the shameful $2.8 billion Talbot deal or the sending of a cultural mission to Ireland-via England!-at the same time.

The Moslem Student Society (USA) and supporters of PMOI declare that:

1) We support the heroic struggle of the Irish people and the IRA.

2) We pay homage to the H-Block martyrs and fully support the just demand of the H-Block hunger-strikers.

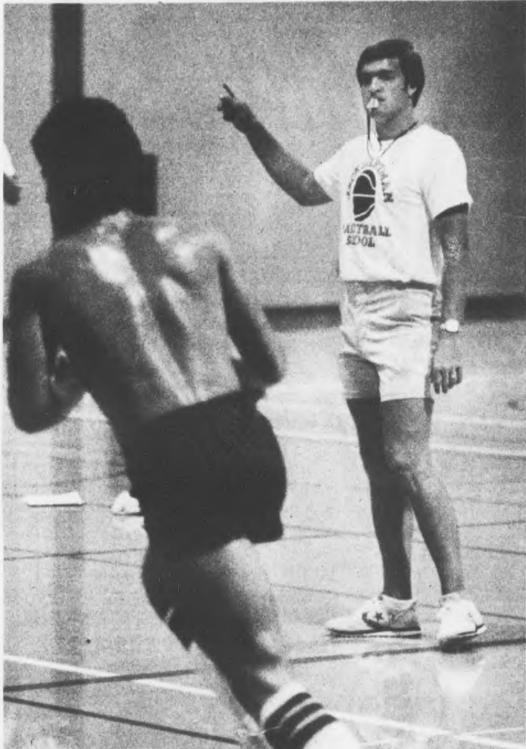

3) We consider the Iranian authorities' refusal to allow the PMOI to organize a march to be against the international unity of people.

4) We consider the $2.8 billion Talbot deal to be a betrayer of the Irish martyrs, and demand its immediate cancellation.

5) The people of Ireland will certainly fight until complete victory over imperialism is achieved.

OSHA fines aircraft firm for safety violations and Health Administration (OSHA) has levied a total of $18,000 in fines against a Wichita aircraft instrument company and ordered the firm to correct working conditions that allegedly exposed employees to radioactive contamination.

Jeff Spahn, OSHA area director, announced the fines and citations against Aircraft Instrument and Development Inc. (AID) at a news conference Wednesday.

He said the case was one of the largest OSHA has ever handled in Kansas in terms of the number of violations, the amount of fines and the extent of the investigation.

The three largest fines were $4,000 each. They resulted from the health portion of the investigation and involved what OSHA alleged to be mishandling of radium-coated aircraft instrument dials.

OSHA inspectors charged AID failed to properly survey work areas to determine radioactive contamination levels, accepted incoming instruments without checking them and segregating radioactive dials, and

A $3,500 FINE was levied for what OSHA alleged to be AID's practice of placing radium-coated dials in containers that weren't labeled with warnings and notations of the amount of radiation present.

Of the remaining $2,500 in fines, $1,100 pertained to equipment safety violations and $1,400 involved allegations of inadequate employee training and a lack of protective clothing for workers transfering radioactive solvent materials.

Bill Gott, an AID spokesman, said the allegations were "a surprise." He said the company would appeal the OSHA decision.

The federal investigation was sparked by a report from Dr. Karl Z. Morgan, a private consultant hired by lawyers for five former AID employees who have filed federal lawsuits and claims seeking more than $25 million for injuries they claim they suffered because of exposure to radiation at AID.

MORGAN CONDUCTED a surprise inspection of the facility on Feb. 18. He was accompanied by U.S. marshals armed with a court order allowing him to check levels of radioactivity and working conditions at the Radioactivity is present in the plant because AID strips, repaints and repairs used aircraft instruments, some of which have dial faces painted with radium to make them glow in the dark.

Scientists have determined that very small amounts of radium can cause cancer when inhaled or ingested.

"The employees were not aware of the health hazards associated with exposure to such materials," the OSHA report said.

Investigators found AID workers weren't trained in proper handling procedures for the storage, transfer or use of the radioactive materials to which they were

State may yield its seventh largest wheat crop

TOPEKA (AP)-Kansas farmers expect to harvest the seventh largest wheat crop in history despite taking a loss of 83.4 million bushels in anticipated production during the month of May, the Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said Wednesday.

The agency's new estimate, based on conditions existing June 1, places the 1981 crop at 329.40 million bushels. One month ago, the forecast was for 412.80 million bushels.

M.E. Johnson, who heads the reporting service, said the freeze that hit portions of the state the weekend of May 10 was a major factor in the reduced estimate.

"The freeze in northern and western areas of the state on May 9, 10, and 11, caused heavy damage to the crop," Johnson said.
"The freezing of anthers (blooms) during the flowering stage of development resulted in sterility of spikelets or whole heads.

"THE GOOD GENERAL rains during the month only partly offset the disastrous effects of the freeze."

Johnson said the crop has developed faster than normal, with virtually all acreage headed by June 1 and nearly half turning color by June 8.

He said a few test cuttings were made during the first week of June, but moisture content was high at 16 to 19 percent.

But rapid harvest progress commenced June 8 after hot, windy weather dried the wheat over the weekend, Johnson said.

He said that on the basis of the average mid-May price of wheat, $3.71 per bushel, the month's loss in anticipated production would amount to more than $309 million.

The latest estimate indicates the abandoment of 700,000 acres of wheat during the month of May. The anticipated yield, pegged at 32 bushels per acre May 1, is now down to 27 bushels per acre.

"CROP PROSPECTS deteriorated during May in all districts except the south central and southeast," Johnson said.

"This area was especially dry on May 1 and the generous rains during the month helped to regain some of the potential.

"Many counties in the southwestern district suffered unusally heavy hail losses. "In some areas of the frost-damaged wheat, some farmers cut their wheat for use as either hay or silage. In other cases, it's still a wait and see situation to determine if some of the fields are worth combining."

Johnson said surface moisture supplies currently are considered generally adequate and subsoil moisture is short to adequate.

He said pastures improved dramatically during the month because of the general rains and cool temperatures.

Nationally, Johnson said, winter wheat production is expected to reach a record 2.01 billion bushels, down 3 percent from a month ago, but 6 percent higher than last

As the ninth pick of the 1981 NBA draft, Rolando Blackman joins an elite group of K-Staters who have gone in the first round of

He joins Chuckie Williams as the only other Wildcat drafted in the opening round.

The Dallas Mavericks, the worst team in the league last year with a 15-67 record, made Blackman their second choice in the first round. He will join Mark Aguirre, a forward from DePaul University, Minn. whom the Mavericks took as the first pick of Blackman, along with several other of the top selections, was at the draft headquarters in New York when the NBA commissioner announced the Dallas choice.

"I'm really elated," Blackman said in an interview with the Topeka Capital-Journal. "I hope we can turn it around and make this team a winner."

THE "WE" Blackman referred to is Aguirre. While Aguirre was the cream of the draft, he was extremely generous in his praise for Blackman:

"It's great," said Aquirre, who played with Blackman on the 1980 Olympic team.

"I played forward and Rolando played guard on that team, and he's a great, great player-I just can't say enough about him," Aguirre said in the interview.

Blackman returned the praise. "He's a dynamite player, he can do it all. This gives us a chance to get it going. We will be like building blocks. It may take a few years, but when the winning starts it will be a great feeling," Blackman said in the interview.

DALLAS, WHICH had two first round choices and first choice in the second round, was forced to play the "wait-and-see" game, according to the Topeka story.

"We had a scare this morning. With all this manipulating, we were afraid we were going to lose Blackman," Dick Motta, Dallas coach, was quoted as saying. "He is a great quality person. He always seem to get the job done. Wherever he goes, his team always seems to win."

But, the Mavericks did get him. Most of the picks before Blackman were forwards. Isiah Thomas of Indiana was the only guard selected prior to Blackman.

In Blackman, the Mavericks gain a player with a fine statistical history. He was the best shooting guard in Big-8 history—hitting over 51 percent of his shots. He had a career free-throw percentage of 73.8, and averaged 15.2 points per game at K-State.

He averaged five rebounds per game, had a total of 320 assists, was the second leading scorer in K-State history and only fouled out twice in 121 games.

IN ADDITION to Aguirre, 1; Thomas, 2; and Blackman, 9; the other top ten draft picks included: Buck Williams of Maryland to New Jersey; Al Wood of North Carolina to Atlanta; Danny Vranes of Utah to Seattle; Orlando Woolridge of Notre Dame to Chicago; Steve Johnson of Oregon State to Kansas City; Tom Chambers of Utah to San Deigo; and Albert King of Maryland to New

Royals beat Toronto, 7-4

TORONTO (AP)-Amos Otis drove in four runs on four hits, including a tie-breaking two-run double in the eighth inning, and George Brett hit his first home run of the season as the Kansas City Royals handed Toronto its 10th consecutive loss with a 7-4 victory Wednesday night.

Dennis Leonard, 6-7, scattered nine hits and struck out seven without issuing a walk.

U.L. Washington walked with one out in the eighth and Brett singled off Mark Bomback, 3-5. With two away, Otis stroked a 3-0 pitch off reliever Joey McLaughlin to right-center to score both runners and break a 4-4 tie. Cesar Geronimo's single and stolen base and Willie Wilson's single gave Kansas City its final run in the ninth.

The Royals scored in the second when Otis doubled, moved to third on a single by Hal McRae and scored when McRae was trapped between first and second. They made it 2-0 in the fourth when Otis singled home Washington, who had walked and stolen second.

The Blue Jays tied it in the fifth. Al Woods led off with his first homer of the season, then Barry Bonnell singled, stole second and scored on Ernie Whitt's single.

The Royals moved back in front with a two-run sixth. With two outs, Brett smashed Bomback's first pitch over the right field fence. Willie Aikens then walked and Otis tripled. Toronto rallied to tie it again in the seventh. Garth Iorg doubled and Whitt singled for one run. Whitt reached third on a single by Danny Ainge and scored when Damaso Garcia grounded to Aikens at first and catcher Jerry Grote missed a tag of Whitt along the third base line.

Energy conservation continues to grow

K-State to receive $600,000 from Legislature

Collegian Reporter On July 1, 1981, $600,000 will be made available to K-State for conservation improvements by the Kansas Legislature, according to Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities.

In the recent budget requests for fiscal year 1982, K-State asked the Legislature for $1 million to be used for energy conservation improvements to the campus

By CAROL FRANCIS projects at the University.

That figure was determined from results of a 1979 study done by Flack and Kurtz, an energy consulting firm from New York, Cross

From a list recommended by the consulting firm, the University chose those energy conservation projects which would provide the quickest returns from investments. The projects include:

power plant; and the installation of fan timers and controls for the reduction of lighting for campus

THE $1 million request was then presented along with other K-State budget requests to the Kansas Legislature in April.

"You have to understand the budget requests," Cross said. "We (University Facilities) requested the money for annual capital improvements, which is then sent to the Board of Regents in April of one year. The regents then make their recommendations and send them back to K-State.

"The University then sends them to the Division of Budgets (in Topeka) in July. The Governor makes his recommendations to the Legislature in the fall. The Legislature usually acts on it at the end of the session and we recieve the money July 1 the year following the original request," Cross said.

The improvements could possibly be underway by spring 1982, according to Vince Cool, director of planning services.

"THE IMPROVEMENT process (for the power plant) is long and complicated, and will require the services of an energy consultant. We receive funds July 1, at which time we will begin interviews for the consultants," Cross said.

He said the improvement to the power plant will consist of in-"installation campus." serting economizers" into the stack.

"Our boiler burns gas which heats the water which is used for steam heat. The resulting flu gas is emitted from the stack at very high temperatures," he said. "The economizers will function to capture this gas which we can use to preheat the water going to the boiler."

A few years ago the use of economizers was not considered economical because the price of gasoline was lower, Cross said.

"But now the payoff will come in a short amount of time. This process will reduce the high cost of heating University buildings," he

The installation of fan timers, according to Cross, will enable the fans to be turned on and off at specific times.

"This will allow us to completely shut down some of the buildings overnight," he said. "With the ability to reduce the lighting levels, we will also be able to lower lighting levels in other buildings on

Approval of a policy change by the Kansas Board of Regents will now allow K-State faculty members an additional year to earn

The new policy allows faculty appointed at the assistant level to be tenured sometime before the end of their sixth year. If tenure is not recommended after six years, a terminal contract is offered the faculty member which ends a year after it's given.

Associate professor level tenure decisions will be made during the fifth year of service. According to the new policy, these faculty members not gaining reappointment will be terminated after the fifth year.

THE POLICY also states that faculty with "comparable service" at other schools may be awarded up to two years of credit toward probationary requirements at K-

Prior to these policy changes, a K-State faculty member was reviewed for tenure after four years of service, Owen Koeppe, University provost, said.

The tenure review process goes from the faculty member's department, to the dean, to the provost's office, and then to the University president's office for final approval, he said.

Tenure allows faculty members a procedure of appeal if their contracts are not renewed by the University, according to Koeppe.

Approval by the Faculty Affairs Committee of the proposal to exfaculty tenure was unanimous, according to Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology and chairman of the committee.

"I SEE IT as an advantage to the faculty members as well as their deciding colleagues in giving them an opportunity to further prove their abilities and talents," Johnson said.

The change was proposed by the Faculty Affairs Committee and presented to Faculty Senate and campus administrators for approval. The proposal was then issued to the Board of Regents. The policy change was made effective after the regents' approval in late May, he said.

Johnson said he knew of no opposition to the decision.

Koeppe said the six-year tenure policy is practiced nationwide, so the propsal approved for K-State is in keeping with other institutions.

It is the feeling of both the school administration and the faculty that the lengthened tenure will give faculty members more time to show their capabiliites, Koeppe said. He also stressed that the six years is a maximum, and tenure could be granted earlier.

Reagan 'can't retreat' on tax cuts

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Reagan drew the line against further compromises in his tax-cut plan Thursday even as congressional Democrats were. assailing the program as a windfall for the rich.

"I've dug in my heels on this," Reagan told a meeting of labor leaders at the White House. "I can't retreat from the 25-percent across-the-board" reductions in individual tax rates.

Reagan's remarks, relayed by the White House press office, were echoed on Capitol Hill by John E. Chapoton, assistant treasury secretary for tax policy.

As one Democrat after another on the House Ways and Means Committee described the tax plan as giving too little to lower-income Americans, Chapoton was asked whether Reagan would accept a "targeting" of more tax relief toward that group.

"No, we want this to be acrossthe-board tax relief," Chapoton replied.

REP. HAROLD FORD (D-Tenn.) wondered aloud how he could justify a vote for such a tax reduction. "Is the door closed to a compromise?" he asked.

"We certainly are not going to move from the principle of acrossthe-board tax cuts," Chapoton

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) chairman of the committee, told Chapoton, "The bottom line here is that you don't do anything with the earned-income credit (which helps working families earning less than $10,000), or with the zero-bracket amount."

By zero-bracket, Rostenkowski referred to what is better known as the standard deduction, which helps especially those with incomes under $20,000. Democrats plan to modify Reagan's proposal by raising the earned income credit and the standard deduction.

REAGAN ORIGINALLY asked for a 30-percent cut in personal tax rates over three years. He agreed reducing rates by average of 25 to too generous.

percent over three years, with the first cut starting Oct. 1. His plan would give virtually the same percentage cut in rates to rich and poor alike.

Reagan's advisers say upperincome Americans, who pay a large part of the total tax burden, should share in the relief on grounds they are more likely to invest the money in ways that will help the economy.

Several members of the Ways and Means Committee noted that in 1982, when inflation and higher Social Security taxes are considered, lower-income families would end up paying more tax than this year-even with Reagan's tax reduction.

Rep. Donald J. Pease (D-Ohio) calculated that taxpayers in the $5,000-to-$10,000 class would pay an average of $42 more in taxes in 1982; those between $20,000 and $30,000 would realize a $103 tax reduction, while those at the $200,000 level would get a $20,300 tax cut.

"I wonder how in good conscience you can ask this committee to vote for such a tax cut," Pease told Chapoton.

Reagan's proposed tax relief for businesses came under attack from committee Democrats for the last week to a compromise second straight day. Most called it

U.S. criticized as Israel's arms supplier

Arab resolution calls for isolation of Israel

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS The Arab League adopted resolutions Thursday calling for world isolation of Israel for its attack on an Iraqi nuclear reactor and criticizing the United States as the main arms supplier to the Jewish state, the state-run Iraqi news agency said

At the same time Israel called the Reagan administration's suspension of aircraft deliveries "unjust" Thursday, and the debate over Israeli use of U.S.-built planes to knock out an Iraqi nuclear reactor threatened to strain relations between the long-time allies.

"We very much regret the decision of the U.S. administration to suspend delivery of aircraft to Israel," a Foreign Ministry statement said. "We consider this unjust."

ISRAELI NEWSPAPERS noted that never before had Washington halted a delivery already in the pipeline. The newspaper Yediot Aharonot said President Reagan's order was creating "an atmosphere of crisis" between Jerusalem and Washington.

The opposition Labor Party, campaigning to oust Prime Minister Manachem Begin's government in June 30 elections, called the Washington action "grave and un-

In Iraq the agency quoted Foreign Minister Saadoun Hammadi as saying "practical measures" had been adopted "stressing the fact the United States is the main country aiding the Zionist entity (Israel) with assistance that led to the aggression."

He gave no details, but said the 21member league will call on "all countries of the world to sever relations" with Israel, which bombed the plant Sunday using U.S.supplied jet warplanes.

THERE WAS NO immediate confirmation of the report from the league, but Secretary-General Chadli Kleibi told reporters a ministerial delegation was named to go to New York, where the U.N. Security Council meets Friday to debate Arab requests for action against Israel.

Opening remarks concentrated on the need for Arab unity-in contrast to prearrival statements and strident calls in Arab newspapers to punish Israel and its arms supplier, the United States.

"The Zionist enemy would not have been able to exercise its arrogance had it not been for the regrettable disunity in Arab ranks," said Sabah al Ahmed al Jaber, Kuwait's foreign minister and chairman of the emergency session.

Six Persian Gulf states, including Kuwait, have formed a Gulf Cooperation Council seen by some Western observers as a rejection of U.S. urgings to join in a "strategic consensus." Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has said the proposal is to counter a Soviet threat to the region.

THE GULF STATES differ, however, on how their independent alliance would operate.

Western and Third World diplomats in pre-conference interviews said they thought it unlikely the league would call for military strikes against Israel or an oil embargo against the United States.

Diplomats interviewed here said they believe Iraq is at this point soliciting U.S. backing of U.N. sanctions against Israel.

Reagan on Wednesday suspended the shipment of four F-16 jet fighters scheduled for delivery to Israel and asked Congress to determine whether Israel violated a 1952 arms accord by using F-15s and F-16s in Sunday's bombing of the reactor near Bagh-

The administration said there may have been a "substantial violation" of the accord, which limits Israel's use of U.S.-supplied arms to defensive purposes. Israel maintains the reactor was intended for military use and that its attack was in self-defense.

Israeli Deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori said, "These weapons are not for parades...All our weapons are used for self-defense." He said only Israel has the right to determine what constitutes selfdefense but added the dispute should not cause a permanent disruption of relations with the United States.

Negotiations continue for firehouse

Manhattan Fire Department and K-State protected." administrators are now in serious negotiation about joining forces to construct a new fire station on campus.

"The discussions have been more serious in the last three to four months," said Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities.

Manhattan City Manager Don Harmon declined to comment on the status of the negotiations.

Presently, the city and the University have an informal agreement that if a major fire broke out on campus, the city would help fight it, Campus Fire Chief Frank Duncan said. For the city to respond, the fire would have to be a major structural threat.

"The city would only send one truck and five men no matter how dire the need was," Duncan said.

However because of the size of the K-State department. Duncan said the favor by helping the city with major fires because

The proposed site of a city-campus fire station is at the intersection of Kimball Ave. and Denison St. where the K-State Sheep Research Center is currently located.

"The (proposed) department would be staffed by city people and paid for by the city," Cross said, adding that he believed the campus needed more fire protection.

"The campus has had a fire department since mid-1940, back then the department had two engines and a ladder truck," Duncan said.

The hold up to a city-campus fire department is that the city would be operating on state property-at city's expense, Duncan said.

Currently, the campus fire station located at the University power plant is staffed with student volunteers. The students work daily 5 p.m. to 8 a.m.-as well as weekends and holidays. Duncan also said some members of the University maintenance department are trained to fight fires.

Secret White House fund confirmed

WASHINGTON- A White House official confirms that Ronald Reagan has access to a secret military fund, reportedly used for years to finance presidential perquisites.

"My assurance is that there will be no abuse of the fund and that it will remain secret," Edward Hickey, director of the White House military office, said in a recent interview.

In a book "Breaking Cover," Bill Gulley, former director of the military office, said the multimillion-dollar fund was established in 1957 to build and maintain secret sites for the president to take cover during military attack.

But Gulley said presidents have used the fund to build swimming pools and movie theaters.

But Hickey contended the fund will be used only for its official purpose in the Reagan administration.

Hickey said Reagan was informed of the fund when he was briefed on the military secrets he was inheriting upon taking office, including the codes that would begin a nuclear war. According to Gulley, President Nixon used the fund to build a $500,000 swimming pool at Camp David, and a helicopter pad and office complex and landscaping at his San Clemente, Calif. home. Nick Ruwe, a spokesman for the former president, said Thursday that "I think it's probably better not to comment."

Gulley said the late President Johnson used the fund to improve his ranch, including installing a shower and sprinkler system and converting a hangar into an air conditioned movie theater.

Kania calls for new action in Poland

WARSAW, Poland— Communist Party leader Stanislaw Kania, victorious over pro-Soviet hard-liners who sought to oust him, called for a "new plan of action" to solve the Polish crisis, and Lech Walesa indicated his independent union may be more cautious in the future.

"A new plan of action must come into being, realistic deadlines must be set, decisions must be made and people appointed responsible for implementing them," Kania told a Central Committee after surviving an attempt to force his resignation.

The Polish news agency PAP said Kania pledged firm action against "counter-revolution."

Warsaw Radio said Walesa told Solidarity members at the Warsaw auto factory there has been too much confrontation in the union's activities.

Walesa said the union's top priority should be working for a better standard of living and not for a change of government.

Thursday the Soviet Union for the first time went public with a letter attacking the Polish Communist Party leadership.

Iranian protesters condemn Bani-Sadr

BEIRUT, Lebanon- Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, stripped of his job as the nation's top military commander, left the war front Thursday and returned to Tehran where demonstrators called for his execution.

"Bani-Sadr should be tried. Bani-Sadr should be executed. Bani-Sadr is the new shah," the demonstrators chanted.

Sources in Iran described the demonstration as "peaceful, estimating the crowd at about 200 people.

A statement by Bani-Sadr was broadcast: "The duties and responsibilities which were handed over to me as the commander-inchief of the armed forces have come to an end," and called on the armed forces to "continue your honorable war against aggression" by Iraq. Bani-Sadr's aides said he had no intention of resigning as president.

Manson maintains innocence

NEW YORK- Convicted murderer Charles Manson says asking him whether he ordered anybody killed is "like asking Jesse James, 'Did you shoot somebody'?"

Manson, serving a life sentence for ordering the cult murders of actress Sharon Tate and eight others, also denied in a network interview scheduled for broadcast Saturday on NBC that he had committed murder himself.

"I didn't kill anyone," Manson told host Tom Synder in a rambling, often incoherent interview for "Tomorrow Coast To Coast."

Asked whether he ordered the killings, specifically those of Leo and Rosemary LaBianca on Aug. 10, 1969, Manson repeatedly wandered from the subject, pacing the room nervously, and never answered the question.

At his trial and ever since, Manson has consistently denied killing anyone or ordering anyone killed.

"I was born illegitimate," said Manson, who claimed to have been in jail for 34 of his 47 years. "That put me on the other side of the law. I've been an outlaw ever since."

Mostly cloudy skies, with thunderstorms are expected for today. Highs are forecast in the low to mid 80s.

Opinions

Appropriate veto

Attorneys for Gov. John Carlin and Attorney General Robert Stephan argued before the Kansas Supreme Court Tuesday over a section of the omnibus appropriations bill vetoed by Carlin. The vetoed section of the bill would provide budget limits for school districts next fiscal year.

Carlin's lawyer said the governor was correct in exercising his veto power over a non-meritorious rider to the appropriations bill. Both sides agree the governor can line-item veto a matter of appropriation. Stephan's lawyer's argument is essentially that the section is not an appropriation and therefore can't be vetoed as a line item.

At issue is whether the item in question can be included in an appropriations bill, or if it is substantive legislation more appropriately passed as a separate bill. The governor claims the inclusion of the measure amounts to "logrolling"—the inclusion of an item unlikely to win approval on its own merits in a bill unlikely to be vetoed because of its overall importance.

While these politicians argue and the Court deliberates, the school districts wait. Many districts are unable to complete contract negotiations with their teachers.

One wonders how much control the legislature wishes to hold over local school districts. Limiting spending makes sense if it is part of an overall plan to control inflation, but it does nothing to equalize the school districts.

Handicapping negotiations between school districts and their teachers simply adds to the frustration already felt by both sides.

The Court plans to rule quickly on the issue. At this point one can only hope the governor's veto will be sustained.

Nameless building

Editor,

In regard to K-State's latest longrunning farce (i.e., the failure to name the new classroom building), there is a serious side to this issue.

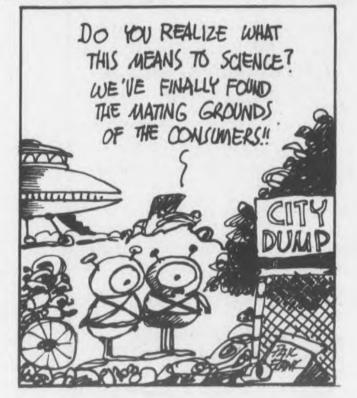

Those of us now occupying that fine building are already becoming weary of the blank stares we receive when friends and students ask us where we are now located and we say they haven't named the building yet.

Is this a Great Plains revival of a serious university at work? If the state and the University can spend millions of dollars constructing this beautiful facility-which we greatly appreciate—why could they not have set the processes for choosing a name in motion some time ago?

It's rather awkward to put "No-Name Hall" on our department informational brochures and letterheads, never knowing when it will have to be changed. Perhaps, however, this problem should have been predicted from a university that does not have a single street "Saturday Night Live," or is this sign identifying campus roadways.

Consumerism: Everyone's basic right

Consumerism-a word that leaves a bad taste in the mouths of many Americans these days.

Thanks to "Nader's Raiders" and other groups who were considered to employ "radical measures" in their quest for consumer rights, consumerism now has many connotations.

Consumer view

To a young housewife, it may mean buying generic-label foods to get more for her money. It seems to be a costly thorn in the side of advertising for big business. To a consumer enthusiast, it may mean weeks of picketing to draw legislative support for product safety. To a politician, it may trigger concern for social problems and national attitudes.

All these meanings reflect the interests of consumer groups, businesses, and government.

THE DIFFERING definitions and widespread misunderstanding of consumerism is ironic, because the actual basis for the movement is found in four simple sentences-sentences that collectively compose the declaration of rights for consumers.

In 1962, President Kennedy outlined the consumer's bill of rights to Congress. That message said all consumers have:

-The right to safety

—The right to be informed

-The right to choose -The right to redress

This declaration was not designed to merely appease the angry voices that began the new consumerism era of the 1960s. It addressed problems of health and safety that have been consumer concerns throughout the course of history.

EXTENDING BACK into the Middle Ages, St. Thomas Aquinas, Martin Luther and John Calvin all attacked deceptive selling practices and fought for "just prices."

In the America, consumer activism could be seen in Boston Harbor at a violent "Tea Party" in protest of higher prices (due to taxation) for a product. During the early part of this century U.S. consumers concern was voice in cries for pure food and drug legislation.

With such an active history, it is unfortunate that too many Americans continue to balk at (or ignore) the idea of consumerism. Perhaps this is a reaction to the radicalism of the early '60s consumer movement.

Then again, perhaps it is a unfortunate—a case of being uninformed.

Which brings me to the real point fraud.

City endures summer student population drop

A thriving community of 33,000 suddenly loses about a third of its inhabitants the second week of May. A catastrophic event? Not really, Manhattan experiences it every

Jim Rothschild, director of economic development with the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said it isn't as bad as it

"Manhattan's official population in 1980 was 32,644," Rothschild said, "but that census doesn't include the 7,000 or so students that live on campus because the campus is not within the city limits."

"The Manhattan community may serve 150,000 people, counting Fort Riley and other surrounding communities." he said. "There is a quieting down in the city when the students leave for the summer, but that picks back up when summer school starts."

SOME AGGIEVILLE merchants said they see some slowdown in the summer, but for many it is not not a drastic change.

Myron Carpenter, a Ballard Sporting Goods employee, said his business experiences a slow period about a week right after the semester is over-but business soon picks back up.

"The softball and baseball players keep us busy during the summer so we really don't slow down much," Carpenter said.

"We definitely feel the loss of 80 percent of our potential customers," Ray said.

According to Ray, some bars are hurt by the cutback in customers more than others, depending on whether the majority of patrons are students or local residents.

"We have to make adjustments for summer. We cut back on our labor and in some bars we cut back the hours," Ray said.

All of his bars are kept open all summer and some lose money, according to Ray. The loss of business may be as much as 60 percent in these bars.

"We use the summer to make any changes in the buildings and for general maintenance. In the summer we count the days for that first week of school to get here." Ray said.

LAW ENFORCEMENT shows some change during the summer also. According to a spokesman for the Riley County Police Department there is a reduction in crime because when the students leave, so do a large number of potential victims. > A significant change can also be found on campus. Jack McGuire, security and traffic, said his department experiences the same problems in the summer but with less volume.

Court urged to block 1945 water act; farmers claims laws are unconstitutional

TOPEKA (AP)-The Kansas Supreme by the Kansas Constitution. Court, in a case which could drastically affect irrigation operations in western Kansas, was urged Thursday to strike down part of the 36-year-old law governing groundwater management in the state.

The case represents the fourth time that the high court has been asked to rule on the constitutionality of all or part of the Kansas Water Appropriations Act since it was enacted in 1945.

F. Arthur Stone, a Garden City area farmer, brought the latest case to the high court, contending that a 1977 amendment to the law unconstitutionally deprives him of his right to use water beneath his property.

After listening to oral arguments from attorneys for more than an hour, the Supreme Court took the case under advisement. A decision is not expected until next month.

THE 1945 LAW gives the state the power to regulate the use of groundwater. The purpose is to prolong the life of aquifers such as the Ogallala formation which covers more than a third of western Kansas.

But the 1977 Legislature amended the law to effectively prohibit the drilling of any new water well, except for "domestic purposes," unless a permit is obtained from the chief engineer of the Division of Water Resources of the state Board of Agriculture.

Domestic use generally refers to the household water needs of people, or for watering of livestock or irrigation not exceeding two acres.

"I don't see why domestic use is excluded," argued John Howe, attorney for Stone. He said the exception "in effect gives a preference to domestic users which violates the equal protection right" granted

Because it bans water use without state permission, he contended, the 1977 amendment transfers the property rights in water beneath land from a landowner to the chief engineer. That, too, is unconstitutional, he argued.

"WHAT ABOUT THE confiscation of private property without due compensation," said Howe, former dean and now professor emeritus at Washburn University Law School and a specialist in Leland Rolfs, attorney for the Division of Water Resources, said the amendment was a proper extension of the right of the state to regulate water. He asked the court to reject

"The Water Appropriation Act is a valid exercise of police powers of the state of Kansas," he said, adding that the use of those powers does not deprive private property rights from a potential water user.

Moreover, Rolfs said, the law is necessary to prevent indiscriminate drilling and to ensure water conservation for the good of all people of Kansas. He warned that existing water rights would be disrupted and many irrigation farming operations affected if the law was struck down, eliminating most regulation of groundwater usage.

"The Tri-Sig national office was asked to reach a decision by June 1 and they did respond," Robel said.

Major factors that led to the Tri-Sig selection were that an alumnae group was active in Manhattan and that the national office promised to provide housing within two years.

A man sits at his desk in Manhattan, gathering publicity material, while across the state a high school senior sweats it out on the football field.

They are both working toward the same thing, the eighth annual Kansas Shrine Bowl at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in KSU Stadium.

The man behind the desk is Charlie McCrann, director of the Shrine Bowl of Kansas, and the football player is one of the 66 Kansas high school All-Stars chosen to play in this year's contest.

At a cost of $5 for adults and $2 for students, the public has a chance to see football played by some of the best football players to come out of Kansas high schools this year.

HOWEVER, A good football game is not the only reason the Kansas Shrine Bowl is put on, McCrann said.

"Last year the Kansas Shrine Bowl was ranked number one as far as raising money toward charity by the National Collegiate Athletic Association," he said.

All proceeds from the Shrine Bowl go to the 19 childrens' hospitals and three burn centers operated by the Shriners, he said. These hospitals, located throughout North America, operate on a budget of $65 million-all provided by the Shriners.

"Last year our contribution to the hospitals was $50,000 from the Kansas Shrine Bowl," McCrann said.

The young high school graduates chosen to play football for the benefit of these children come from all over the state, McCrann said.

FIVE STATE sports writers choose the players.

These writers are selected from eastern and western Kansas, he said, with U.S. Highway 81 as the dividing line.

Each year in December after the football season ends, the writers get together and select two teams of 30 players each from a mixture of schools classed 1A through 6A. The head coach, who is selected by the head coach from the previous year, chooses three additional players to make a total of 33 on each squad.

Three of Manhattan's own high school football standouts were chosen to play for the East team this year. They are Jim McAfee, Calvin Switzer and Scott Wentzel. Lew Lane, Manhattan High coach, is an assistant coach for the East team.

Shrine Bowl participants from the East squad who have signed letters of intent to play with K-State include: Randy Voelker, Linn; David Smith, Fredonia; Lonie Brock, Emporia; and Greg Strahm, Hiawatha.

The West squad also boasts some intended Wildcats. They are Wayne Loy, Lincoln; Todd Underwood, Colby; and Chad Smith, Wichita South.

THE PLAYERS have been preparing for Saturday's contest by participating in a twoweek training camp which began on Memorial Day. The East Squad trained at Ottawa University and the West squad trained at Fort Hays State University. After one week the team got together for a barbecue and a trip to St. Louis, Mo. to visit the Shrine Childrens' hospital there, McCrann

Appeal may prevent baseball strike

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS Some movement was reported Thursday in baseball's free agent compensation dispute, but the head of the players' union said it was still likely that the sport would be hit by a strike Friday.

In Washington, meanwhile, a National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) official said no decision would be made until Friday on appealing a federal judge's rejection of an injunction request which would have postponed any strike for a year. An appeal, he said, could delay the strike again.

Spokesmen for both sides in the dispute said the club owners had made a new offer on the issue of free-agent compensation, and negotiations at a New York hotel were recessed for five hours to allow the players to consider the plan.

RAY GREBEY, HEAD of the Player Relations Committee, the owners' bargaining unit, said management "advanced several ideas in areas the (Major League Players) Association has raised concern over.

But Marvin Miller, the head of the Players Association, said the changes proposed by management were "insignificant," and that a strike Friday was still "very likely."

Kenneth Moffett, the federal mediator assigned to the talks, said the fact that "new ideas are being expressed ... at this late hour is important," but added: "I don't see any breakthroughs as imminent. I characterize the situation as not very good at all."

MILLER ALSO SAID that the start of a strike could be delayed until just before the 2:30 p.m. EDT start of Friday's game in stationed a spy ship off the East Coast to study the first huge U.S. Trident missilefiring submarine when it begins sea trials next week, intelligence sources said Thursday.

Russian spy ship zeros in on Trident submarine test

The Navy has not yet announced the beginning of sea trials of the Ohio, the lead ship of the Trident class. However, the Russians obviously had means of learning about this from sources available to them.

Meanwhile, it was learned that the first of a new class of giant Soviet missile submarines, called Typhoon, started its sea trials early this week in the far north. U.S. intelligence sources decline to discuss methods used to monitor such Soviet developments.

The Trident class, biggest U.S. submarines ever built, displace 18,700 tons submerged and will carry 24 deep-striking nuclear missiles with multiple warheads in their launch tubes.

The Soviet Typhoon-class is even bigger, described by Navy intelligence as displacing 25,000 tons underwater. Each Typhoon sub, it is expected, will be able to launch at least 20 advanced missiles with powerful multiple nuclear warheads.

The appearance of the Soviet intelligencegathering ship in the Atlantic off Groton, Conn., where the Trident subs are being built, and the fresh information on the Typhoon's start of its sea trials, underscores the closeness with which the superpowers

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Soviets have watch each other's progress toward a new generation of sea-based strategic weapons likely to be critical in the weapons balance for the next quarter of a century.

Officials said the Soviet intelligencegathering ships could determine a variety of important performance information on the Trident after it leaves its berth at Groton probably next Wednesday. Among other things, such a spy ship could determine the Trident's speed, underwater sound characteristics and other key data, sources

The Ohio is more than two years behind schedule and Navy officials are hopeful it can be delivered by the builder by the end of October, although some officials are concerned it may be later than that. Seven other Trident subs are being built at the Groton yard of the General Dynamics Corp.'s Electric Boat Division.

U.S. intelligence specialists say that three additional Typhoon submarines are under construction in sheds at Severodvinsk in northern Russia. The first sub of that class left that port for its sea trials.

The Soviets customarily station intelligence-gathering ships off bases from which U.S. missile-firing submarines operate, such as Guam, Charleston, S.C., and Holy Loch, Scotland.

Naval intelligence has reported an expansion of Soviet spy ship operations in recent years. More than 50 are now operating worldwide.

Circulation plan may re-route campus traffic

Automobiles may be less welcome on the K-State campus if a new motor circulation plan being drawn up is approved by the Kansas Legislature.

Vaccines help to stifle parvo virus

Incidence of canine disease decreases

By JOHN GREEN Collegian Reporter

Your dog should be safer from the threat of canine parvovirus infection this summer, due largely to two new vaccines that have been approved for use by the biologics division of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"Parvovirus is a continual problem and the only thing available to combat it is vaccination," said Dr. Jacob Mosier, head of the Department of Surgery and Medicine in the College of Veterinary Medicine at K-State. "The vaccines are being improved, but they're still not as good as we'd like,"

The canine parvovirus (CPV) infection appeared rather suddenly in the summer of 1978 and spread rapidly, Mosier said. The effects of the outbreak continued to haunt the Manhattan canine population for the next two years.

However cases of the virus have been at low ebb the past several months, Mosier said.

"We've already seen a couple of cases (of CPV infection) this summer, but it is nothing like what we had last summer," Dr. W.J. a Manhattan veterinarian, said.

"WHETHER WE will have a problem like last year in August and September only time will tell," Mosier said.

Dogs infected by the highly contagious CPV usually experience "flu-like symptoms" which, according to Mosier, can be mistaken for other dog illnesses.

The virus affects dogs in two different ways. If parvovirus affects the intestine, the first symptoms are often depression and loss of appetite. Severe vomiting may also occur, followed in 6 to 24 hours by fever and diarrhea which may contain blood. The result is often dehydration and death, Mosier said.

The second form of CPV infection is inflammation of the heart muscle. This occurs in puppies less than four months old and damage to the heart may result in heart failure or other complications. Both syndromes are caused by the same virus, which has an affinity for those organs of the body which are undergoing rapid growth, he said.

"THE PRESENCE of these symptoms doesn't necessarily mean the dog has parvo," Mosier said. "Many dogs don't show any sign of illness and may recover quickly. Only about 20 percent are serious cases and in dogs over 16 weeks the mortality rate is very low."

As the name suggests, canine parvovirus infection affects only dogs. But it was a disease affecting cats that lead to the discovery of a vaccine for dogs.

In working to develop a vaccine to combat the disease, researchers and veterinarians said they saw the similarities between a feline virus (panleukopenia) and CPV, and used the vaccine for the feline virus to treat dogs affected by CPV, he said. The feline vaccines, though, are of questionable value for a long-term solution to the problem, Mosier added.

Vaccines formed by growing virus of canine origin on canine tissue are now being used. These are of two types, "inactivated", and "modified," he said.

The inactivated virus is made by growing the parvovirus on tissue and then inactivating it with Formaline or some other chemical. Modified vaccine is also formed by growing the virus on tissue. But then it is intenuated (strengthened) by being passed through cultures 40 to 50 times, Mosier said.

LIVE (MODIFIED) vaccines of canine origin should be capable of generating higher levels of protection over longer periods of time. The inactivated vaccine has been on the market longer and is more popularly used at present, he

Although pet owners need not be unduly alarmed, for best protection the dog should be vaccinated once a year, he said.

"I would like to stress that dogs most likely to contract or become seriously ill from the virus are puppies six to 14 weeks old and dogs in groups under stress conditions, such as in shows," Mosier said.

CPV is difficult to control, other than by vaccination, because it is so easily spread, he said.

It is transmitted through contact with the feces of an infected dog. The virus can be carried on the dog's hair and feet, as well as in contaminated cages, shoes, or other objects. Because of this, kennels and exercise areas should be cleaned thoroughly, Mosier

IN MANHATTAN, Bracken said most people are aware of the available CPV booster shot, and have had them administered to their dogs.

"We haven't vaccinated the entire dog population-yet," he said. "We're working on it."

The fact that local dog kennels now require dogs boarded there to have the booster has helped cut down on incidents of CPV. Bracken said, but addded there is still a need to have dogs vaccinated.

"There are still people out there who have never even heard of Summer school enrollment up from last year

A shrinking number of available summer jobs is one reason for an increase in summer school enrollment, according to Don Foster, registrar. Enrollment at K-State this summer has hit 4,352, compared to a figure of 3,982 last

The 13 percent increase does not reflect the 2,000 students estimated to enroll during the summer for short courses and off-campus courses. The final enrollment figure won't be known until late July.

Another factor for the increase, Foster said, is that students may want to start college early, adjusting to the campus in a more relaxed atmosphere.

The enrollment figure for the number of undergraduate adult students, 25 years and older, won't be available for another week.

The commodities:

The futures market requires knowledge to profit; farmers take exchange risks with their products

By DEE HOFFMAN Collegian Reporter

Legalized gambling in Manhattan.

While not a criminal offense, this game is what some consider the commodity futures market to be.

"Commodity futures is gambling only if a person treats it as such," Jim Buchanan, local commodity broker and branch manager of Heinhold Commodities Inc.,

In explaining how the commodity market works, Buchanan drew upon several "reallife" examples.

Assume a farmer is raising wheat and will produce 10,000 bushels, he said. In October when he plants the wheat he can calculate his costs of production and determine the price he must receive to break even. The farmer can then sell futures contracts approximately equal to the amount of wheat he

A "contract" is a commodity term defining the volume of a product.

"He will try to sell the contracts at a price below what he sold them for. If prices are high at harvest, he buys back the contract and sells his wheat for a higher price on the cash market.

If the futures and cash prices move dollarfor-dollar, you make on one what you lost on the other," Buchanan said.

CALVIN DRAKE, vice president of the livestock meat industry council, said he believes the use of the commodity futures mers to insure a profit.

"Commodity futures is the only way we can have any idea what the price will be as far ahead as a year in advance. By using the futures market you can hedge in a profit, thus reducing the risks of loss you take when you place a pen of steers on feed.

"The risk is that we have no control of the market when stock is waiting to sell. By hedging you are forwarding the contract. Anyway you look at it, you are removing the risk," Drake said.

So who takes the risk, or the gamble on that pen of steers? This is where the speculator plays an important role in the market, he said.

The speculator invests his money in the market-in hopes that the market will move in his favor. His objective is to buy contracts low and sell them high-or sell high and buy the contracts back at a lower price in order to make a profit.

This is where the risks or gamble comes

"A hedger in the market has his product in his right hand and his futures contract in his left hand. One or the other will result in a profit. The speculator has only his futures contract to deal with. If the market moves against him, he has nothing to balance his futures position. He loses money," Drake

DRAKE SAID he has speculated as well as hedged, and found that speculating in the market may soon be the only way for far- market has not been profitable because he did not fully understand the commodities and read the market wrong.

Buchanan said he agreed that the speculator takes on the risks the farmer does not want, but said he believes the speculator has access to enough market information to minimize these risks.

For that reason, speculation is not a gamble, Buchanan said.

To further decrease "the gamble," he cited daily markets, supply and demand factors, professional market report services, brokerage firms and people in the industry as good sources of market information.

This helps the marketer make decisions, according to Buchanan.

"He doesn't need to rely on the odds as a gambler does," he said.

THE MARKET ALSO limits risks through the use of limit moves. On one wheat contract (5,000 bushels), the price is limited to a 25 cent move up or down per day, per bushel. This computes to $1250 per contract on the Kansas City Board of Trade.

"The speculator has a chance to minimize his losses by getting out of the market before the price drops further," Buchanan said. "If the speculator places the order, leaves town for two weeks, and doesn't pay attention to the market, then he is gambling.

"A speculator can also limit his losses by buying only one contract," Drake said, "This limits his losses to the contract amount for that day."

Drake said three things affect whether a person makes or loses money in the futures market: greed, self control and discipline.

Most people are just not satisfied to hedge in a sure profit and make money little at a time, he said.

When people are making money they tend to buy more contracts-increasing their chance to make money, but also increasing the risks of losing, Drake said. For example, cattle contracts are restricted to $4 move, up or down the price, each day. This limits each contract to a possible $600 loss or profit, Drake said. Five contracts may lose $3,000 in just one day.

"PEOPLE TEND to get greedy, let their emotions take over and end up losing a lot of money," Drake said.

"It is true that more people lose than win in the futures market," Buchanan said, "but someone has to win and the winners usually know their risks and eliminate as many as possible. They treat the futures market as a business tool and an investment vehicle to minimize losses and insure a profit."

Legislature. Yet "there have been no capital improvement funds expended for streets or walks," he said.

In order to receive capital funding, plan specifications and expenses still need to be worked out.

Because of internal campus traffic, there are several existing problems, Cool said.

For example, during breaks between classes, there are often conflicts between vehicles, pedestrians and bicyclists. Cool said he believes that the plan "would separate a lot of conflict."

He added that instructors who have classes in rooms close to a busy street have complained about the noise of heavy traffic disrupting class.

County studies sites for new senior center made as early as June 23, according to Frank Bieberly, chairman of the Riley County Council on Aging.

Currently, three locations are being considered for the center. The sites are at Third and Colorado, Third and Leavenworth, and the Jehovah's Witness Temple at 401 Vattier. The temple is currently for sale, according to Bieberly.

The Third and Leavenworth site is favored right now, County Commissioner Rosalys Rieger said. She made the comment after a meeting between the commissioners and the Senior Center Steering Committee June 11.

The site is the favorite for several reasons, Rieger said. An important advantage is its proximity to Apartment Towers, a housing complex for senior citizens.

If the site was selected, the new center could hook up to the existing electrical outlets-as well as other utilities-at Apartment Towers. The new facility could also be constructed so it attached to the apartment building, saving on transportation costs, Rieger said.

The City of Manhattan owns the property and, according to Rieger, the county believes they can use the home-rule law to help the council.

"Under the home-rule law, the Legislature gave counties a broader power...to 'home-rule' themselves from any law not uniform throughout the state, Rieger said. "We (county commissioners) were going to advance some money to the Riley County Council on Aging...which was to come from the county building fund."

Rieger said the council on aging allocation is not the highest on the county's priority list. She said it was to receive attention only

A decision on the location for the proposed after the improvement and expansion of Riley County Senior Citizen Center could be county offices. However the county still wanted to help.

"This building fund could go toward (office) remodeling or a new (senior center) building. We want to home-rule that we could lend them (council on aging) the money that they could replace within the next few years," she said.

The council on aging has already received a $30,000 grant and both the city and council have said they will contribute to the center, Rieger said.

"We believe we can lend building fund money for the purchase of a new building to serve as the senior center," Rieger said.

The county has the authorization to assess a mill levy in the 1982 budget for the council on aging, she said. If the budget is approved, the council can pay back the money over a three year period with the mill levy money allocated in the budget, Rieger said.

Tornadoes injure 76 in Minnesota

ST. PAUL, Minnesota— Tornadoes chewed through the Minneapolis-St. Paul suburb of Roseville Sunday afternoon, causing "extensive" damage as they smashed windows, ripped up trees and crushed cars. At least 76 people were injured, two of them critically, officials said.

There were no immediate reports of fatalities.

A few miles to the southwest, in southern Minneapolis, officials said a tornado touchdown injured at least eight people as it uprooted trees, sometimes smashing them into automobiles, and downed power lines.

Iranian parliament calls for debate

BEIRUT, Lebanon— A majority of Iran's Parliament called Sunday for a debate on President Abolhassan BaniSadr's competence for "repeated violations of the constitution," Tehran Radio reported. The move is believed aimed at stripping Bani-Sadr of his remaining power and perhaps putting him on trial.

A spokesman for revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said Khomeini would have the final say on the future of the western-educated president, who has accused clergy led Islamic Republican Party of staging a "step-by-step" coup to depose and kill him.

The debate petition referred to "the many repeated violations of the constitution and of the legal duties of the president by BaniSadr, especially his behavior in the past few months."

Fire ravages downtown Augusta

AUGUSTA— A fire early Sunday ravaged a downtown city block and destroyed an office building before firefighters brought the blaze under control.

More than 100 firefighters from 12 area departments fought the blaze for nearly six hours. No serious injuries were reported, but about a dozen firefighters were treated for bruises and smoke inhalation.

Officials estimated property losses in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Augusta is 20 miles east of Wichita.

"We've had some pretty major fires here, but this was one of the most serious," said Steve Shaffer, director of the Department of Public Safety. "The wind and smoke from the fire were horrendous. We were really fortunate that no one was seriously injured."

Shaffer said the fire may have started in an oil field equipment supply store, one of four businesses housed in the building. He said the blaze then spread into a plumbing shop, a construction company and an office of the El Dorado Times.

The fire began about 5 a.m. and engulfed the building, which took up most of the block.

Nearby houses were singed by the flames, Shaffer said, adding that several may have burned if the wind had changed direction.

Bombing batters U.S. mediation

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia— U.S. envoy Philip Habib, his Mideast mediation mission battered by Israel's raid on an Iraqi nuclear reactor, met with Saudi Arabia's foreign minister Sunday in the Saudi port city of Jidda.

The Saudi diplomat said in a television interview the raid had thrown "everything into turmoil."

Syria went further. It said Habib's effectiveness as a go between in the Syrian-Israeli crisis over the placement of Syrian anti-aircraft missiles in eastern Lebanon had ended.

"America is never to be treated as a fair referee," declared the Syrian government newspaper Tishrin. "America is depending heavily upon Israel to subjugate the Arab world."

Polish drivers line up at pumps

WARSAW, Poland— Rumors of a national gasoline shortage have sent Polish drivers lining up at gas pumps in droves, creating the longest such lines ever seen in this communist country and forcing officials to begin an odd-even rationing system.

The government insists there is no shortage. But that has not deterred Polish drivers, panicked, according to one account, by a report of a local supply problem in the southern city of Katowice.

Mile-long lines of hundreds of cars snaked away from the pumps, with motorists waiting from two hours to a whole day to fill their tanks. Some have begun spending nights on the gas lines, sleeping in their cars so they will get a shot at an early-morning fill-up.

The gasoline rush is symbolic of the economic difficulties that abound in Poland after months of labor unrest. The slightest rumor that something may be rationed sparks hoarding of everything from flour to vodka.

Endangered legal services

Since the 1963 U.S. Supreme Court case of Gideon v. Wainwright, indigent people who are charged with felonies have had the right to legal assistance at the government's expense. That right was later extended to include assistance for people charged with serious misdemeanors.

Last week the Supreme Court ruled that indigent parents have no right to this same type of legal assistance when the state moves to gain custody of their children. The majority opinion, in part, said the right to state-paid counsel only extended to those who were in danger of losing their personal liberty.

Although laws in 33 states do provide for legal counsel for parents in termination hearings (according to Newsweek), the idea that a parent has no right to legal representation in this most serious of hearings is incredible.

Although the decision is not directly linked to a desire by the Reagan administration to eliminate the Legal Services Corporation (LSC), the two seem to indicate the conservative feeling toward legal help for those otherwise unable to afford it. Reagan would prefer the states decide whether or not to finance legal services for the poor out of federal block grants. The LSC is budgeted for $321 million.

The question of maintaining these services is as much ideological as economic. A basic premise behind the service is that poor people have the same right to legal representation as do those better able to afford the services of a lawyer.

The argument that middle to lower-middle class people can't afford legal representation would make more sense as an argument to expand the program than as an argument to kill it. Legitimate grievances against governmental units, governmental officials and private concerns that go unredressed are certainly as aggravating to the middle-income person as to the poor.

Opponents of the LSC claim its lawyers are too interested in promoting social change. Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) is quoted in the Wall Street Journal as saying, "The Legal Services Corp. has festered into a gaggle of political activists run amok."

Well good. Someone must protect the rights of citizens. One could assume Sen. Helms is including in the "gaggle" the lawyers who discovered the legal right of several Indian tribes to a large amount of land in Maine and the lawyers who filed suit to require the administration of a public housing complex in Georgia to give notice before changing the locks on the doors of those late in paying their rent.

America—at its best—is not a place with "liberty and justice" for only those who can afford private legal services.

You might ask, "Where does all this money go?"

Well, it costs a great deal of money to bring you these inspirational messages on this network. We have bills to pay.

Not only must we pay for our regular programming, but we must also pay for that month long series of shows that we recently did in the lovely state of Hawaii.

LTN, Inc. has also become the proud owner of a new 125 foot yacht, Ark II. We intend to take a number of prayer cruises in the Caribbean, where we will be entertained by the LTN singers.

Well, now that we've got the important business out of the way, it's time to get to our guests.

Our first guest is...just a minute, my director is signalling me.

Unfortunately, ladies and gentleman, it seems as though we've run out of time today maybe we'll get those people on at a later

Let's close this show with the orchestra and singers doing the LTN theme song.

Elizabeth McCullough, assistant professor of textile science, holds garments used by industrial workers to protect themselves from heat. She is doing research to decrease the heat retentive qualities in work clothes.

A first in 13 years— UFM charges fees

For the first time in its l3-year history, University For Man (UFM) is using class fees and profits from catalog advertising to help offset money lost from federal grants.

Because of the reduction of federal funds in the areas of arts, humanities, and social services, UFM is facing increased competition for those funds, Julie Coates, UFM campus community director, said.

Although the UFM program is receiving an insufficient amount of federal funds to meet its needs, Coates said that they would probably not ask local supporting organizations for more money.

"Local supporting agencies have their own financial problems to deal with...especially with the recent cutbacks. Everybody's costs have gone up," she said.

Coates said the two major supporting agencies for UFM are the United Way and K-State's Student Governing Association (SGA).

The decision to charge class fees and to sell advertising was made by the UFM Board of Directors in April. The class fees range from $1 to $10, depending on the type of class and the materials needed. There are, however, a few classes that do not charge a fee.

"The system of setting fees for a class is determined by the length of the class and the number of hours it is held," Coates said. "If someone is unable to pay the class fee, we would negotiate with them on a case-by-case basis, or have them work as a volunteer and receive (class) credit."

A $2 per person registration fee is also being charged to some participants. Full-time K-State students, however, will not have to pay the fee because the SGA already allocates money for student participation.

UFM is also considering a new name which would serve the organization better, according to Coates. She said a new professional name would help increase the chances of getting funds.

Professor finishes garment project to improve industrial work clothes

Heat stress is often a problem for workers in hot industrial environments. Often this is due to the type of clothing they wear on the job.

Some work clothes need to be fire and chemical resistant, making them heavy and cumbersome to wear.

According to Elizabeth McCullogh, assistant professor of textile science at K—State, these garments don't allow much body heat to escape. This can result in heat stress, and in extreme cases, heat stroke.

She is working on developing garments that would allow more heat to escape.

"After the data are complied, the researchers will be equipped with a complex mathematical model that will determine what combination of environmental, clothing, and human physiological factors would result in heat stress problems," she said.

FREDERICK ROHLES, director of the Institute for Environmental Research, and Stephan Konz, professor of industrial engineering, are co-workers with McCullough on the project. Both Rohles and Konz were responsible for three phases of the project which involved testing various industrial garments on humans, she said.

To begin her part of the study, McCullough went to several protective clothing manufacturers to find out what kinds of garments men were wearing on the job. She collected samples of representative garments and then tested them using a copper mannequin named Sam, she said.

Sam is made of anodized copper with heating wires inside that keep his skin about 92 degrees Fahrenheit, just like human skin.

First McCullough measured the thermal insulation or "clo" value of individual garments and representative ensembles, she said. Then Sam was dressed in a thin cotton knit shirt, covering his whole body—except his eyes—under the industrial work clothes. This cotton skin was saturated with distilled water to stimulate sweating, said McCullough. A permeability index was then calculated.

According to McCullough, the index measures how much moisture (sweat) a clothing system will allow to evaporate into the air.

McCullough said she found that some protective items, such as those treated with an aluminized coating, restricted the amount of sweat that could escape into the air. She suggested many alternatives to decreasing the industrial worker's susceptibility to heat stress, including using water cooled vests and a flexible work-rest ratio.

THIS RATIO would vary as to the worker's time spent resting and time in actual work, she said.

The results of this project should provide industries with data that can be used "as a deciding factor in determining who works at specific jobs, how long they work, and what they wear," McCullough said.

The project, which is sponsored by the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health, should be completed this fall, she said.

In August, McCullough will travel to Stockholm, Sweden to present her results at the International Conference on Protective Clothing Systems.

West defeats East in Bowl; precise passing sparks victory

New Year's Day-there's nothing quite like it. There's the best of college football on television. There are fancy Bowl parades in showy, warm cities. And above all else, there is a soaring level of fun and excitement.

Although last Saturday wasn't the first of the year, Manhattan, Ks. is not even near sunny Pasadena, and the players on the field weren't collegiate, the annual Kansas Shrine Bowl allowed Manhattan to have its own New Year's Day fling. In June-Little Apple style.

The very best in prep football came from across the state and gathered at KSU Stadium, Saturday afternoon, to raise money for 19 Shriner's hospitals and three burn centers. And play football was exactly what they did.

The West squad, lead by the passing arm of Wichita Southeast quarterback Jeff Long, scored in the first quarter when James Witherspoon, an all-stater from Liberal, scampered around end for a 56-yard touchdown run. The West team never looked back.

THE FINAL score was 35-7, but the game wasn't the rout that the score may indicate.

East's defense played stubborn, heads-up football for 31/2 quarters. They kept West in check. At the half the score was 14-7, East capping a first quarter, 60-yard scoring drive with a three-yard plunge up the middle. Their defense remained tough; the offense never scored again.

Though the talented East squad showed they could move the ball, they lacked the cohesiveness the West team had. Nine fumbles, four of them lost, and two interceptions dashed whatever hopes the East offense had.

Third quarter was carrying on in much the same manner when something happened. In later interviews, Long said it was just that the West squad wanted to win more than the East. Maybe so.

At any rate the West team poured it on for three quick touchdowns in the third to put the game on ice.

WITH LONG'S passing, and a strong wind that helped keep the East team deep in their own territory, West managed to set itself up for scoring drives of 52, 21 and 25 yards.

Long was voted the game's most valuable offensive player. He completed six of 11 passes for 118-yards and one touchdown. He also scrambled for 42 yards on 10 carries.

A future Wildcat, Wayne Loy of Lincoln, garnered most valuable defensive awards. He had six tackles, batted down a pass and recovered a fumble.

The key to the game was conditioning, according to Witherspoon.
"They were bigger than we were, so it was our plan to sweep and run them all over the field. Coach, (John Kendall of Liberal) told us if we were going to win this game we would have to be in better shape. I think the heat may have hurt their big guys," Witherspoon said in an interview with the Topeka Capital-Journal.

It was a muggy 84 degrees Saturday, but not unbearable for the crowd of 10,000 that showed up for the game. And as East coach Ron Hill said, "There really isn't a loser in this

That goes for the players, the crowd, the parade watchers and especially for the children who will benefit from the Shriner's efforts.

Fiber comparison may help case

ATLANTA (AP)—Crime lab technicians are considering some "far out" tests to further compare fibers found on the bodies of young blacks with fibers taken from the home and car of a man who was questioned in the case, a lab official said Sunday.

Most of the physical evidence against the man consists of fibers collected June 3, when he was questioned for 12 hours by the FBI, investigators say.

But while some of the fibers show "promising" similarities to those found on some victims, law enforcement sources say the matchups could be discredited by a sharp defense attorney.

Crime lab technicians are considering a variety of additional tests which would help establish whether the fibers are identical, an investigator said.

Until now, technicians have used microscopic examination of fibers and hairs. A report on fibers comparisons was submitted Tuesday to the police task force investigating the 28 slayings over the past two years.

The man questioned has said the FBI told him he was a "prime suspect" in some of the killings.

acknowledged Sunday that several tests rarely used by the lab are being considered.

"There's going to be a lot of pressure on the physical evidence in this case if it ever goes to trial," Howard said. "When we finish looking at the stuff we have now, we'll decide what techniques we might use. Some of them are pretty far out."

Howard said technicians have discussed burning some of the fibers to determine whether they have the same gaseous properties.

Also under consideration are mass spectrometry, in which a sample is vaporized to permit detailed analysis of its constituent elements. Another test would make the elements in the fibers radioactive to permit comparison of their properties, Howard said.

He said technicians will decide whether to undertake any of the tests within the next two months.

Police interest in the man first developed during the predawn hours of May 22, when authorities watching a bridge on the Chattahoochee River west of Atlanta, where several of the victms had been found, heard

State Crime Lab Director Larry Howard a splash. The man was stopped on Interstate 285 near the bridge and was questioned, but denied throwing anything in the river.

Investigators have said the man was placed under surveillance shortly after that incident.

On May 24, the strangled body of the latest victim, 27-year-old Nathaniel Cater, was found in the Chattahoochee not far from the bridge. A medical examiner ruled that Cater had been dead for at least one or two days but probably less than one week.

The New York Times reported Sunday that officers who searched the man's car on the night of May 22 did not make a list of the vehicle's contents. There were also conflicting reports among the officers about what they found, the Times said.

Sunset Zoo to have new curator

The curator's position at Sunset Zoo, vacant since early March, should be filled by July 1, according to Bruce McCallum, director of public works for Manhattan.

Jerry Dishman, Manhattan Parks Department supervisor, has been acting curator at the zoo since Thomas Demry, former curator, left for personal reasons.

for the job, said he received 45 inquiries about the position.

"I would say we are right about on time in our plans to fill the position," McCallum said. "We advertised nationally, and it takes about 45 days before you start getting applications."

The advertisements ran in the American Association Zoological Parks and Aquariums Newsletter, which the zoo joined last year.

The list of applicants was recently narrowed to six, according to McCallum.

"We should start making offers next week," he said.

Two of the six are working at the zoo now: Sandy Caswell, head zookeeper; and Ann Collins, a former zookeeper and the current animal shelter attendent.

"We waited about 60 days after ad-McCallum, who is considering applicants vertising before we started interviewing," McCallum said. "A significant portion of the applicants are from out of town.

> "Minimum qualifications for the job include three or four years experience with emphasis on supervisory skills. The experience could be in working with a veterinarian, at an animal shelter, or at another zoo. Education in biology, zoology, animal husbandry or some related field will receive considerable weight in the decision, but experience will be the deciding factor,"
